Exactly What the War Has Done to Food Prices Here and Why

General Manager of Austin, Nichols & Co., New York, Wholesale Grocers, Supplies Close and Careful Picture of What Products Have Been Affected and the Reason and Extent. Denies that Grocers as a Class are Holding for Further Advances or Have Extorted Undue Profits.

Practically all of Europe is engaged in war, which means that goods from Germany, England, France, Servia, Russia and other countries are unobtainable—that in itself would account for the advance on items originating from the above named countries or any other place where war exists and where the goods are not obtainable.

In many lines of goods this company and many others have goods bought, contracted for long before any war news was received, but for different reasons the goods are not obtainable from the fact that many shippers want the gold, many steamships have been withdrawn—and on account of the extra hazardous risk when they do sail, they carry a war insurance that is practically prohibitive—so that the advance in exchange and other items has advanced the price on goods, even though these goods were bought before the war was declared. The real cost of this merchandise is not the cost at the point of origin, but the cost to the merchant on the arrival of the goods, and if the war insurance, extra exchange, etc., were added to the original cost of these goods, when they arrive, would show an increased cost delivered to the merchant here of 25 per cent. or over. That in itself seems like a terrific advance, but just where does the wholesale grocer or the retail grocer derive any benefit from this? But he is advancing his price without any additional profit, as the advance has been paid by him as described above. In most cases the wholesale grocer or retail grocer, even though he is forced to pay this advance, does not feel that he can consistently ask the full advance; and, as a matter of fact, they do not ask it, but are doing business on a closer margin of profit on these items than ever before, knowing well that their customer, the consumer, would quite naturally feel surprised if the full advance was added to the cost of these goods.

The press throughout the country has advertised the situation quite thoroughly—in some cases not putting the situation fairly before the public—creating a feeling with a large number that it would be a good time to buy this or that or something else. The result of all this publicity has been such that a demand was created on many lines of goods that was abnormal. Parties who, no doubt, thought of buying a barrel of flour, bought a barrel or two. The same applied to sugar and many other items. This constant agitation, in the opinion of the writer, is simply getting the people worked up on the situation, and without having all the facts, they quite naturally feel that if they do not buy at once they will have to pay more money a little later on.

If the American people would follow the advice of our worthy President, Mr. Wilson, "Keep cool and do not get excited," I feel very confident that foodstuffs would ease off, especially on domestic products.

To accuse the wholesaler or the retailer by direct accusations or by any innuendoes that they are robbers is manifestly unfair, and not, in my opinion, what our good President intended when he requested everybody to keep cool and not get excited.

Now, there are many items in the grocery line that are commanding a higher price to-day than they did before the war started on the other side, and this price must of necessity advance with existing conditions. As explained, the war risk, along with the advance in exchange, interest, etc., covers this advance, and the wholesaler or retailer does not reap any part of this advance. I refer now to lines of goods that originate in the countries that are at war.

Sugar has advanced, flour has advanced, and many other items have advanced. We will take up the item of flour as I understand it.

At the time the advance in flour took place we, like other houses, firmly believed that the market on flour would decline and still further owing to the prospects of a normal crop of wheat, and in consequence we were carrying light stocks and practically no contracts whatever. On many of the lines of brands of flour handled in Greater New York we own from fifty to seventy-five barrels of each at a cost of about $5.36 per barrel. To-day these same brands would cost us about $6.40. The principal cause of advance, as I understand it, was that grain dealers at the start believed that Europe would be an enormous buyer of wheat. In fact, their agents in this country all bought considerable wheat just before the war, and this started the market up gradually. The newspapers gave a great deal of notoriety to the fact that we would have terrific prices in case of a general war in Europe, and it developed that the housewife who had probably not baked bread in five years bought a barrel of flour in anticipation of high prices. The condition was general throughout the entire country, and the demand for flour was greater than the mills had experienced in years.

It is well to remember that bread flour is practically made from spring wheat, and new spring wheat even to-day is not ready for the market, and at this time of the year old spring wheat is always sold at a premium on account of its scarcity.

The advance in prices is only natural and not altogether abnormal. The flour trade do not consider prices of to-day high, for it must also be remembered that before this advance started we had been working on a price that was lower than that we had had for years. Glancing over statistics covering a period of ten years, they will show that to-day's prices are about equal to the average. The advance on flour has also affected other items in the farinaceous line, like barley, beans, peas, cornmeal and hominy.

Lentils.—These were selling at 2½ cents per pound for old goods prior to the war. It now being impossible to secure any more of these goods from Europe and the stock in this market being practically nil, the goods are commanding practically 10 cents or 11 cents per pound, as no one has any to amount to anything.

Rolled Oats and Oatmeal.—Before war was declared the price was about $4.50; to-day they are worth $5.25. This was not brought about through the war, but a natural consequence for this time of the year. Records will show that oats always advanced at this time of the year from $1 to $1.50 per barrel.

Seeds.—Practically all the edible seeds are imported from Europe and with a prospect of no more goods coming to this country for an indefinite period and very little stock in this market, there has been an advance on these goods. The same remarks will apply to tapioca, a product of the East Indies, and potato flour, a product of Canada.

Butter, Cheese and Eggs.—The present higher range in prices prevailing in butter, cheese and eggs are primarily, in fact, I might say entirely, due to shortage in the production. The trade at large has been rather slow in fully realizing this, and while the general tendency of this market has been to keep the market down, the steadily decreasing supplies, as shown by statistics, nevertheless, has steadily forced prices upward. Ever since the beginning of July the history of the market has been of gradually increasing prices, and while we have had temporary reactions in certain periods of unchanged prices the general tendency has been upward. On July 1st, for instance, butter, cheese and eggs ranged as follows:—

| | Butter | Cheese | West eggs |
|---------------|--------|--------|--------------|
| July 1 | 27½ | 14½ | 25 |
| July 7 | 27 | 14½ | 25 |
| July 9 | 27¼ | 14½ | 25 |
| July 10 | 27½ | 12½ | 25 |
| July 13 | 28 | 14¾ | 26 |
| July 14 | 28¼ | 15 | 26 |
| July 15 | 28 | 15 | 26 |
| July 17 | 28½ | 15 | 26 |
| July 23 | 29 | 15 | 26 |
| July 29 | 29½ | 15 | 27 |
| July 31 | 30 | 15 | 28 |
| August 1 ... | 30 | 15¼ | 28 |
| August 5 ... | 30 | 15¾ | 28 |
| August 6 ... | 29 | 15¾ | 28 |
| August 7 ... | 29 | 15½ | 28 |
| August 10 ... | 29½ | 15¾ | 28 |
| August 11 ... | 30 | 16 | 29 |
| August 12 ... | 30½ | 16 | 29 |
| August 14 ... | 30½ | 16¼ | 29 |
| August 17 ... | 31 | 16 | 29 |
| August 18 ... | 31 | 16½ | 29 |

The country's holdings in warehouses this year, as per monthly report from the forty-six associated warehouses, August 1st, show a shortage in the holdings of butter of 4,110,000 pounds, and a shortage in eggs of 48,800 cases, as per report given below:—

The grocer who wants to serve and please the right class of trade must carry in stock the articles that are widely known and believed in because of quality and purity.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

and

have the confidence of consumers everywhere because of their purity, quality, wholesomeness and years of liberal advertising.

To sell these pure, grape cream of tartar powders, instead of cheap powders containing alum and such chemicals, shows your customers that you believe in pure foods, makes them trust you and rely on the purity and quality of your entire stock.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER and DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER not only please consumers best, but they also pay you more profit in real money pound for pound, and year for year, than any others you can sell.

These powders sell fastest and easiest because of quality backed by advertising; don't forget that the man who offers you a baking powder that is not advertised and tells you there is more profit in it is asking YOU to DO THE ADVERTISING by recommending it to your customers. Why should you do that and risk complaints when you can sell PURE baking powder so easily?

It is natural for prices on butter, these and eggs to advance at this time in the year, so there is nothing unusual in the present situation, except that the advances have come a little bit earlier and steadier, due to natural causes and entirely governed by the law of supply and demand. Whether the following months will bring an increased proportion is problematical, but indications are that the shortage will further increase than diminish.

Items like currants, originating in Greece, dates from Persia, citron in Italy, Sultana raisins from Smyrna, shelled almonds from Sicily, filberts from Sicily and walnuts from France have all advanced. These advances are about as a rule by the fact that spot stocks are always very low at this season of the year, good merchants generally running their stocks as closely as possible in anticipation of new crop which comes in the fall, at which time any goods we might have on hand usually show a very handsome loss.

The climatic conditions in this country are such that no good merchant wants to carry over any old goods in any lines. Light stocks, together with no immediate prospects of obtaining further supplies, is directly responsible for the advance on the above goods.

Rice.—Shipments of foreign rice having stopped entirely and this market carrying very light stocks, this article has advanced. New crop goods are now arriving and this may help matters.

Tea.—On account of the stopping of transportation and letters of credit, and steamships afloat that had tea on them captured, stocks in this market held by importers being light, tea of certain grades has advanced.

Norway mackerel has advanced on account of the war in Europe, the fishermen being unable to go out and catch these fish, which are caught in the North Sea where naval battles are reported. Spot stocks of Norway mackerel are practically cleaned up.

Condensed milk from abroad has advanced about 10 per cent. The war risks, interest and exchange rate and the advance in sugar, explain the advance.

Sardines.—Foreign countries having prohibited the exportation of food supplies, the French factories have been closed on account of the workmen being compelled to go to war. No fish have been coming in for some time and shipments afloat were detained from transshipment in London. The rate of exchange advancing almost 20 per cent. over night and the war risk all helped to make up the advance. Stocks are very low in this country on account of the poor fishing for the past six months. Sardines have advanced and no doubt will advance further.

Mushrooms and French vegetables, like French peas, etc., have advanced for the same reason.

Any English products that are sold in this market at a delivered price have been advanced from 10 to 25 per cent. by the manufacturers.

The governments in many countries have prohibited the exportation of many food products and this will cause items originating in these countries to advance further.

Now, what I would like to make plain is that any increased cost added on to any of these goods can be traced directly to the high rate of exchange and extra war risk, etc., and an advance is not caused by speculation from the fact that the goods in many lines are not obtainable, and if they are the party importing them must pay this increased cost. Again I say that it is manifestly unfair to charge the grocers with taking any part in these advances.

Take items like cheese that the different papers have noted. Swiss cheese formerly cost about 22 cents; it would cost to-day 35 cents if obtainable. Roquefort formerly cost about 27½ cents, and would cost about 40 cents to-day if obtainable, and so on through the line of imported cheese.

Spices like pepper and cloves have advanced from 25 to 40 per cent. This advance is on account of suspended banking facilities, war risk, scarcity of stocks, insurance, and high rate of exchange.

Cream of tartar has advanced practically over 100 per cent. on account of the uncertainty of getting the raw material (argols) from France and Germany, the principal source of supply. These goods can only be bought from one or two concerns in this country, and if the wholesale grocer wants cream of tartar he must pay the price that is asked, and that price is no doubt based upon the supply and demand and not from speculative causes.

Mustard has advanced about 50 per cent. Mustard seed comes principally from Germany and Austria, and some from Italy. It is not likely that much if any will be shipped from the first two countries. High rates of exchange and impaired banking facilities have made Italian goods very high.

Hungarian paprika has advanced about 100 per cent., caused by lack of information regarding the 1914 crop. Austria-Hungary being at war the harvesting of the crop is doubtful, as more staple products are receiving the attention of the peasants.

Olives have advanced about 20 per cent. Seville sellers will not ship except for spot cash and it has not been possible to send money to Spain. The banks through whom bills were drawn against shipments which left about August 1st insist that receivers insure against war risk at from 5 to 10 per cent. The market would have advanced anyway as there will be but very small if any crop harvested this year.

Sugar.—The refiners offered sugar on May 26th at 4.20; June 12th, 4.30; July 13th, 4.40, except one at 4.30; July 14th, 4.40; July 28th, 4.25; July 30th, 4.40; August 3d, one 4.50, others 4.40; August 4th, one 4.60, others 4.40, one 4.50; August 5th, two 4.50, three 5 cents; August 6th, three 5.25, one withdrawing price, American, 4.50; August 7th, two 5 cents, others 5.50; August 10th, one 5.50, others 6 cents; August 11th, two 6 cents, others 6.50; August 12th, two 6.50, others 7 cents; August 13th, one 6.75, one 7 cents, others 7.50; August 14th, all 7.50. Later the market fluctuated around 7 to 7.25 and 7.50 again.

The cause for this advance is no doubt fully familiar. Raw sugars were sold at 6.52 cents. Foreign countries were in this market buying raw sugars. The refiners here were forced to pay the price for raw sugars or go without it. The papers note that some refiners are still delivering sugar sold at 4.40 cents. This is no doubt a fact, as many wholesalers are also in the same position. Sugar was sold ahead on contract and the refiner must make good on his contracts and so must the jobber and the retailer.

As for great scarcity of food growing in this country I do not believe such a thing is possible. We will offer, and do offer, several million dollars' worth of merchandise at no advance whatever. They speak of the rapid advance in canned goods and all that sort of thing. I shall be very glad to receive an order for any part of a million cases of canned goods at no advance. This company being a strictly wholesale and jobbing concern, we must keep with the market, otherwise it would be impossible for us to market our merchandise. If the markets advance we must advance with the markets; if the markets decline we must promptly reduce our prices.

I could probably mention 200 to 300 items in our line that show an advance, and I could probably mention 10,000 to 12,000 other items that show no advance, and I repeat the advice of our worthy President, "Keep cool and do not get excited," and if this is followed there will be no great scarcity of food supplies in this country. If we cannot furnish imported goods we certainly have domestic goods that should be good enough for any good American.

The Modern Department Store's Way of Making Clerks Raise Their Own Salaries

Teaches Them to Increase Their Own Sales, But Does Not Base Salary Increase Wholly on Sales. Main Thing is Increase in General Efficiency. An Interview With General Manager Tily of Strawbridge & Clothier.

[Mr. Herbert J. Tily, general manager of Strawbridge & Clothier's Philadelphia department store is rather in the forefront as an exponent of the enormous advantage—to the store—in the careful education of clerks so that their selling power and general efficiency are increased. Not long ago he made a public statement in which he stated that the policy of his store was to make its clerks advance their own salaries—when their sales, or their general efficiency increased, their salaries would increase. Last week the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" sent a representative to Mr. Tily to ask whether in his judgment the big store's methods of educating clerks, and increasing their efficiency, were applicable to the small store. Also, for something as to his methods of keeping in touch with a given clerk's efficiency and the system of advancing salaries. The interview follows.—Ed.]

According to Mr. Herbert J. Tily, Strawbridge & Clothier's policy in regard to increasing a clerk's wages is not based entirely on the total sales. The kind of service a clerk renders is of prime importance; in other words, to please every customer so that she will return again and again to the store.

On this subject of service Mr. Tily said: "A clerk who persuades a woman to buy a costly perishable gown without tactfully suggesting that its beauty is produced at the cost of durability, commits an error, since the woman may later be dissatisfied with her purchase and her dissatisfaction will extend to the store.

"Take also patent leather shoes, for instance, the very dressiest looking boot obtainable, and yet it is impossible to produce a patent leather shoe that can be guaranteed to wear well. Our clerks are instructed not to make a sale of these without having the customer understand this.

"Last winter when it was a fad to wear coats with a certain finish to the material, which really detracted from the serviceability of the coat, our clerks were told to gently say to the customer, 'this particular garment, although it has the desirable fashionable effect, will not wear as long as many other materials.'"

Mr. Tily said that it would be impossible to estimate the value of a clerk by the amount of his sales only, because there is an element of luck in the character of customer that falls to a clerk's lot to wait upon.

"In the furniture department a customer who has $100 to spend on a bed and sees what he wants before the clerk has made any effort to display the entire stock, is an easier proposition than a particular person with only $20 for the same piece of furniture, who takes half an hour of the clerk's time trying to decide what to buy. The latter sale undoubtedly required better salesmanship.

"Therefore a clerk's disposition to please must be observed. This is part of the work of the heads of departments.

"The small store formerly gave the best service because the few clerks were under the watchful eye of the proprietor, whose self-interest made him require that a clerk give every customer careful attention, and that the only mission of the large store was its collecting ability, that is, its power to buy on a large scale (and therefore at lower prices) from the markets of the world. But the real service was not there, and then we began to look for the reason and had to learn from the small store that the proprietor must be present by proxy since he could not in person superintend every department. Then we had to secure a trained head for each department who was responsible for the sales and service under him. These must be men and women whose teaching spirit has been developed. If the clerks in a department are bright, keeping the stock neat and attractive, turning in a good number of sales, etc., the head of the department receives credit, besides the wages being increased of the clerks whom the head reports for good work.

"If a clerk continues to give better and better service her wages may be increased almost indefinitely. Of course she has other duties than merely selling. We have clerks receiving thousands of dollars per year; they have learned their merchandise so well that they can intelligently select what to sell, that is, they become buyers for their departments.

"Every clerk receives preliminary training for a week, or as long as necessary (on the store's time, that is; the full salary is paid) before being allowed to go on the floor. Instruction is given as to the store's ideals of honesty, courtesy and carefulness to details, such as the writing of addresses to insure satisfaction in deliveries, how to properly fill out the sales checks for various kinds of transactions, etc.

"As to the question of whether we ever increase the wages of a clerk whose selling ability does not increase, that is rather a personal question. It is our custom to keep on only those who do show a spirit of improving in efficiency. Exceptional cases of what are really pensioners cannot be discussed.

"Beside the preliminary training that is required, we have an optional system of education. This we call our 'Commercial Efficiency Course.' It is practically a course in industrial economics. Certificates are given after satisfactory examination, commencement exercises being held.

"Our aim is that the trained clerk shall develop himself to fill higher and higher positions as the opportunity presents itself, so that through this course they may become the future executives of the store. For this reason we are not purely philanthropic when we allow them to train themselves in the store's time. The merchandising business requires in this day the trained mind just as much as the professions do."

First Motor Truck Convention to be Held in Detroit.

Under the promotion of the Motor Truck Club of America and allied associations, the makers, dealers and buyers of trucks will get together in Detroit for a four days' session from October 7th to 10th, to determine policies to standardize service and maintenance and to promote the betterment of the truck business from the standpoint of all concerned. A comprehensive programme of discussion has been arranged by the convention committees dealing with every phase of the situation, and papers and addresses by leading manufacturers, dealers and truck users will give an unusually practical and interesting turn to the convention. During the four days of the convention, headquarters of which will be in the Cadillac Hotel, some thirty vitally important subjects will be carefully discussed from all angles. Among the topics outlined are such as "Time Payment Plan for Selling Trucks," "Advertising: Relationship Between Factory and Dealer," "Traffic and Transportation Engineering," "Factory Sales Assistance to Dealers," "The Trading Evil," "Vehicles for War Purposes," and many others of equal interest and importance.

Colorado cantaloupes are still cheap and not very good—65 to 70 cents for flats and crates up to $1.75.

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

WITH THE EDITOR

We call attention to the page advertisement appearing elsewhere, signed by a large number of well known Pennsylvania jobbers, and bearing the heading, "Give Your Jobber a Square Deal and Other People Will Give You One." This is an adaptation of the golden rule.

This page will continue, with changing reading matter, for one year. Its object is to bring before the several thousand retailers who read this paper, some of the little unfairnesses into which they occasionally lapse, in their relations with their jobbers. Little obstacles in the path of fair, clean, friendly business. We are hopeful that holding the mirror up to some of these may help.

Communications regarding the moral right to advance prices of food products merely to take advantage of a situation, and notwithstanding that the holder was making a sufficient profit at the old price, continue to come in. Here is one from a New England subscriber:—

I am sending you two problems for your solution and answer keeping in mind the text: "He who raises his prices for an extra profit because of the war is a traitor to every generous instinct and a social outcast."

PROBLEM NO. 1.

Mr. A., a grocer, bought fifty barrels of flour at $5.15 wood basis. He sells a few barrels at $6.00 per barrel, but because of the war he advanced prices to $7.00. Sales slacked off a little, but prices further advanced and finally he closes out at $8.00. Stock has moved slow but at a big profit. He goes on the market to replenish his stock. Because the war is over and things are normal, he is able to buy for $5.15, and now sells again for $6.00. Would you brand him as a social outcast?

PROBLEM NO. 2.

Mr. B., a competitor, bought fifty barrels of flour at $5.15, and in spite of the war declined to ask over $6.00. He sold out before Mr. A. and goes on the market to buy more stock, and because of the war is obliged to pay $7.50 wood basis. He sold a few barrels at $8.00, but the war is off and his friend A. is selling for $6.00. What must Mr. B. do to move his stock? Will his customer buy and pay $8.50? or will they patronize the social outcast? Or who is the outcast, the man that got the price or he who accepts trade?

Our answer to No. 1 is a reiteration of what we said recently. If A has been buying flour at $5.15 and selling it at $6.00 he has been making too little money, for he has not been getting his expenses. If he has been doing this for any considerable period, and has not made it up by charging excessive profits on something else, he can fairly use any stepping stone whatever, not involving fraud, to put prices where he will get a fair profit. If selling the balance of his flour at $7 and $8 would no more than do this, we have no word of criticism for him. The fundamental condition of our criticism of the dealer who advanced prices to take advantage of the war was that he should have been making a fair profit before.

Our answer to No. 2 is that B was shortsighted in persisting in selling flour at a loss when a way of escape opened right before him. Further, there was no excuse for his overbuying at $7.50. With the market that high, he should have bought only for his barest needs, especially as he must have known, if he read the papers, that there was no legitimate reason for such an advance, and that the market must decline, as it has since done. If he was left with a stock of high-priced flour of course he would have to drop to his competitor's level. But this is no more than he should do—if he had been making a satisfactory profit before—for the dealer who advances prices on spot stocks merely because the general market has advanced, ought by the same token to decline spot stocks when the general market declines.

How the canned goods packers flee when no man pursueth. Flee from the implication of the word "canned."

The Shadow Rather Than the Substance. "canned" in connection with their products. They are canned, are they not?

In last Thursday's edition of the Philadelphia "Record" a well-known Maryland line of canned goods was exploited under the description "prepared vegetables." Of course this was another effort to flee from the implication of the word "canned."

Vegetables packed in tin cans are canned goods. Calling them "prepared" does not change them, and no consumer is foolish enough to think so. The packer who uses this and other subterfuges is, therefore, fleeing from the shadow rather than the substance. Why do consumers dislike the word "canned?" Because they have a delusion that packing food in tin is unhealthful. Of course, they have no special dislike of the word "canned"—they dislike what they think the word stands for. How foolish then to change the name and not the fact. Like the Irishman, alone in a hostile Italian community, who sought to placate his enemies by changing his name from Moriarity to Spinelli.

The packers ought to go straight to the difficulty and remove the consumer's belief in the harmfulness of tin cans. It ought to be comparatively easy to remove such an utterly unfounded prejudice.

The discussion over the high cost of living has continued now for about three years.

An Agreeable Change.

It has brought considerable condemnation to the retailer because of his supposed charging of excessive profits. While this has not been pleasant it has brought good in the end, because it has so thoroughly illuminated the subject that the public is now aware that not only is the retailer not charging too much profit, but that he could not charge too much, and actually is charging hardly enough in some cases to keep soul and body together.

The newspaper articles have become fairer. For an instance the following from last Sunday's Philadelphia "Ledger":—

It is rash to conclude, as some critics of the retailer do, that the retail price of food represents extortion on his part. No one who has a living to make can afford to sell at cost. Rent, clerk hire, delivery and other expenses must be paid; and to this sum must be added a reasonable profit. The gap between the wholesale and the retail price may be unduly wide on occasion. This matter is governed to some extent by the nature of the location and the character of the neighborhood. A cash trade means lower prices, for in that case there is no offsetting of bad accounts. Probably the shops that deal with the wealthier class of customers and give long credits make no larger profits than the shops that give no credit; indeed, they might easily make smaller profits.

Americans as a rule have long lived too extravagantly, scorning to practice the small economics which the French, for example, understand so well. They can reduce household expenses, if they choose, without imposing on themselves any undue hardship. Co-operation is, no doubt, the most effective way of doing this. But the results of the Cohocksink experiment (a co-operative store), however gratifying they may be, will not prove that the retailer practices extortion in making a living out of his business.

The average American consumer is a pig. He expects the best of everything, every possible attention, all manner of trouble taken for him by the retailer—and no charge made for any of it. The high cost of his living is chargeable solely to the kind of living he is doing.

1914 August Failures Show Peculiar Comparison With 1913.

Several Lines Nearly Same, One Line Exactly the Same, Other Lines Greater.

The official report of failures for August, 1914, shows a peculiar comparison with August, 1913. In some lines the failures were practically the same, while in others they were much greater. There is very little difference in general stores, groceries and shoes, while clothing and dry goods failures were more numerous this August than last, and hardware failures were fewer. The figures follow:—

General Stores.—August, 1914, 83; liabilities, $558,960; August, 1913, 87; liabilities, $724,650.

Groceries.—August, 1914, 213; liabilities, $1,726,745; August, 1913, 214; liabilities, $1,630,545.

Clothing and Furnishing.—August, 1914, 105; liabilities, $1,130,550; August, 1913, 63; liabilities, $393,381.

Dry Goods.—August, 1914, 52; liabilities, $788,640; August, 1913, 47; liabilities, $473,200.

Shoes, Etc.—August, 1914, 25; liabilities, $175,380; August, 1913, 25; liabilities, $774,834.

Hardware, Etc.—August, 1914, 18; liabilities, $201,379; August, 1913, 25; liabilities, $358,054.

What the Thirty-one Washington (D. C.) Defendants Did to Boost the Food Markets

Extracts From Indictments Found Against the Washington Concerns Who the Government Says Interfered With Competition in Dairy and Farm Produce. Names of All Defendants.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

September 18, 1914.

Further information obtained regarding the prosecutions begun by the Government last week against thirty-one local food dealers shows that the Government is determined to make an example; if it can, if these men whom it accuses of unduly holding up food prices.

The men so far indicted by the United States Grand Jury are as follows:—

Individuals—Daniel P. Collins, Frank B. Guest, James W. Beasley, John W. Lynn, David W. Ballinger, Alonzo R. Lawrence, William Brayshaw, Andrew W. Kelley, Oliver O. Spicer, and James M. Holloway.

Firms—B. D. Strohecker & Co., composed of Brevard D. Strohecker and T. Hamlin Strohecker; Johnson & Jesse, comprising William M. Johnson and J. Edward Jesse; Krey, Price & Co., comprising Louis P. Krey and Albin Price; Crovo & Price, composed of John F. Crovo and Harry R. Price; Simons, Carter & Co., comprising Theodore F. Simons and John H. Carter, and Joseph E. Folk, trading as G. K. Andrews & Co.

Official of corporations—Thomas P. Hickman, president, and Roy M. Hickman, secretary and treasurer of the Hickman Company; Willis S. Hoge, president; James M. Hoge, vice-president, and Willis S. Hoge, Jr., secretary of W. S. Hoge & Bro.; Albert J. Simons, president; Frank J. Ehlers, secretary, and Louis P. Krey, treasurer of A. J. Simons & Co.; Robert A. Golden, president; William G. Carter, first vice-president, and William A. Sacks, treasurer of Golden & Co.

The indictments set forth that the accused between January 2, 1914, and the present time in the capacities indicated have been carrying on in this city the business of purchasing country produce, including eggs, poultry, live stock and vegetables, from raisers and shippers thereof and dealers therein, and selling the same in the markets of said district to wholesale and retail dealers and consumers, although said defendants have then and there pretended to the public, and particularly to said raisers, shippers and dealers, to be receiving and selling such produce only as commission merchants acting for their principals for a fixed compensation of 5 per cent.; and that in so carrying on said business said defendants, at the time and place aforesaid, have been carrying on trade and commerce of said district within the meaning of the third section of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, and entitled an act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies; and further, that according to the long established course of trade of said district consumers of such produce have necessarily depended for their supplies of said produce upon said defendants engaged in the business aforesaid, and a few genuine commission merchants, and that of the total volume of said produce supplied to consumers in said district during said period of time said defendants together have been the channel for furnishing the major part, to wit: 75 per cent. thereof.

The indictment goes on to describe the methods employed to obtain control of the markets, the defendants being charged with having employed a common agent for collecting from said defendants and concerns in the morning of each market day, verbal and written and printed suggestions and "ballots" indicating the prices such defendants and concerns would respectively pay on that day for the different kinds of such produce, and have required said agent thereafter, on the same day, to print a publication for said defendants, entitled "Washington City Daily Market Report in the Interest of Shippers, Receivers and Wholesale Buyers of Country Produce," which has pretended to quote prices prevailing in said markets on that day as a result of competition between said defendants and concerns, but which has really quoted only the arbitrary and non-competitive prices selected by said agent to agree, as nearly as possible, with the result of said suggestions and ballots, and therefore the prices fixed by said defendants.

Through the circulation of printed copies of the reputed daily market report, the producers, shippers and dealers were wrongfully led to believe, the Grand Jury finds, "that they were receiving from said defendants and concerns in such settlements the prices for their produce that day prevailing in a competitive market, when, in fact, they were receiving returns for their said produce only upon the basis of such arbitrary and non-competitive prices, so fixed by said defendants, and printed in said publication. And said defendants, having wrongfully and unlawfully acquired control of such farm produce, have made use of that control to exact and secure from the persons to whom they so sold the same produce, and from the consumers of such produce in said District of Columbia, arbitrary and non-competitive prices for the same, and prices greatly in excess of the prices which they would or could have exacted and secured if they had not engaged in said unlawful combination in restraint of trade and commerce."

The defendants all entered bail, and will fight the case bitterly. For violation of the Sherman anti-trust law the penalty that may be imposed by the trial judge is a fine not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both fine and imprisonment.

should not be considered below the standard of any other business man. Any man in any legitimate business has a perfect right, and to make it strong, should sell at market price. It is absurd to think that Gold Medal flour costing you $7 per barrel is better than your neighbor's across the street who paid but $5 per barrel. If you expect to sell a standard article that every family is familiar with it must be sold pretty nearly at the right price, or it will stay in your store unsold. In our age nearly every family is getting daily market prices and know the value of the article. And since there was such a sharp and swift advance in price recently, especially on sugar and flour, can it not be possible to have the same effect on a decline? Is it not also true that the mills have advanced their prices of flour, with a large supply of wheat on hand, at the low price? The grocer is censured unjustly by many. He as a rule sells sugar, and quite frequently flour also, for less than it cost him to handle, and would it not be for other merchandise which he sells to overbalance the loss, many more would be "crushed to the walls." Will you sell your bank stocks at a reasonable profit, or do you ask book value? Will you sell your city lots at 20 per cent. advance, or will you take the highest market price? Do you buy stocks and bonds for an investment, or do you sell at par plus a certain percentage? Has not the grocer, or any other merchant, as much right to invest his money in merchandise, anticipating higher market prices, as has the banker, real estate man, or the speculator who buys grain before it is sown in the ground? I know of a flour and feed firm who bought 15 carloads of feed last July at a certain price, to be delivered during October and November. They can sell all of it at a very nice profit without touching it. They, however, decided to keep the buy, as they must have feed at that time. In your opinion, I suppose they ought to sell it retail for a great deal less than the present wholesale price, because they bought when the market was low. Can the editor name one merchant who does not change prices regardless of the cost if the market changes? I would like to meet that man.

Respectfully,

I. M. ROTHENBERGER.

Sell KARO for Preserving

(Crystal White)

It makes better preserves than all sugar

In our extensive advertising, and in the "Preserving with Karo" booklet, we tell the housewife about the superiority and convenience of KARO for preserving fruits, making jellies, marmalades, jams, etc. It will pay you to follow up our suggestion and recommend this use of KARO (Crystal White), because your profit on KARO is much larger than your profit on sugar. You can be sure your customers will be not only satisfied, but delighted. KARO (Crystal White) is already extensively used for preserving purposes, and this use is increasing every day on account of the superior qualities imparted to the preserves, jams and jellies. KARO (Crystal White) is too profitable for you to let your customers use it simply as a table syrup; tell them to use it for cooking, baking and candy making, and you'll secure increased sales that will pay you many a dollar of extra profits.

Preserving booklets will be furnished to the grocers for distribution on request.

Health Bureau Issues Remarkable Bulletin on Butterine. Sugar Refiners Claim They Have Protected Domestic Trade by Refusing to Sell England All She Wanted. Motor Delivery Truck People, Tobacco and Gasoline Interests Will Fight Proposed War Taxes. Market Summary.

New York, September 18, 1914.

What is considered a very remarkable bulletin was issued by New York Department of Health during the week, and shows more than anything else how oleomargarine has lifted itself in the last few years in public opinion. The bulletin was headed, "Unfounded Prejudices Against Wholesome Food Products," and was an argument for the healthfulness of oleomargarine with some remarks about the New York regulations covering its sale. Criticism was also made of the oleo taxes.

Some extracts are considered important enough to reproduce:—

Oleomargarine was devised by the French chemist Mege-Mouries in 1870. Reasoning that butter fats in milk were the result of the appropriation and secretion in milk of certain fats of the cow, he showed that that portion of fresh clean healthy beef fat which can be separated at a low temperature from the fat having a higher melting point when churned with milk or mixed with butter formed a substance which very closely resembled true butter. Artificial color and salt were added to emphasize this similarity.

The term "oleomargarine" is now used in a broad sense and includes all mixtures of animal and vegetable fats, alone or mixed with milk, cream or butter, that are used as butter substitutes. The United States defines oleomargarine as "All substances heretofore known as oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine * * * made in imitation or semblance of butter, or when so made, calculated or intended to be sold as butter or for butter."

Since the original patent taken out in this country in 1873 by Mege-Mouries, numerous patents, in essence very similar to the original, have been granted. The following represents a standard method much in use in this country. The fat is taken from the cattle in the process of slaughtering, and after a thorough washing is placed in a bath of clean, cold water and surrounded with ice, where it is allowed to remain until all animal heat has been removed. It is then cut into small pieces by machinery and pressed through cheese cloth in heated presses.

The first pressing yields Grade A extra oleo oil, the stearin oil all being left behind. Subsequent pressings give lower grade products. In similar fashion a product called "neutral" is made from leaf lard. In the further manufacture forty parts of oleo oil, ten parts of "neutral," twenty-five parts of June creamery butter, fifteen parts of milk and ten parts together of cream, salt and cottonseed oil are mixed and churned in exactly the same way employed in the making of creamery butter.

Early in the history of oleomargarine the question was raised as to its healthfulness. Some of the most celebrated chemists of the country have testified to its nutritive and healthful qualities and called attention to the fact that it is necessary to use the best materials in order to get a salable product, free from disagreeable flavors.

It is interesting to recall that Professor Chandler, of Columbia University, was asked by the Board of Health of the city of New York to investigate the subject of oleomargarine. In his report of May 2, 1881, this well-known authority said: "I regard it as a most valuable article of food, and consider it entirely unexceptional in every respect. In this opinion I am supported by the best scientific authorities in the country."

Experiments by the celebrated Professors Rubner of Germany and Atwater of this country show that there is scarcely any difference in the digestibility of oleomargarine and butter. In this connection, it may be well to call attention to the fact that the process of making oleomargarine incidentally pasteurizes the product. To those who are familiar with the manufacture of butter this will at once be recognized as a distinct advantage possessed by oleomargarine.

It was very soon recognized, however, that this artificial butter would hurt tremendously the butter industry of this country, and controlling legislation was enacted, not only by States, but also by the Federal Government. The Congress of the United States passed an act to control the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, which was approved August 2, 1886. It provided that manufacturers of and dealers in oleomargarine pay an annual tax as follows. (It is interesting to note the difference in tax between the colored and the uncolored product.)

|---|-------|
| Manufacturers of oleomargarine | $600 |
| Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine colored artificially to look like butter | 480 |
| Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine not artificially colored... | 200 |
| Retail dealers in oleomargarine colored artificially to look like butter | 48 |
| Retail dealers in oleomargarine not artificially colored..... | 6 |

TAXES ON PRODUCT.

Oleomargarine (artificially colored), 10 cents per pound.

Oleomargarine (not artificially colored), ¼ cent per pound.

The purpose of these various taxes is evidently to discourage the sale of a food product which, if injurious, should not be marketed at all, but which, if wholesome, should be given a fair chance in competition with other foods. While the law does not prohibit the use of coloring matter in butter, it imposes a heavy tax, making the use of coloring matter in oleomargarine prohibitive. At the present time the manufacturers of oleomargarine avoid paying the higher tax for an artificially colored product by adding 20 to 25 per cent. of June creamery butter to their finished product. Although cheaper than paying the tax of 10 cents a pound, this practice entails an increased cost amounting to at least 3 or 4 cents per pound.

One of the features of the week was the naming by the California Associated Raisin Company, which is the new raisin combination, of opening prices on new seeded loose Muscatels. The new prices were: Fancy seeded in 16-oz cartons, 6⅞ cents; choice, 6½ cents. These prices being f. o. b. the Coast and for large quantities.

The trade were expecting higher prices than these and are fairly well satisfied.

The sugar refineries claim that their policy in refusing to sell to England all the sugar they could have sold to her, has kept prices much below where they would otherwise have gone. They say that had importers and refiners generally acceded to this demand from England, instead of adopting the policy of keeping their available supplies for the domestic demand, our consumers would have been without refined sugar and our refiners without raws and the immense rise in prices, so confidently predicted by many, would now be in full progress.

All British refiners buy and sell raw sugar as well as refined and act at times in the capacity of merchants.

As it is, Great Britain, cut off from buying here, sought other markets and has secured enough sugar elsewhere to meet its wants for a long time to come, as to raw sugars, except for immediate use, but still requires a certain amount of refined from us, which cannot be had elsewhere. This demand may continue through the coming months to extent of say 25,000 to

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Didn't Know You Sold That.—No matter how big or how little your store is its entire stock should be on display throughout the year at different and appropriate times, and of course in different quantities.

There's never a time you place an odd thing in a prominent place that you don't hear the remark—"I didn't know you sold that."

It's the only way to keep your stock cleaned up.

A brand that is a dead one with you may be a good seller in another town and people are constantly moving from other towns. But just because it is a dead one is all the more reason for cleaning it out. Said a woman the other day—"It's years since I saw cocoa shells and had no idea you carried them; I'll have 2 pounds."

That's typical of other things. But remember that in conjunction with your odd brands or odd articles there should be displayed some of the Nationally advertised goods so as to give color and life to the whole.

What Oysters Sell.—Oysters sell things for you if you go about it right. A tub of shells well set up is always striking. Now what are the proper things, the suggestive things, to arrange around this tub? Not bacon and hams.

Not salt mackerel and oatmeal, but just think of the things that "go" with oysters and the things necessary for their proper preparation for the table.

Oyster cocktail sauce, tabasco sauce, horse radish, tomato catsup, white pepper, lemons.

Are not these some of the things you reach for when you sit down to your plate of half shells in the restaurant? Why not at home? Half the time it's because we, as grocers, are not clever enough to put the right things in the right place. It stands to reason that you will sell twice as much horse radish when the bottles are mixed up with oysters in the shell than you would were the goods shown on the counter. It's only a matter of getting away from the usual to the unusual. One is general and the other is specific. In the one case you don't taste the horse radish on anything in particular, in the other case you taste it with the oyster and must have a bottle "right now."

Another thing—in selling stew oysters the idea of suggesting oyster crackers, cracker meal, and even your sample bags of flour is a good one. It shows that we are alive to the game. Women like this—they like to be told. They're not supposed to be in the store, to think. We're the paid thinkers.

30,000 tons per month, but in the absence of domestic demand, this amount can be readily spared without advancing prices. What might have been a critical situation at this time and in October has been beautifully solved by the policy used under extraordinary war conditions to protect our home interests.

Refiners now are in position to meet the foreign demand for refined without detriment to the domestic interests, and the result of this transfer of business on the reduced scale of Britain's requirements has caused an easier tone to our raw market, with more desire by holders to sell their warehoused sugars as well as supplies for shipment.

The users of motor delivery trucks of this city are very much up in arms at the proposal of Congress to put a two-cent tax on gasoline. They claim that such a tax would very seriously discourage the extension of motor delivery, but they are perfectly willing that pleasure cars should have a tax put on gasoline used by them. They claim that this would represent an increase in the cost of operating the average truck of 15 cents a day, or $45 a year, that this would probably amount to $550,000 on the motor trucks engaged in business throughout the country.

The Motor Truck Club of America has adopted and sent to Congress the following appeal:—

To the Honorable, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C.:—

Respectfully represents the undersigned, the Motor Truck Club of America, comprising motor truck owners, users, makers and dealers, operating over 3,000 motor trucks in active mercantile transportation—

That it has come to our attention that your honorable committee is considering the taxation of gasoline as a source of governmental revenues.

In such a situation, this club desires to endorse the principle that, whenever taxation becomes necessary to produce revenues, it should be imposed on such articles as are the luxuries of life, rather than upon those which serve the public necessity and convenience, and

That whereas certain uses of gasoline serve the ends of luxury and pastime and might very properly be taxed to meet the existing deficits, nevertheless, the placing of the proposed tax on gasoline consumed in commercial transportation and similar service would add a serious burden to the further introduction of motorized transportation utilities—a public improvement quite as much to the advantage of the Government and all the people as to our members directly—and would be-

47—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because the right kind of national advertising makes a product thirty times easier to sell than the non-advertised product.

¶ In St. Louis, Mo., not long ago somebody dug into the chocolate business. They found that fourteen brands were selling in that market, four of which were regularly advertised—nationally advertised—and the balance of which were not advertised.

¶ The four advertised brands had ninety-seven per cent of that trade, the other ten brands divided the other three per cent. There may or may not have been difference in quality; certainly there was not enough to account for all this difference in sales.

¶ The difference in sales came from the difference between advertising and no advertising. By reason of the advertising four brands became thirty times easier to sell than the other ten.

come burdensome to actual commercial activities, rather than merely to luxury and pastime;

Therefore at a meeting of this club, held Wednesday evening, September 16th, the undersigned, respectively president and secretary, were instructed to communicate with your honorable body, present the above views and urge that in any taxation measures, the burden of a gasoline tax be withheld from motor truck fuels, either by specific exemption or through some form of rebate to be remitted upon proof of such use for strictly commercial purposes.

Very sincerely yours,
GEORGE H. DUCK,
President.
ELLIS L. HOWLAND,
Secretary.

There is also a vigorous fight on here against the tax on tobacco products, and representatives of the tobacco industry are organizing, and will do what they can to prevent this part of the Tax Bill from going through.

The oil interests are also arranging to oppose the gasoline tax and many telegrams of protest have already been sent to members of Congress.

SUMMARY OF THE MARKETS.

Coffee dull, as roasters have filled up their trade. General feeling easy and soft.—Tea quiet with some holders shading prices on account of new arrivals.—Rice somewhat stronger after the recent decline; situation not unduly strong.—Spices quiet and unchanged, buyers taking for immediate wants only.—Refined sugar unchanged from a week ago with raws slightly weaker.—Dried fruits unchanged.—Wheat considerably lower than a week ago upon free arrivals.—Flour easier by reason of the decline in wheat. Business dull.—Domestic sardines first higher, but closed the week about 50 cents a case lower, due to increased catch. The market is unsettled.

The Latest is Canned Japanese Oysters.

Pacific Coast jobbers are now handling canned cove oysters packed in Japan. The oysters are said to class as extra selects, are large in size, and the cans are of standard American dimensions for the 5-ounce grade. While the appearance of the oyster is decidedly good, the flavor is somewhat different from the American product, and this may delay their popularity somewhat. The importers assert that Japanese oysters eventually will become a most important item in the coast market, although it is admitted that possibly the war may prevent general shipping and packing temporarily. The 5-ounce extra selects are the only ones offered so far. Jobbers are selling them at $1.25 a dozen.

Hardware—Tools—Specialties

Latest Specialties for the Hardware Stock.

A new kitchen table has a top of one piece porcelain enameled steel, which needs no covering and cannot be burned with hot dishes or stained with acids. It measures 42 inches and has a large drawer and retails for $12.50.

In the line of shears and scissors a Bridgeport, Conn., manufacturer is offering goods of a reliable quality that sells for 10 and 25 cents. This low price merchandise is made from specially selected cutlery material, all being carefully adjusted before leaving the factory, and have keen cutting edges. The line consists of household and dressmakers' shears, women's pointed scissors, blunt and pocket scissors, barbers' shears, buttonhole scissors, etc.

Screw drivers and tool sets in a number of different styles are recent productions of a Chicago plant. One set which is especially a handy kit consists of one friction drive handle with a four-jam screw chuck and eleven high class crucible steel tools, all put in a substantial Khaki roll. The handle is adapted for all rotary work. The roll weighs nine pounds and they are packed one-quarter dozens in a box.

A folding steel square that is absolutely accurate, and which can be folded up to put into a small tool chest, is a new and valuable addition to one tool-maker's line.

Stock of Foreign Cutlery Exhausted.

One of the hardware lines which has already felt the effects of the European conflict is pocket cutlery. All importations have entirely ceased. As evidence of how important a part imports in this line play in the hardware business, it will be realized when the statement is made that in value foreign cutlery constitutes from a third and upwards of all the pocket cutlery sold in this country, the remainder being American goods says the "American Hardware Journal." Cutlery importers remark that due to conditions a slight advance has or will be made from 5, 7½ to 10 per cent. An advance in price on scissors and shears was made before the war was even considered; this was rendered necessary by increasing manufacturing costs.

As to stocks of pocket cutlery on hand, and how long, even under normal conditions, they would last, there seems to be consensus of opinion that it will be but a few months at the most when broken stocks will only remain. Already customers are besieging the offices of the cutlery importers, asking them to disregard shipping dates and forward complete and increasing orders at once. Practically every importer is taking care of regular trade, but orders in many cases are pruned. Most dealers are anxious to be sure of a supply and are therefore doubling and tripling the size of orders. There seems to be a disposition to take care of regular trade as much as circumstances will permit.

According to statements of importers, the cheaper grades, from 25 cents and under, at retail, will be out of the market shortly, as these are imported goods. Some of the higher priced goods form a considerable volume of the imported lines. The advances in price now made will doubtless remain for a long time.

Boots Shoes Findings

Men's New Season Footwear.

The new fall and winter styles are being shown in the stores and the styles, both for men and women, show some marked difference from those of last season. Even the illustrations of the new models used by the manufacturers differ from the actual lines placed on sale. The men's wear display severe lines, have low heels, broad shanks, tapering toes, few perforations, blind eyelets, few hooks, hookeyes instead of pull straps. They have a general tendency toward thinness with less weight. Men's cloth tops, in natural shades, have come to stay, authorities predict, for general wear, and are a welcome innovation to a stringent leather market.

Uncertainty in the Shoe Trade. Prices Advancing. Outlook For Next Spring.

A great deal of uncertainty is evident in the shoe trade—more among the manufacturers than the retailers. The latter, of course, are dependent upon the attitude and action of the former, and this is where nearly everyone is "up in the air." The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has been following developments closely and reporting current conditions in this department as they have occurred in the different shoe-making centers of the country. Prices have been advanced and in varying amounts, and, as yet, there is no concerted movement to increase the cost of footwear unless on the individual initiative of the manufacturer. Where this has not actually been done, the trade have been cautioned to expect such a movement when circumstances compelled.

Conservative manufacturers and distributors, including wholesalers, are now advising their dealers and the general merchants to proceed slowly, as it is problematical just what the European war may mean to the shoe trade. Manufacturers who are usually outspoken in their opinions on any topic affecting the trade are now inclined to be unusually reticent. This means, of course, that no great dependence can be placed on the future supply of raw material, findings and accessories; hence when prices on finished goods are discussed there is no firm basis upon which a reliable estimate may be figured. It is not believed that the average shoe manufacturing concern is any too heavily stocked with the essentials to assume other than a cautious position toward the market. At least, this is the opinion of well informed retailers.

However, the trade is convinced of one thing and that is if the war should stop immediately the same shoe merchants are or have been handling will cost more money. Just how much is a variable quantity. Some lines that have already gone out for next spring, the season to which the trade is now looking forward, have been advanced from 5 to 25 cents a pair, as to quality and grade. According to the views of a wholesaler selling in nearly every section of the country, if the shoe merchants on January 1st next have done only 75 per cent. of a normal business it would not be surprising. On the other hand this same authority admitted that the sales at that time may show a gain. This variance of opinion represents or reflects the uncertainty referred to all along the line.

It is also reported that some manufacturers who sell general merchants direct are not making new samples, their salesmen showing the same lines carried last year at this time. In the cities, of course, a different course is being pursued, as many radical changes in models—appearance, finish, style—are demanded. Others are following the policy of taking only half their customary volume of orders. As previously observed, different policies are being adopted and followed according to different judgments and the different positions that manufacturers find themselves in as regards supplies of materials. At the present time stocks of shoes in the country are said to be ample to last for a considerable time. They may and probably are not the shoes either the retailer or his most particular customers planned to sell or buy, but under necessity they would be satisfied. It is on this fundamental idea that the serious thought of the trade advises retailers to reduce their stocks as much as possible. This new view, it is also true, is not shared by all alike, and for obvious reasons.

Western manufacturers, who sell almost exclusively to the southern trades, have had troubles of their own apart from the foreign fracas. They have likewise been anxious over the threatened shortage of raw material and minor supplies, but their immediate cause of worry is the peculiar condition in which southern general merchants and retailers have been placed by the slump in cotton. A number of large plants were shut down for a while, but are now opening again as the outlook for the sale of their products is brightening. L. V. Roach, vice-president of the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., St. Louis, in speaking of the situation, aid: "Business has been depressed because shoe merchants in the South have bought stocks conservatively. The European war has also caused a decided lull. The uncertain outlook for the cotton crop has sobered them. I believe now things have changed for the better. There has not been much effort to work up the foreign trade because of the unsurmountable difficulties in the way."

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

One Button Union Suit a Late Arrival.

The new union suit made by the Field & Hatch Knitting Co., previously mentioned in this department, is of the one button variety and is of unique, but practical design. The selling argument which is being featured is that a patented flap over the chest of the wearer does away with the customary nine or ten buttons down the front. A great deal of attention is now being given to the cut and wearing comfort of garments of this kind by manufacturers. It is generally recognized there is room for improvement in not a few particulars, so as to make them more popular and better sellers. When the merits of these "reformed" union suits are made known to the public and the retailer in other than ineffective freak ways "originated" by pseudo-merchandisers their wide sale is a foregone conclusion, according to the rules of the game.

Merchants Preparing For Active Season.

Wholesalers and jobbers report the general merchant, with the arrival of a cool spell, has appeared in the market and is buying much more generously than for months. Their orders are for the major part for immediate delivery. In the Middle West the same conditions prevail, according to advice from that section. Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say: "Distribution of dry goods at wholesale continues heavy. Cooler weather during the past week has had a stimulating effect on retail sales, starting a demand especially for heavier ready-to-wear apparel and merchants holding their fall opening at this time have been very successful. A large number of merchants have been in the market, many of them making their second visit within a month's time, showing that they are keeping in close touch with conditions and not committing themselves far in advance.

"The favorable government crop report during the week and the high prices farmers are receiving for all grains has led merchants to operate with increased confidence. Spring bookings of ging-to keep your business going is to seek out and take advantage of every business opportunity and not let a single one escape you. The merchant who carries no stock has nothing with which to create enthusiasm and make or wage an earnest fight for all the business he can get in his territory. We don't advocate the merchant loading up with merchandise beyond his ability to carry, but a good big assorted stock, well selected, well bought and paid for, creates an enthusiastic desire to tell your customers about this big stock that you have purchased. It also keeps your regular quality uniform for a certain length of time without change. The result is a large run of increased orders just because you had the selections of merchandise on hand, believed in it yourself and for that reason told your customers all about it. This is successful merchandising and in nothing can it be so readily demonstrated as in Tea. The merchant who carries an assortment of quality Tea, who will make a display, keep it in sanitary condition, push Tea, work Tea, talk Tea, advertise Tea, is the merchant who sells the Tea. Such a stock bought from Parke with the Parke guarantee, your money back during that crop year if you want it, will help any merchant increase his Tea business and make a lasting growth of business that is not temporary but permanent. Don't say it can't be done, be convinced, try it and get results.

In their regular review of the market the John V. Farwell Co., Chicago, comment as follows: "Sound basis activity is no longer in doubt. Merchants who are prepared with satisfactory stocks to meet the consumers' demands, will enjoy a good trade. The situation mentioned some time ago that there would be a positive scarcity of desirable dress fabrics, especially wool dress goods and silks, is now being felt. Merchants generally, feeling that markets are at the lowest level, appreciating scarcity of dye material and uncertainty of what can be furnished later, are freely supplying their present needs from stocks on hand. Consequently wool dress goods and silks have shown a phenomenal increase in sales. This applies also to other imported novelties. Cold weather and opening of school have given impetus to retail movement of hosiery, underwear, blankets and comfortables.

"All desirable foreign wool dress goods have been taken up with uncertainty of delivery for spring by foreign manufacturers. Mills' prices on silks rule firm. Roman stripes are strong sellers. Style indications point to popularity late into spring. The arrival of a shipment this week of velvets and velveteens from Liverpool relieves shortage caused by tremendous demand of these fabrics."

New Selling Plan Described as Unique.

A Western firm specializing on waists to retail at $1 and $2 each has originated a selling plan which is described by experts as unique. The merchant who handles the line is given exclusive representation in his town and the contributing territory. The plan, which has been in operation six months, calls for a contract under which the merchant agrees to receive a certain quantity of waists each week for a year, the quantity varying to meet the demand during the seasons when demand varies. Shipments are made, therefore, in comparatively smaller quantities each week instead of in large quantities at much longer intervals, and styles may thus be freshened constantly.

The retailer agrees to maintain a maximum price of $1 and $2 on the lines. He can sell the goods as cheap as he likes, but cannot ask more than the fixed maximum. To take care of close-outs on account of soiled or mussed goods, the merchant receives a certain percentage of each purchase at a reduced price, so that number can be closed out at half price and still allow the retailer the regular margin of profit. The retailer agrees to advertise a certain number of times during the year in his local paper and to display the goods on the ground floor of the store.

New Lines of Dress Goods. Latest Shades in Colorings.

A number of the 1915 lines of worsted dress goods opened in the primary markets last week contain a number of radical innovations; there are new weaves, weights and shades. Many of the cloths are one and a half ounces lighter than the dress goods shown a year ago. There is a marked tendency to goods lighter in weight. The fact that dresses and street costumes will be designed in a way that will call for a larger yardage of goods than in some time, and that much draping will characterize the fashions for next spring, makes it necessary to produce fabrics possessing the best possible draping qualities.

Highly lustrous satin cloths and open weaves on the voile order are the outstanding features of some of the new lines. The satin cloths are plain weaves with a cashmere finish, and others are in plain and diagonal stripes, having also a high lustrous finish. Very narrow poplin weaves, lightweight and lustrous, and fabrics of broadcloth construction in which the poplin idea is exemplified, are among the most attractive materials being offered. Other goods include serges in the finest twills, very soft to the touch, new ideas in gabardine weaves in fine and medium qualities and wool grenadines. There are new weaves in weaves in panamas and a wide variety of small stripes and checks in the most lustrous kinds of finishes. A few crepe effects were shown, but differing in a marked degree from any displayed last season.

Voiles made from hand-twisted yarns in a number of fancy weaves have been produced without sacrificing the draping qualities so essential. In one of the voile weaves that is expected to sell freely the pattern runs across the cloth. Black and white stripes, and black and white checks in very neat designs are expected to occupy a very strong position next season. A striking feature of the lines shown is the subdued tones of the colors. It may be a trifle early to hazard an opinion on the shades that will be leaders in the spring, but enough is already known to warrant saying that the favorites will run largely to bisques, greens from resida to dark green and for blue from Hague to crow. Prices are stiffening as a matter of course, but should the predicted drop in wool materialize the tendency may be the other way.

Vegetable Dyes Unfit For Hosiery. A Manufacturer's Unlimited Price Offer.

So much has been heard by the general merchant of the so-called dye stuff situation as affecting the cost and production of hosiery that its sincerity is questioned at times. In other words, conditions due to the foreign war are being used, it is believed for unholy purposes—to boost prices or to "throw a scare" into merchants concerning an alleged scarcity or shortage in goods. Evidence of this is not lacking, and it was in reflection of this feeling that the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" published recently, "The Dyestuff Scare and Hosiery—Action of Manufacturers Who Impose Conditions." Just how hard this hit the nail on the head remains to be disclosed as time passes, but it is fair to say that one prominent manufacturer, at least, promptly states his position in the following unequivocal manner:—

Easton, Pa., Sept. 11, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In regards to the dye stuff situation and the statement in the article that hosiery men had the scare I would say that, as far as we are concerned, we have good reasons to have a scare. In reference to dye stuff we have been endeavoring to purchase a stock of dye stuff and have made offers without any limitation of price and under these conditions have been unsuccessful in securing any quantity. Consequently we feel that there is good reason to believe that hosiery manufacturers will be very short of dye stuff inside of the next sixty days.

While vegetable dyes, that are not absolutely fast, may be used on some lines of goods, on hosiery it is absolutely necessary to have colors that will not crock or, in other words, rub off.

Yours truly,

CHIPMAN KNITTING MILLS,
W. Evan Chipman, Secretary and Treasurer.

Some New Articles for the Fall

To accord with the lines of the base all the new corset models show a slight curve in at the waist and are very straight in the hips. They are low medium in the bust, and are lightly boned, having an elastic across the back to make them fit snugly.

Very smart are new umbrellas for women. They really set a new fashion being long and slim and straight, with covers of shining silk in red, blue, green, brown, purple or black. They have smooth, long handles of virgin ebony, with tops of ivory in colors to match the silk.

Notion Novelties.

Calvin M. Smyth, of Young, Smyth & Field Co., informs the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" that with the exception of hosiery, everything in the other lines they handle, including notions, have been advanced in price due to general market conditions.

A Cleveland concern, which manufactures a line of dress hooks or fasteners, has recently announced two new small sizes as ready for the market. The new hooks adapt them for use on lace, nets, chiffons and the sheerest fabrics. Heretofore the fasteners were confined to the heavier cloths, as only the larger sizes were made. These dress hooks cannot snap open or come unhooked accidentally; they are flat, invisible, rust-proof and do not bend or crush in laundering. As articles of this kind are largely manufactured in Germany and Austria, the supply has been almost cut off. The American article, however, is in full stock and prices have not been advanced.

On foreign made snap fasteners the American agency of one of the best known has been compelled to notify the trade that "because of the war situation

Some soaps, sold to you because of a "promised" demand, do not bring profit and additional business.

If ordering Fels-Naptha Soap, however, you're safe in stocking any time, because the demand is always steady, healthy, growing.

Say "Fels-Naptha" to your jobber, to-day.

on in Europe, we are placed in the embarrassing position of being unable to secure goods, and as a consequence we are obliged to take all snap fasteners on the condition that we fill them whenever we are in a position to make shipments, without giving any promise as to a definite time or date. For all additional orders we are obliged to advance the price, owing to the fact that we must anticipate increased expenses when shipments are resumed. An increase in the cost of raw materials must be provided for."

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for a week. Values are fairly well maintained, though there is no indication of any further advance. There is plenty of tea in the country for current wants, and future shipments are arranged for, but stock is coming forward more slowly than usual. The demand for tea is very moderate.

Coffee.

The coffee market is very dull. Everybody is afraid of the market, and buyers are holding off except as to immediate wants. Values are easy. Coffee has been bought very cheaply in Brazil, both Rio and Santos, and when it gets into this country the effect can hardly be otherwise than depressing, unless it is held in strong hands. Ordinary grades of Brazil coffees are weak, while the better grades are firmly held at a premium, by reason of comparative scarcity. Mild coffees are also weak, by reason of holder's desire to sell. Java and Mocha about unchanged from a week ago; both steady on a comparatively high basis.

Sugar.

The sugar market is about unchanged from a week ago, all refineries now shipping granulated at 7¼ cents. Raw sugar advanced a fraction and then declined again, and at this writing are about where they were a week ago. The demand is poor.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose declined 10 points during the week, mainly because it had no special reason for advancing when it did. Compound syrup went down with it. Sugar syrup is still very high at the recently reported advance, and molasses is high through the same causes. There is very little demand.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged and not very strong, in spite of the fact that cold dry weather is said to have greatly interfered with the crop. It may be said, however, that up to this writing, there is no definite indication of any particular shortage in the pack, though there may be a shortage if the weather for the next month is unfavorable. The demand for tomatoes is poor. Corn is unchanged, prices well maintained despite the prospect of a good crop in most sections. The Western corn, which is an important factor, is uncertain. Peas are dull and unchanged. Apples about on last week's level, demand light; outlook is for low prices on new pack. California canned goods unchanged and quiet. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and in light demand.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged for the week, but there are predictions of lower prices, on the theory that the European demand will not be able to take all the surplus over our own consumption, which will mean more prunes to sell and lower prices. Peaches are easy, and the large peach and apple crops probably mean that they will continue to be easy for some time. Apricots dull and easy. Prices on new crop seeded raisins were named on Wednesday, on a basis of 67½ cents for fancy, f. o. b. coast and in a large way. This is about like last year and is not regarded as exceptionally high. The trade are not interested, however, because they bought rather freely of recently offered old freshly seeded raisins at a considerable lower price. Currants have slumped about 1½ cents, on the announcement of new supplies coming, and the price now averages 9½ cents in a large way.

Fish.

Mackerel shows little or no change. Prices are fair and available stock, both old and new, still scarce. Some new Norways are in sight, but they will go out at high prices until the situation as to shipping clears a little. Cod, hake and haddock, quiet at steady to firm prices. Domestic sardines are higher, so far as some packers' quotations are concerned; other packers quote unchanged. There are reports of more fish, in spite of the advances. Imported sardines are settling into a more definite basis. There are some Norwegians coming over, including considerable poor stuff, it is said. Salmon is unchanged. The demand at the opening prices has been large.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans have declined further, and can be bought on spot at around 10 cents per bushel cheaper than to come forward. The average price is around $3. Marrows are unchanged, very scarce and firm on a basis of $4.25, with growers asking 25 cents more for new beans. California limas on spot are steady at the decline reported last week. Futures are now priced on a basis which means about 6¾ cents delivered in Eastern markets in a large way. Earlier sales were made under 5 cents. The demand is light. New dried green peas are quoted at $2.15 in a large way, which is against $2.30 asked for spot stocks.

Butter.

The receipts of butter are about normal for the season, and prices are about on the same basis as a year ago. The consumptive demand is better this year, however. The quality arriving is about as usual, and the market is healthy. No important change seems in sight.

Eggs.

The consumptive demand for eggs is very good and the market is firm at unchanged prices. Some strictly high grade eggs are commanding 1 cent more than a week ago. The market is active and the consumptive demand good. Continued good trading is looked for without much change in prices.

Cheese.

Full cream cheese is steady and unchanged, with seasonable consumptive demand. The market is firm at present prices. Owing to very favorable weather, the quality arriving is very good. The usual consumptive demand is looked for.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged, with a good consumptive demand. Pure and compound lard are steady at a decline of ⅛ to ¼ cent, and with only a fair demand. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are unchanged with slightly decreased demand owing to the cool weather.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

There is very little doing here in the evaporated apple market. There is practically no carload business coming in, the only trading being on small orders from the jobbing trade, and this is very limited.

New crop apples are ready for shipment, but the stock is not netting over 4 cents to 4½ cents to the makers, and there is practically nothing in it for them to dry the apples at these prices. The dealers are asking 5¼ cents to 5½ cents for prime, in fifty-pound boxes, for October or November shipment, but very few orders are coming in, and speculators' ideas are considerably under this. Choice quality is held at half-cent over prime, and it is expected that the quality will be very good this year, as the evaporators are getting unusually good green apples from the farmers.

There is a steady undertone to the raspberry market, 20 cents to 20½ cents being asked f. o. b. in barrels.

C. C. HALL.

Rochester, N. Y.

Standard Canned Goods.

The unexpected has again happened in the tomato market. From a weak, declining market at the close of last week, there was a quick recovery based on unfavorable crop developments over Sunday, and on Monday morning there was a complete reversal of the situation. Everyone seemed to become bullish over night, and a big buying movement set in. Sellers in the week before became buyers to protect their contracts, and it was surprising to see how quickly the jobbers followed the market with orders to buy at the advanced prices. Then came a drop in the temperature from 90 degrees to 47 degrees in the city and still lower in the state, with a light frost, the first of the season, in some sections. There are usually two glut periods in raw tomatoes during the canning season, one late in August, and the other late in September or early in October, but there does not appear to be any chance or a glut this season at all. On the contrary, not a cannery in Baltimore could secure enough raw stock this week to operate the factory a full day. At this time in the season they generally carry over night enough stock to start up with the next morning. The prevailing conditions, however, do not mean that the canning season here is going to be anything like failure, for there is yet a fair chance that the tomato crop can "come back" provided there is warm seasonable weather from now on, and a long open fall without a killing frost in October. The average date for a killing frost in this section is October 10th to 15th.

Because of these conditions the market was active up to the close of the week, with indications of further activity next week. Probably the most significant feature this week was the increased buying by Western tomato canners, as well as by Western jobbers located in the heart of the canning sections. They do not come here to buy tomatoes unless they are not sure of their own crop. Taking the results of the season to date, in connection with the present outlook for the crop, as a fair criterion, it looks like there is a strong market ahead for tomatoes.

In the other lines of canned vegetables, corn continues to be the strongest article, and the existing conditions justify the expectations of a firm market for it during the winter months. String beans are firm with a steady demand, and the new crop of pole lima beans is smaller than was expected. Canned sweet potatoes are growing in popularity with the trade, and the demand for them is increasing. The buying of the other vegetables was less than in the week previous, but there is not a weak spot in the list.

Seconds peaches and pie peaches were fairly active this week, and the prices were firm. The fall season for pears is at hand, but the receipts of the fruit are light, and the growers report a small crop. There are larger receipts of apples, and it does not now look like there will be any shortage in the crop. The buying of them increased over last week. Blackberries was the only item in the list of small fruits that show any life this week, and they strong at the price. Because of the light stocks of canned fruits, especially for this time in the season, they are firm as to prices.

No interesting developments this week in cove oysters; dull but firm.

Rice.

Steadily, and more apparently, business is adjusting itself to the prevailing conditions and the general outlook points to continued improvement in the situation. The demand for the past week has been rather slow and prices have taken on a slightly easier tone. This fact would indicate somewhat larger volume of receipts of rough, which naturally reflects itself in a narrowing down of former price levels. In reality conditions continue about the same as the previous week, so that except on certain special grades there is no real change in the situation.

The heavy rains which covered the entire rice belt a week ago, have ceased so that the planters have been able to proceed again with the harvesting and though there has been no marked accumulation of rough, the market could be termed fairly steady.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic Coast, report slight improvement, but it is not expected that the demand will enlarge to any material extent until the offerings of cleaned are on a larger scale. At New Orleans the demand is fairly active but with an increase in the output of the mills in greater assortment, it is expected there will be a much heavier trade movement,

"SAUER'S FLAVORING EXTRACTS will add a new delight to your cakes, puddings and desserts—their fine flavor and strength come from absolute PURITY."

the tendency of which will be to keep the market reasonably steady.

In the interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, it is reported that the heavy rains of the past ten days have injured the crop to an appreciable degree, more especially as to color, and the advices are that the "white" styles are becoming scarce and are, therefore, held firm at full prices. Rough receipts are coming forward in considerably large volume and the planters are beginning to realize the importance of adjusting their prices to a lower basis in order to get prompt returns for their products.

D. TALMAGE'S SONS CO.

New York.

Imported Fish Specialties.

There is a fair demand for salt herrings of all kinds. Buyers are not stocking up, and are buying supplies only from hand to mouth. Prices are just about on the same level as they were before the war broke out, and show no advance whatever. This week the first shipment of new Iceland fat herring arrived, the quality of which proved very satisfactory. Prices are about the same as they were at the opening of the market last year.

The Norway mackerel has opened in a very peculiar way. Quotations differ from various shippers, and the prices seem to be changing several times a day. The great difficulty seems to be that while buyers are ready to buy, and while sellers are very anxious to sell. In Norway there seems to be some difficulty in getting transactions settled on account of the difficulty or remitting the money over there. Most of the shippers would like to have the money over there before they ship the goods, and this is connected with a great many difficulties and expenses. Some shipments of Norway mackerel have arrived here, but the quality so far has not been satisfactory. We understand that the first shipment of real, fine, fat mackerel will be in only this week. We anticipate a very good demand for the Norway mackerel, as soon as the first shipments of real, fine, fat stuff will arrive. Of course, we cannot look for any low prices on Norway mackerel this season, because the expenses of bringing them over here are much too high, and besides the catch, although we have no definite and positive information about it, is certainly very much smaller than it was last year.

After the excitement in the imported sardine market that we have had during the last few weeks, the market has settled down to a more quiet and normal basis. Prices are holding their own for the principal reason that stocks are very limited. Of French sardines, of course there is practically nothing to be had. Of Portuguese, there is enough to satisfy a hand to mouth demand, and none of the receivers seem to be anxious to dispose of their goods, because they have not any more than the trade will easily take unless a very large shipment would be forthcoming, and that is certainly not going to be the case. Sprats have been selling very much better during the last week than they have practically during the whole year, principally for the reason that stocks abroad are practically exhausted, and stocks here are very limited. Norwegian sardines are coming rather freely, but there is a whole lot of trash coming here. Naturally every one is trying to close out all they have, and amongst the cheaper class goods is some stuff coming that has been rejected by some parties, and it is now being shipped over here on account of the scarcity of the goods. Prices for good stuff are holding up very well, and there is no reason why there should be any decline in price, as the catch of sardines in Norway is really very poor. There have been some good catches way out North, but the principal packing center of Norway, which is Stavanger, has had very little fish, and the weather was too warm in Norway to allow transportation of those fish caught in the North down to Stavanger to be packed. Consequently, packers who have booked orders even at high prices are unable to execute them for lack of fish.

Then, also, a great many of the workmen have had to go to the front, and naturally, there is a shortage of hands in practically all the factories in Norway.

Aside from salt herring, we have received practically nothing in our line from Great Britain except a few barrels of mackerel. We have letters from our people in Belgium, advising us that the few cases of sardines which the government did not confiscate, could not be shipped out of the country, because Belgium has prohibited the export of all food stuffs. Consequently, no goods are coming from Belgium at the present time.

Spices.

The market is more active, with free buying of peppers, especially for consuming needs. The demand for spices during this and next month will be large and when the narrow stocks are considered prices are likely to advance.

Peppers.—The demand is good for both black and white peppers. Prices are generally firm, with acute scarcity for nearly all grades.

Cloves unchanged during the week, but very scarce. There is little on the way.

Pimento (Allspice) steady, better grades being in good demand.

Mace rather dull but steady. Prices unchanged.

Nutmegs very much firmer, with greatly reduced supplies. Higher prices are very probable.

Cassias.—Saigon scarce. Batavia very steady. China grades are dull and unchanged.

Gingers unchanged during the week and in only fair demand.

Green ginger root exceedingly scarce but in good demand. Additional supplies are expected before the close of the month.

Paprikas steady with somewhat firmer tone, due particularly to the uncertainty of new crop supplies.

MARKET NOTES.

Tomatoes keep about the same—30 to 60 cents per basket. Some very fine tomatoes have been coming forward, but the season is being shortened by the cool and dry weather. Cannery are paying 25 cents.

Sweet potatoes are doing better—55 to 60 cents, against 45 a short time ago. A year ago they were 35.

BEST FOR BABIES

Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk

Ever since 1857 Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has been the leader for nursery and household use. It is an ideal food for babies, being rapidly and completely digested by the infant stomach. Thousands of people, who as babies, were successfully reared upon Eagle Brand, have grown up to rear their own babies upon it, and use it also for table use because of its unequalled quality and purity. You have no article upon your shelves which has a better reputation with consumers than Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk, and none is more widely known. Recommend it to your customers, reminding them that every can is guaranteed to them.

Borden's Peerless Evaporated Milk

is the great standby of the American housewife for cooking and general household purposes. It is richer and better than most raw milk, adds a rich creaminess to gravies, soups and sauces; enriches and increases the food value as well as the flavor of every dish. All Borden's Brands, both sweetened and unsweetened, are made from the highest grade raw material, by the most modern method of manufacture, and are guaranteed absolutely pure.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

I feel like breaking into the regular criticism of advertising matter this week to say a word based on a statement made to me a few days ago by a retail merchant in a small New Jersey city of 10,000. He said he had been advertising regularly and steadily for nineteen years, but never in all that time had he received one order that he could positively trace to his advertising. How had he been advertising? In both the local newspapers, one of which was a daily, and in circulars of his own, issued every once in a while, averaging once a month at least. He said his business had steadily increased, and he laid that in part to the advertising, but he could trace nothing direct to it at all.

Of course there might have been several reasons for this. This man's advertising may have been paying him right along—paying him well. The orders he received may have been for the goods advertised, because of the advertising, but the buyers may not have mentioned the advertising. That very frequently happens—probably in the majority of cases, in fact. Where one buyer says "let me see that so-and-so you advertised this morning," perhaps a dozen will simply ask for what they want without anything more. So that the mere fact that he could not trace direct business is not necessarily controlling. If he had never received orders for any of the goods advertised, it would be a different matter, but of course he sold the advertised goods right along, and what part of that business came from advertising, and what part was regular, nobody can tell. The steady increase in his business is pretty good evidence that in one way or another the advertising was pulling.

Then again his advertising may not have been of a sort calculated to pull direct orders. A whole lot of advertising is not. Generally speaking, my experience is that no advertising that does not give prices can expect to pull direct business. It stops in its persuasiveness short of the point where the consumer is completely persuaded to go in and buy. He does not know what the goods are going to cost him, and he knows they may cost him more than he wants to pay. If he could know, he might find the price easily within his reach. It is a great and often a fatal mistake not to quote prices in an advertisement.

Another factor may have really been that his advertising was good enough but put out in the wrong way, the paper he advertised in may have been poorly patronized, or his circulars may have been badly printed on cheap paper; or they may have been carelessly distributed. You would hardly think such a course of carelessness would persist for twenty years, but I have known of cases where it has. Another thing is his advertising may have been badly written—not calculated to pull. I did not see any of it, and therefore cannot express an opinion as to whether this was the trouble or not.

Of one thing I am sure. If I had been advertising this long, and could not put my finger on a single cent's worth of business that I could credit to the advertising, I should get into the matter and find out the real truth. This is one of the cases where the services of a professional advertising man are sorely needed, I should say.

How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Again in Season!

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

When Your Boy Goes Back On You.

It seems to me that just about the toughest thing a fellow can have to stand is when his own boy goes back on him. That must be worse than having your wife go back on you, in a way. She was a sort of stranger and you took her in. But your boy—you built him out of the air, and when he turns against you and bites your hand—by George, it must be darned near the limit.

I've got a couple of kids, and if one of 'em ever did that to me, I think the old man would die.

I had a talk last week with an old fellow who's been a customer of mine ever since I went on the road. He was a good old man, as easy going as they make 'em, but with brains, don't forget that. I own up he was too easy going. He was so easy going that he was sort of on the edge all the time. You know what I mean—he didn't know where he was half the time, and was too kind of lazy to find out. I don't mean he was a loafer—nothing like it. He didn't have any system, that's the whole thing in a nutshell.

He's out of business now—been kicked out by his two boys. He was a good father, too—you could tell that by just hearing him talk to the boys in the store. Then I've known 'em for years and know all about 'em. I know he was a good father.

About four or five years ago these boys came into some money from their grandmother. They had it out in mortgages I believe at about 4 per cent.—that's all they pay in country towns—when the old man got tied up and needed money and they lent him about half of it at 6 per cent. They made him give 'em judgment notes for it, get that. Any difference between doing that and charging your mother interest? I don't see any. A fellow that will do either one of 'em will plumb near do anything, I say.

The old fellow's business methods didn't get any better. They never do unless something happens to change 'em. It's a sight easier falling down hill than it is climbing up. He was doing enough business to make a good living on, and there wouldn't have been a pin point of trouble if he had only got busy and managed better.

A couple of years after he borrowed the money he got all balled up so that some of his creditors were talking of coming down on him. He still owed the boys their money and hadn't even paid interest on it. What did they do but put up enough more money to get him out of his hole, get some more judgment notes for it, file 'em up in the county office and sell the old man out. They didn't exactly sell him out but they said they would if he didn't turn over the business and he did. Now he sits on his porch all day long reading the paper, living on a little money his wife had saved up. The wife wasn't the mother of these boys. The mother died and he took another wife. Maybe that had something to do with it, I don't know. He's sixty-eight years old.

Now I don't know whether the boys would let their father starve. Yes I do know too—of course they wouldn't. Nobody would do that. But he'll be a charity on 'em all the rest of his life, for he has nothing, and all his wife has is the little she saved; that'll only last 'em over the winter. He told me so himself.

He can't get anything to do. You know what a swell chance an old fellow sixty-eight years old has to land a job. Maybe he could put up a job at $6 a week, but that ain't going to keep him.

He told me the whole thing. The stepmother would have bit the tongue of the boys if she could—she blames her for the whole thing. He didn't seem sore—he was simply kind and sorry. He says the boys were right in a way.

You know there never was anything that didn't have two sides to it. These boys have got a side, a would be all right—I suppose—the old fellow wasn't their father. Seems as if that ought to make me difference.

I was talking about the case with another customer up there, saying that a pity it was and all. And I did a few things about the boys, too.

"Oh they weren't so much to blame," he said. "They told me their side. All the people that know about the case say it was the only thing they could do. If they hadn't put up more money the old man would have gone into bankruptcy, for his creditors would have put him up. They couldn't afford to put up the money without getting something for it and they couldn't afford to lose what they'd already lent him. If they'd let the editors sell him out there couldn't have been a cent, so they had to put up more to save what they had in. Then they took over the business and out of that they gradually work out."

"But the old fellow was their father," I said. "Good Lord, are you supposed to treat your father as an ordinary man? He's been a good father to those boys." "Well," he said, "they looked at it as business."

That may be all right, but it don't seem much different from charging your father for his dinner when he comes to your house to see the baby. That would be business, too, wouldn't it?

Here is a letter the editor sends to me:—

Ansonia, Conn., Sept. 14, 1914.
Mr. Stroller.

Dear Sir:—What do you think of this? A certain grocer of this city gave out this statement that because of the war prices had advanced on sugar and flour, but as long as his present liberal stock lasted he would not do so. He owned sugar at $4.40, was selling 4½ pounds for 25 cents, 9 pounds for 50 cents, 19 pounds for $1.00. His 25-cent sales became fewer and far between; everybody bought sugar. One dame who owed him $17.40 paid $2.25 on account and bought $2.00 worth of sugar. About ten days cleaned up his sugar and he bought on the market at $7.50, and he cut his 25-cent package to 3 pounds, his $1.00 lot 12 pounds and his customers called him a fraud and liar because he raised his price. The dame with the bill mentioned above took her cash and went where she could buy 3½ pounds for 25 cents, and branded him a social outcast.

Yours,
T. V. WENTWORTH.

Well all I got to say is this: that any grocer that would pass along a good thing like 4½ pounds of sugar for a quarter, to a woman who was back in her bill, without making her square up, is a plumb chump. What he ought to have said to her was, "here Mrs. Jones I'm doing my trade a big favor by selling sugar at the old prices, for the market is way up. I don't think you ought to ask me to do it for you unless you pay up." If she wouldn't square up, all right—no cheap sugar.

I've got another thing to say, too—if that fellow had handled the thing right his trade would never have called him a fraud and a liar. Everybody knew sugar was high and he ought to have put this ad. right in the papers or on his circulars: "Sugar is way up. Price today so much. As long as my stock lasts I will sell at the old figures." Think that later, when his stock was gone and he advertised "My sugar's all gone; had to buy more; paid ———; my price ———," that anybody but a blamed hog would have knocked him?

What the War Will Do For American Nuts.

California Authority on the Subject Says Our Home Supply of Walnuts and Almonds Will Not be Half Enough to Supply the American Demand. Prices Sure to be Sensationally High.

It is very plain to see from the statistics furnished by the Treasury Department to what extent consumers in the United States are dependent upon Europe for their supply of walnuts and almonds, and the effect the present troubles abroad must have upon the distribution and prices of these two commodities. California is the only State in the Union producing either, what are known to the trade as English walnuts or almonds in commercial quantities, and apparently crop prospects in that State are fully up to normal, the quantity being estimated at about 10,000 tons of walnuts and 1,600 tons of almonds. As the quantity of walnuts consumed in the United States averages about 25,000 tons one can easily see to what extent they are dependent upon our friends across the water. France is just now the seat of one of the most gigantic struggles in history and it is hardly probable that she will have sufficient labor to harvest her present crops,

Increase Your Business

Intensive retailing presupposes the elimination of waste sales-effort. It does away with the lost time and lost sales resulting from old-time erroneous ideas of selling something that customers do not want.

The modern idea—the efficiency selling-plan—is to sell customers just what they ask for. The public knows, has confidence in, asks for and buys advertised goods.

National Biscuit Company products have become the standard the country over. People have confidence in them—know them, like them, buy them by the millions of packages.

N. B. C. products increase retail-sales-efficiency—they simplify sales-effort—they make business good for every grocer who sells them.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

and if the struggle continues for any length of time it is hardly probable that should harvesting be possible any goods can be shipped.

It is reported that France has already placed an embargo upon the export of all food products. Walnuts have during the past ten years become almost a necessity in the average American household and prices the highest on record are possible.

The growers producing this product in California are very closely associated through local organizations and alive to the situation, and as the naming of prices is absolutely in their hands it is only natural that they should desire to get full value for their product, as they are well posted on the foreign situation. It is expected prices will be named within the next three weeks and they are being awaited by the trade with interest. So far as almonds are concerned the proportion produced in California as compared to the consumption is relatively less than walnuts, and the prices already established by the producers in California are the highest in the history of the almond industry and compare favorably with the highest that ever ruled on imported high grade paper shells.

Unfortunately the area in which walnuts and almonds can be produced successfully and profitably is limited even on the Pacific Coast, and while this is being extended as fast as possible, it will be many years, if ever, before production will equal consumption.

Plums are ruling at about the usual price 20-30 cents per grape basket. The demand would probably be larger if sugar were cheaper.

CCLXXVII.—A Beneficent Legal Principle as to Selling Stolen Property.

One of the most beneficent principles of the law, in my judgment, is that which says that nobody who buys stolen property gets title to it. In other words, no matter how many hands it goes through, if it was stolen in the beginning, the owner can always claim it no matter where he finds it. The foundation theory is that nobody can convey a title which he does not own, and where a piece of property is stolen not one of the persons through whose hands it subsequently may pass had any title to it, and therefore couldn't convey any. Every successive sale was void, and the owner can claim his property from the thirtieth buyer just as legally as he could from the original thief.

This principle works out in all sorts of protective ways. Not long ago a retailer who uses a considerable number of delivery wagons had one stolen. The driver was out with it delivering goods and left it standing in the street while he went into some neighboring houses to deliver goods. A passing negro stole it, drove it some distance, took the horse out of the shafts and rode it to a nearby establishment where dead animals are converted into fertilizer. He told a story about the horse belonging to his brother, and having vertigo so frequently that his brother had decided to get rid of him. He wanted him killed. The concern bought him for $5 and at the negro's request killed him on the spot and at once converted his carcass into the various products in which they dealt. The horse was twelve years old, sound, kind and worth about $200.

A little later the negro was arrested, and when the case had been sifted out, the owner of the horse made demand upon the fertilizer plant for $200, the value of the horse. The concern started to excuse itself on the ground that it was deceived by the negro, that it had no reason to believe the story false, that it had not been negligent, and so on and so on. Its own lawyer, however, told it that none of those contentions had anything to do with the case. The only point was that the negro had no title to the horse and the fertilizer concern therefore got no title from him. They therefore destroyed another man's property, and must account to him for its fair value. Finally they accepted this view, but claimed that the horse was not worth $200, and that controversy is still going on. All parties now agree that the fertilizer plant must pay whatever is the fair value of the horse.

Not long ago I saw the ending of a somewhat similar fight over a cash register. It had been stolen from the original owner by a burglar who had broken into his store. The burglar had sold it somewhere, it had been sold again and again, and finally when the owner succeeded in locating it, it was in the hands of its fourth holder since the burglary. This was a small shoe dealer who had bought it cheap, and in perfect good faith, being wholly ignorant of the theft.

The owner made demand upon the shoe dealer for the return of the register, but the demand was refused, on the ground that the shoe dealer had paid good money for it, without knowing its history. He finally agreed to return it, provided the owner would refund the money he had paid. This was declined and the owner then replevined the register and started suit. His whole case was based on the principle that a seller of stolen property can convey no title to it, and on this principle first the lower court and the Appeal Court decided the case against the shoe dealer. He had nothing at all, except the argument that as he had bought the register in good faith, not knowing of the theft, he should be protected at least to the extent of compelling the owner to refund the money he had paid. Nowhere did his argument receive any consideration, and at last he lost the register and the money he paid for it.

Just here is a lesson not to buy such things from strangers, or persons who cannot show a clear title from the original seller.

The only exception to this rule that the holder of stolen property can convey no title to it is in the case of money. If I steal some bank notes from the owner and pass them to a storekeeper, or to somebody who gives me good consideration for them, the owner cannot recover them from the storekeeper. That is because money, by the necessities of its use, passes absolutely from hand to hand—it is in quite a different position from ordinary personal property.

Promissory notes, checks and other negotiable paper are also covered by the rule. If I make a note or draw a check and lock it in my desk, and the desk is robbed and the note or check taken, I can always avoid paying it, on the ground that I never delivered it to anybody, and the person who did, stole it and therefore conveyed no title.

(Copyright, September, 1914, by Elton J. Buckley.)

Question: T. J. Critchlow, Prospect, Penn.—A woman customer of ours desired to borrow $50 of our local banker and requested me to go on the note for 90 days, which I did. This woman was guardian for a son by her first husband and it was in connection with this business that she borrowed the money, the second husband having nothing at all to do with the transaction.

Sometime within the ninety days for which the note was drawn the woman asked the rural mail carrier to go to the bank and lift the note for her, saying she would give him the money later. The mail carrier lifted the note, that is, he paid the banker the money out of his own pocket and received the note which the banker did not mark paid or transfer to him or inform me that the note had been turned over to the mail carrier. This all happened about four years ago, the woman having died about a year ago without having paid the mail carrier the money. I did not know one thing of this transaction, having thought all along that the note had been duly cancelled. About a week ago the banker told me that the mail carrier had tried to have the woman's husband pay the money but the husband would have nothing to do with it. Now the mail carrier wants me to settle and state that he mentioned the matter to me about the time of the woman's death, but I maintain this to be untrue, as he never said a word about it to the best of my knowledge.

The question is, who is the "goat"?

Answer.—My opinion is that you are not liable here, on the facts you state them. When the postman took up this note he became a regular holder of it, in due course, for value received. He is in the position of having bought it, in other words, and if it was an ordinary note the bank made a good delivery when it simply handed the note to him.

When the note came due it was the holder's duty to present it for payment to the woman who made it. Whether he did that you do not say, but even if he did, it was his duty to do something more if it was not paid. It was his duty to notify you, the endorser, at once. This he evidently did not do, and his failure to do it releases you from responsibility. Even if he notified you when the woman died it was about three years too late.

I am assuming that when you signed you "went on" the note, you meant that the woman signed it and you endorsed it.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Yes! the convention was a hummer.

Mr. Smedley expects in the near future to assist in stirring up life in the association at Chambersburg.

The Lock Haven association carried the $500 award back to Lock Haven and exhibited in the window of the president's store. It created a sensation. Later there was a monster meeting of the association and the gold was seen and handed by the members. This association has taken into membership two merchants since the convention.

On September 17th the association celebrated its victory with a baseball game between the business men and professional men of Lock Haven. The proceeds from the game will be donated to the Lock Haven Hospital. Eighty-three members of the Lock Haven association attended the convention. One of the delegates says that nothing but death will keep him away from the Meadville convention.

H. J. Loeb, delegate from Punxsutawney, was much interested in the "Buy at Home" campaign and will work hard to impress this spirit on the Punxsutawney association. Loeb is a live wire.

Organizer I. L. Smith, of New Castle, reports that he has six towns in his end of the State ready for organization and that they will affiliate with the State association about October 10th.

Now! everybody all over the State work together for the Pennsylvania Plan. If you have been indifferent up to this time shake off the lethargy and do the best you know how to reciprocate the help extended you by the following manufacturers:—

Frankling Sugar Refining Co., Franklin Carton Sugar.

Borden's Condensed Milk Co., Condensed Milk.

Make up your mind that your association will win one of the awards next year. You can do it if you go about it intelligently and with determination.

Organizer Smedley is ready to serve any association in the State whether affiliated with the State body or not. Get your application for a date in early. Make up your mind to have a real revival of association interest.

The Legislature will meet in January, 1915. Now is the time for preparatory work. We want several things from the law makers, the chief ones being a garnishee law and the repeal of the mercantile tax law. Get busy.

The Erie Business Men's Association has admitted a number of new members during the past month.

The membership of the State association was increased 68 per cent. last year. We want to double it during this year.

Mr. Smedley was the guest of the Jersey Shore business men on September 16th, the occasion being the first outing of this live organization. The picnic was complimentary to the members, their families and all the clerks of the town. The outing was held at Nippono Park, a most beautiful spot, and special trolley cars conveyed the guests there accompanied by a band of 45 pieces. Arriving at the park athletic contests were indulged in, after which supper was served. About 400 were present. After the supper President Westpfal introduced Mr. Smedley, who made a short address. Mr. Westpfal responded, also Mr. Paul, who represented the clerks, and Mr. Tower, secretary of the association. Mr. Smedley was presented with a loving cup as a reminder of the occasion and the president with a horn, which he promises to toot for Jersey Shore. It was a delightful occasion. Jersey Shore is boosting its membership and will work hard to secure an award under the Pennsylvania Plan at the next convention.

The Williamsport Grocers' Association has voted to affiliate with the State association. This is the first fruit of the convention.

Putting Sugar in Bags is Factory Work

just as much as canning vegetables or bottling ketchup. You keep a STORE to SELL goods, not a FACTORY to PACK them. All your time should be spent in "doing things that pay" and it DOESN'T pay you to put up sugar.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is ready to sell when you get it. All you have to do is to take the CARTONS out of the CONTAINER in which they are packed and put them on your shelf. And FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is ALWAYS ready to sell, ready to hand out to customers, as convenient for you as canned or bottled goods. The FRANKLIN CARTON enables you to make a positive profit instead of a loss on sugar sales because you save bags, twine and labor, and there is no loss from overweight. You can make this profit on all your sugar sales, because we pack all fast selling grades in the FRANKLIN CARTON, including FRANKLIN GRANULATED, FRANKLIN CUBE (Dainty Lumps), FRANKLIN DESSERT & TABLE, FRANKLIN POWDERED and FRANKLIN XXXX CONFECTIONERS' sugars.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGARS in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

THE FRANKLIN SUGAR REFINING COMPANY PHILADELPHIA

"Your customers know FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is CLEAN sugar"
FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is guaranteed full weight and refined CANE sugar

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"We are now selling the famous FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, known everywhere for its purity and quality. The carton keeps the sugar clean and dry and it won't burst in handling and let the sugar get mixed up with the rest of your order."

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Written for the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Now That Foreign Olive Oil is Scarce and Dear, Push Our Own Oil

California Writer Contends That California Olive Oil is Better Any Way Than the Foreign, Because It's Purer, Richer and Generally Speaking, a More Uniform and Scientific Product.

The interfering with the importation of all goods by the present European conflict should be a subject of serious consideration. None of us appreciated that we are as largely dependent upon foreign countries for supplies as this war has suddenly brought us to realize. France being one of the principals in the war, has also been one of the largest exporters of olive oil in Europe, which source of supply is entirely removed, and the other Mediterranean countries are more or less hampered in shipping the product out on account of lack of boats and the interference of hostile ships, consequently the importation of olive oil is greatly handicapped with some likelihood of its being stopped entirely. The force of the axiom that "Necessity is the mother of invention" is again demonstrated in our search for an olive oil that is available and one that at the same time will give the consuming public the degree of satisfaction they demand.

It seems there has been a common belief that the olive oil manufactured and imported into this country from the Mediterranean districts is a better olive oil than it is possible to produce at home. The question naturally arises at this time more forcefully than any other whether there is a reason for such a belief. A study of the actual conditions in both countries might prove exactly the reverse of the common impression.

Let us for a moment look into the conditions surrounding the growing of the olives and the manufacturing of the olive oil in the old countries and we find that while there is an immense acreage of olives in those countries, the average production per acre is about one-half ton. The olives in these countries for most part are cared for by the small rural inhabitant who follows the ancient custom of his fathers and forefathers in the care of the trees, seldom, if ever, adopting any of the new or improved methods for arriving at better results for which the American people are noted.

Harris N. Cookingham wrote under date of July 23, 1914, from Seville, Spain, saying "The crop promised well but has been dwindling as a result of the dropping of the young fruit and the damage wrought by the olive fly, which has again appeared in certain zones of this Consular district."

By following the Government reports, it will be found that this fly works on the olive to a more or less extent every year throughout almost the entire olive producing sections of Europe, consequently the next step in our consideration should be whether this fly's work results in a condition of the fruit that would make it responsible as to whether the quality would be good or bad. By referring to the records of the United States Department of Agriculture, Notice of Judgment 818, we find that a quantity of olives was seized, examined and condemned on account of the fact that they were found to be decayed and wormy, which condition was brought about, no doubt, as a result of the olive fly. When it comes to the harvesting of the fruit, it will be found that in European countries large volumes of the olive oil are manufactured by the crude methods used a thousand years ago, further demonstrating the fact that new and improved methods which would naturally result in a superior product have not been adopted.

Consul Benjamin F. Chase reports as follows from Leghorn, Italy: "Treated inferior olive oil is produced in Italy. Some of this oil is received at the free port in Leghorn and pays no duty. There it is alleged to be mixed with Lucca oil and the whole sold as pure Lucca olive oil. Some is said to be taken direct to Lucca and other places in this district and mixed with genuine Lucca oil and the whole put out as grown in Tuscany and manufactured in Lucca. An authority on oil production here says 100 pounds of olives will produce 7.70 to 8.20 pounds of oil on the first and second pressings. These have been the only oils heretofore considered fit for human consumption. This would indicate a production of about 12,000,000 pounds of oil. At least one-third of the production is consumed in Italy, leaving 8,000,000 pounds of Lucca oil for export. The exports to the United States during 1913 were 10,292,000 pounds."

It will be noticed the above Consular report shows there is 2,292,000 pounds more Lucca oil shipped to the United States alone out of the Lucca district after the home consumption is supplied than is produced there, besides the large quantities shipped to other countries, which is only accounted for by the fact that inferior oils are shipped into the district, treated and blended with the better olive oils and shipped out again.

We will pause for a moment for a few words relative to the effect the treatment has upon the oil and we find that authorities on the subject agree that the treatment removes the bad characteristics of the oil, but at the same time it removes the good qualities of the olive oil, leaving it without flavor or food qualities, so that in order that it might be marketed it is necessary to blend it with some high grade oil containing food values, thus reducing the quality of the good oil by blending it with the treated oil in order to increase the quantity.

A further examination of the records kept by the Government at Washington reveals the fact that all of the fines inflicted for the mixing of cottonseed oil with olive oil and selling the mixture as an olive oil has been upon the imported products.

We will now pass along to the domestic olive oil of the United States which is produced almost exclusively in the States of California and Arizona, and we find in the first place that for the most part the orchards are planted out in a scientific manner and in such a way as to permit the highest state of cultivation, a result of which is that it is not an uncommon occurrence for an acre of olives to produce three tons per acre, and sometimes much more. The olive fly which prevails in Europe is unknown in the United States and our authorities at Washington have for many years taken precaution against any likelihood of the pest being transferred to our shores, and so far success is a result of the efforts and we have in consequence a record that a wormy olive in this country has never been known. The most improved machinery is found in our domestic olive mills that handles the fruit in such a manner as to avoid a condition that would produce low grade olive oil, and in consequence of which the results have been the low grade oils produced in the above named States have been a very small percentage of the total. Taking into consideration the conditions as we have outlined them would it not be reasonable to believe the domestic oil is more suitable for our human consumption than the imported, which combined with the fact that our money stays at home, should be sufficient reason for our adopting it.

The chance that a professional politician has in the position of Sealer of Weights and Measures—and all the positions of Sealers—are filled by politicians—is seen in what happened to William J. Leary, who has for several months been Sealer of Weights and Measures in Chester, Pa. Leary was ousted from office by the Mayor of Chester last Tuesday for malfeasance. The case grew out of a prosecution brought by Leary against a number of Chester bakers on the charge of not complying with the law of the weight of bread sold by the loaf. According to the evidence the defendants, in information received by Leary, were arraigned before Alderman Stockman, were fined. Samuel Oblesby, one of the defendants, entered an appeal, which was sustained by Delaware County courts. It was further stated in the testimony that the fines were not returned to the prosecuted bakers. Cassius M. Lewis, a wholesale grocer, one of the principal witnesses, testified that Leary and Maguire came to his store and examined the scales, which, he alleges, were broken by the inspectors. He also alleged that Leary's assistant was intoxicated.

We Can Make Most Cheeses as Well as the Foreigners

Government Calling Attention of the Trade to the Remarkable Chance Which the War Has Furnished to Push American Cheeses. American Limburger Already Has the Market and Swiss, Camembert and Other Varieties Could Also.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

September 25, 1914.

American cheese makers are being urged by the United States Department of Agriculture to take advantage of the present excellent opportunity to establish a reputation for their products that will outlive the present disturbance in international commerce. European cheeses have long been popular in this country, and it is a popular belief that they cannot be equalled by the domestic product. For example, in the fiscal year ending June 30th a total of 63,784,313 pounds of cheese were imported into this country. It is not yet possible to say to what extent this trade will be interfered with by the war, but it is certain that the imports for the current year will be much less than they have been in the past.

There is no reason why some of this deficiency cannot be made good at home if the farmers will furnish the milk. Already American cheeses have been made which rank, in the opinion of experts, fully as high as foreign cheeses of the same class. The popular preference for the imported products, however, has hitherto prevented these cheeses from selling on their own merits in competition with European produce.

One of the most striking instances of this is limburger cheese. In quality and price American cheese of the limburger type long ago drove its foreign rival out of the market. Practically no foreign limburger has been imported into this country for many years. Many consumers, however, have clung to the belief that they were eating a foreign cheese. There is no reason at all why they should not now know that the American product is exactly as good as the foreign. Moreover, now that some of the more expensive types of highly flavored foreign cheeses are not likely to reach us for a long time, the demand for domestic limburger should be greatly increased. The market thus created should remain a good one long after the present conditions have been remedied; for once the consumer becomes accustomed to the American product he is not likely to abandon it for a more expensive foreign one which is no more satisfactory.

Much the same is true of cheeses of the kind popularly described as Swiss. Cheese of this variety is made exactly as well at home as abroad. In the past, it is true, American makers have been confronted by several difficulties, but government investigations have solved many of these problems and it is now possible for expert cheese makers to turn out Swiss cheese of uniformly high quality.

Camembert has been made in America with some success already. This variety has suffered more, however, from actual opposition by the promoter of the imported article than other kinds. Camembert is ripened quickly and reaches the consumer within a month of manufacture. This is therefore an opportunity for the American maker freed from competition to sell his article and by the fuller opportunity to work his factory, to perfect his method to such a degree as to hold that market when competition returns. Though more perishable than Cheddar, Swiss and some other varieties, this should not prove to be a serious obstacle to increasing the output, for Camembert of the best quality always commands a good price.

In addition to Camembert there are a number of other fancy foreign cheeses which are popular here and which could doubtless be imitated successfully by American cheese makers after a little experimental work. Among these varieties are Edam, Gouda, Parmesan, Roquefort, Stilton and Gorgonzola. Although there seems to be no reason why such cheeses should not be made in the United States, they do not, in the opinion of experts, offer at the present time the most promising field for American cheese makers. For the present at least it would probably be better for them to encourage the demand for standard types, such as Cheddar, Swiss, limburger, pineapple, etc. The field for Cheddar is particularly promising because of the fact that the flavor of this cheese, while always distinctive, can nevertheless be made to vary widely. This variation enables it to act as a substitute for a number of other varieties. In short, the experts in the Department of Agriculture are confident that with care and foresight at the present time the American producers will do much to place American cheeses on a permanent equality with the European varieties and sweep away a prejudice that has held back the industry in the past.

As long as the general public believes that the imported product is necessarily the best, the tendency on the part of the American manufacturer is inevitably to turn out goods that will sell because of the low price, not because of their high quality.

The best way to remedy this condition of affairs and to make friends for domestic cheeses of foreign type is for American makers to label their products frankly as American goods. This will give the consumers an opportunity to compare our best home-made products with the imported article. The result will be the removal of a longstanding prejudice and an added incentive for manufacturers to improve the quality of their products. It is thought that this can be done and the price still kept below the necessarily demanded for imported cheese. But any temporary advantage gained by the present situation cannot be maintained unless American cheese makers work for quality of their products. Eventually they will again be obliged to compete with Europeans who for generations have looked upon cheesemaking as a fine art.

THINGS DONE, DOING AND UNDONE

No. 17.

ERIE, PA.

Thought for To-day—"Nix on the war talk. This place is neutral."

Friday Night—You are invited to attend a free public lecture under the auspices of the Board of Education in the High School Auditorium. Dr. C. A. Prosser, secretary of the National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education, will speak on "Vocational Training." It is expected that he will devote a portion of his remarks to educational work on salesmanship and store management. Our committee, S. A. Drake, A. M. Cassel and P. E. Breese, are to arrange a series of talks on that line this winter. Go and hear Dr. Prosser. Admission free. Everybody welcome.

Monday Noon—The Committee of One Hundred will meet in the dining room at the Reed House from 12:15 to 1:30 p. m. Luncheon is fifty cents. Give your orders to the secretary before 10 a. m. Monday, please. We will have a short session, and at 1 o'clock transportation will be provided to the new building of the Bell Telephone Company, where there will be an exhibit of the facilities provided to the public and a moving picture show. All members of the Exchange who are unable to attend the noon luncheon are invited to meet the Committee of One Hundred at the building of the Bell Telephone Company on West Ninth street, shortly after 1 p. m.

Tuesday Evening—The regular monthly meeting of the Advisory Council will be held at the Exchange rooms in the Lincoln building on Tuesday evening, September 22d, from 8 to 10 o'clock. Every member is invited to be present. Several important committees will report. The secretary will submit for your consideration plans for a thorough reorganization calculated to make the Exchange the best organization of its kind in existence. Plan to attend this meeting.

State Convention—Theodore Landsberg responded to the address of welcome at Philadelphia and was appointed on the most important committee—the Resolutions Committee. He was elected third vice president of the State Association in a field of eight candidates—four to be elected. A. A. Schutte, who formerly held that office, served on the election committee. C. M. Weasels of Philadelphia, who maintains membership in this organization for the C. M. Weasels Company, was presented with a gold watch by the delegates. A. M. Howes was re-elected state secretary, and was also elected secretary of the Mercantile Secretaries' Association of Pennsylvania. The State Association made an increase of 62 per cent.

in membership this year. Seven hundred members registered at the convention, compared with two hundred at Warren last year. The Erie Exchange won ninth prize, $100 in gold, under the Pennsylvania Plan. The Erie Retail Grocers' Association were tenth and received $75 in gold. Those present from Erie were: Theodore Landsberg, A. A. Schutte and wife, Peter Leemhuis, Louis Galmish, J. C. Frye, C. Bloeser and wife, Conrad Klein, A. M. Howes and wife, A. G. Kuhl and wife, M. L. Lynch, C. J. Pohle, W. A. Bull and Z. E. Kingsley. It's Meadville next year.

Opposed to the Tax—Our Committee of One Hundred took a decided stand against any tax on freight rates at a regular meeting last Monday.

Wintering Boats in Erie Harbor—C. F. Hummel, Frank J. Tollen and Louis Galmish are a committee with power to promote the wintering of boats in Erie harbor. Invitations have been issued to twenty-six owners and companies operating boats on the Great Lakes. It is expected that our committee will go to Cleveland in the near future for a meeting with representatives of many of these firms in person. The harboring of these boats in our bay will mean the spending of thousands of dollars in Erie that would otherwise go to other ports.

Hallowe'en Celebration—Louis Galmish, C. P. Cody and J. C. C. Patterson are a committee with power to promote a Hallowe'en celebration on the evening of October 31st. It is proposed to have a Mardi Gras festival at night like that held during Perry week last year.

Round Table—The Reed House is constructing in its new dining room a Round Table for the use of our Committee of One Hundred, which will be thrown open to the public for the first time on Hallowe'en.

Memorial Arch—We are investigating the unexpended balance on account of Perry Day celebration, and Hon. A. E. Sisson has been invited to meet with us and expound what needs to be done in order to secure the expenditure of this money in Erie at once. Some of our members are of the opinion that unless plans are laid for the spending of this money at once that the appropriation will revert to the state and be lost to us.

Automobile Regulations—Louis Galmish suggested that instead of stopping automobiles on State street at crossings when street cars stop to take on and let off passengers that the automobiles be permitted to continue in motion slowly, keeping about six feet away from the street cars. This is done in Philadelphia and Cleveland, and a committee of three is being provided to take this up with the Erie Motor Club and the mayor.

Advertising Endorsement—The Truth, a second-class publication, applies for advertising endorsement. Classified Business Directory, William M. Rohm, proprietor, applies for endorsement.

Lost, Strayed or Stolen—Our Committee on New Government Building, Hon. F. D. Schultz, chairman. Committee on House Numbering, Arthur K. Brown, chairman. Trolley Affairs, James B. Yard, chairman; Public Dock Improvement, W. B. Converse, chairman; Welcoming New Comers, Mrs. M. Douglas, chairman; Regulating Auction Sales, P. A. Goodenough, chairman; Convention Bureau, Wm. T. Johnson, chairman; Sidewalk to Four Mile Creek, G. L. Pratt, chairman; Good Roads, H. C. Trest, chairman. A reward is offered for their discovery. If they do not put in an appearance soon we shall have to can them and appoint new chairmen.

If one of them reads this notice, he is expected to report progress at our meeting on Monday, September 21st at the Reed House, or at Advisory Council meeting in the Lincoln Building on Tuesday evening, September 22d. Get busy.

Study of Peace—Marcus Cohen has been appointed chairman of a committee of three to draft resolutions urging the study of peace in the public schools.

Marine Insurance—S. A. Drake has been appointed chairman of a committee of three to investigate the subject of Marine Insurance, and report at a meeting of the Committee of One Hundred.

Parcels Post Extension—J. C. C. Patterson has been appointed chairman of a committee of three to prepare resolutions indicating the attitude of the Exchange on parcels post extension and the express business. It is expected that mail notice will be given each member before they are acted upon by the Committee of One Hundred.

Moving Ordinances—J. C. Frye has been appointed chairman of a committee to which has been referred copies of the moving ordinances in force at Louisville, Ky., and Dayton, Ohio. Much money is lost to our members through removal of customers who leave no trace behind them. In a number of cities drivers are required to report to the department of public safety the correct names and addresses of all persons having goods moved indicating the point from which removal is made and the destination.

The circular of which the above is a copy is issued weekly by the Erie, Pa., Business Men's Exchange. It is reproduced here because it fairly radiates with the energy and activity which ought to animate live association. Nobody can read this circular half through without realizing that the Erie Business Men's Exchange is alive and has red blood in it. Without doubt it accomplishes much by reason of that.

Help us make the Grocer the family Milkman

Everyone of your customers now pays the milk peddler $3.00 per month (some pay much more) which ought to go to you. You must supply their sugar and get very little profit out of it. There is no reason why you shouldn't supply their milk for you can give them better service—and clean, sweet, pure milk—and you can make money doing it. You can switch the milk trade to your store by building up a sale on

CARNATION MILK

From Contented Cows

Your customers will like it in their cooking and baking.

And you will find it easier to switch your customers to evaporated milk if you offer them Carnation Milk. Our advertising is educating people to use evaporated milk—it is turning into the grocer's cash drawers the money now paid the milk peddler. You can help the good work along. When a customer asks for evaporated milk, give her Carnation, the brand that will please her and bring her back for more. Your jobber carries it.

Business Interests Launch Unique Plan to Extricate South From Cotton Dilemma

War Kills Foreign Demand For Cotton and Leaves South With Large Over Supply. Scheme is for Individual Business Men to "Buy a Bale" Each, at Ten Cents Per Pound.
Leading Manufacturing and Wholesale Firms Discuss Plans.

A most unique plan to extricate the South from the dilemma it has been plunged into by reason of the collapse of its foreign demand for cotton, due to the war, has taken shape among the business interests of the country and is commended to the favorable consideration of the readers hereof. It involves the purchase by thousands of individual business men all over the country, of a single bale of cotton at 10 cents per pound. It is argued that this will not only absorb much of the surplus unsold cotton, but will net the buyer a handsome return, as it is predicted that cotton will be worth 12 cents by spring. The main object is to supply immediate funds for the growers and holders of cotton.

The Quaker Oats Co., which is deeply interested in the plan, has sent this paper the following statement on the subject:—

The Quaker Oats Co. desires to show in some substantial way its eagerness to co-operate with the merchants and business interests of the South toward assisting in the relief of the present cotton congestion.

We can think of no better way to show our appreciation of the large and growing business which the merchants and consumers of the South have given us than to join heartily in the "Buy-a-Bale-of-Cotton" movement.

We have given instructions to-day to the managers of all of our Southern sales offices, also to all of our traveling salesmen, to all of our brokers and all other Southern sales representatives—to buy a bale of cotton for our account.

Each man will buy one bale at 10 cents per pound.

This letter, therefore, which is a duplicate of a letter sent to each of our representatives, will be your authority for purchasing, for the account of the Quaker Oats Co., one bale of cotton, to grade middling or better, at 10 cents per pound, delivered warehouse. You will use good judgment as to your manner of placing this order, and will pay the cotton for delivery at some reliable local warehouse, whose receipt cannot be questioned, and you may make or instruct the seller to make draft upon us at Chicago for the value of said cotton, warehouse receipt to be attached to the draft upon us.

There is another way in which we are lending our aid toward increasing the domestic consumption of cotton. We are very large manufacturers of such products as meal, grits, flour, cereals in bulk form, much of which by long custom has heretofore been shipped in jute bags. We have largely been able, on such commodities, to substitute cotton sacks instead of jute, and last week, in view of existing conditions, we placed a large contract for cotton feed bags, 1,000,000 of which are for immediate delivery, to be substituted in place of jute bags.

Other large houses are also manifesting an interest, among them R. C. Williams & Co., the New York wholesale grocers, who have sent the following communication to their customers everywhere:—

The South needs our assistance and it is our duty to help. Of all the crops in the United States, cotton is the only one selling below the cost of production.

To the farmers of the North, wheat, corn, oats and all other farm products are bringing almost record prices, and we are all sharing in this prosperity.

Now you can help. By the cash purchase of one bale of cotton you will relieve the distress of one poor cotton farmer who needs cash and who cannot ship his big staple on account of the war.

Will you send us your order? We will buy at no cost to you and deliver you a negotiable warehouse receipt. Cotton is cheap, you will make a safe investment. Buy now and help our Southern farmers and merchants.

Current Cranberry Crop Better Than Last Year.

The Cape Cod cranberry crop for 1914 is estimated by a United States Department of Agriculture field agent from replies of growers to be 8 to 12 per cent. larger than that of last year. The Cape Cod Cranberry Growers' Association estimates the crop at 16 per cent. larger, which would indicate 380,222 barrels. Figures for previous years, of total shipments in barrels, were furnished by a large cranberry firm and are believed to be substantially correct, viz.: 1910, 287,000; 1911, 273,000; 1912, 327,000; 1913, 327,778. The export trade in American cranberries is very small, only a limited quantity having been shipped each fall to Europe, mainly for consumption by Americans residing in London, Paris, Berlin and a few other leading cities.

Plans For Fighting War Taxes on Wines, Gasoline and Tobacco Dealers "Not Otherwise Classified." Latter Would Tax Every Grocery Store and Every Barber Shop That Sells Tobacco $4.80. "Buy a Bale" Cotton Movement Progressing Steadily. To Educate Consumers in Reducing Food Cost Through School Children. Market Summary.

New York, Sept. 25, 1914.

The principal topic of discussion among the trade here during the week has been the probable effect of the proposed war taxes. The commercial vehicle people have been especially bitter. They have joined the allied gasoline interests and the two will fight the proposed tax of 2 cents per gallon on gasoline together.

The tobacco interests are also very much up in the air, particularly over the inconspicuous provision in the new law which provides that "dealers in tobacco not especially provided for in this section shall each pay $4.80."

Under this provision every retail store in the United States which sells tobacco, whether it pays a tax at present or not, will have this item of $4.80 added to its expense of doing business. The Independent Retail Tobacconists' Association of New York says that in the metropolitan district of New York City alone there are not less than 18,000 of these small shops, including grocery stores, barber shops, stationery stores and other small stores that deal in tobacco in some form.

Every one of these and all other similar ones throughout the United States will be responsible for the $4.80 tax. This class of dealers are supposed to amount to 250,000 altogether, and as soon as the little fellows wake up it is prophesied that a perfect storm of protests will blow into Washington.

The California wine interests are also attempting to work up a sentiment against the proposition to tax domestic dry wines 12 cents per gallon, and domestic manufactured sweet wines 20 cents per gallon. Representatives of the California wine interests who have been circulating among the trade in this city during the week, say that the tax will have a serious effect upon the wine-producing industry of the United States and will without doubt curtail the consumption. This, they say, will mean that the California grape farmer will have a very large surplus of unsold fruit upon his hands. The tax will be fought bitterly by the California Wine Association, which has a resident secretary at 410 W. Fourteenth street, this city. The secretary cites the case of California claret, which is selling at present in California at 27½ cents per gallon. This is a dry wine and would be taxed 12 cents per gallon, thereby increasing the market price nearly 50 per cent.

The "Buy a Bale of Cotton" movement is attracting a great deal of attention here. A meeting of the Merchants' Association, or, rather, of the members thereof who are interested in this movement, was held in the Woolworth Building last Thursday. Plans were adopted with the object of inducing individual business men all over the United States to buy a bale of cotton each. The object of the movement has been stated as follows by S. C. Mead, secretary of the Merchants' Association:—

Owing to the conditions created by the European war, foreign markets for our cotton have practically been closed. The amount of cotton which would normally be exported will remain, therefore, in this country and will constitute a large surplus over and above the amount required for domestic uses.

The "Buy a Bale of Cotton" movement looks to the absorption of this surplus through the purchase of one or more bales of cotton by business houses and individuals.

It is claimed that the results of such a widespread movement would be sure to relieve farmers in the cotton producing States, enable them to liquidate their accounts with Southern merchants, and thereby keep Southern trade alive for the benefit of the whole country, which otherwise is liable to become stagnant.

The Board of Managers of the Coffee Exchange held a meeting during the week to discuss plans which the Exchange has in mind to clear up the coffee option situation. The closing of the Exchange when the war opened left speculative contracts in a very unsettled condition, and the trade have not felt since that they knew exactly where they were.

The Exchange will probably instruct the Voluntary Liquidating Committee to liquidate existing contracts at quotations acceptable to both the buyers and sellers, regardless of the prices which ruled on the Exchange when it closed July 30th.

The point of this is that prices now are very much below what they were on July 30th.

An interesting effort is to be made by the Mayor's Committee on Food Supply to educate householders in reducing their expenditures for food through their children in the public schools.

The following statement has been prepared on the subject and was issued during the week:—

As a result of the numerous conferences between the Mayor's Food Supply Committee and a committee of members from the educational staff appointed by President Churchill, of the Board of Education, a plan has been worked out by which the Mayor's Food Supply Committee, in conjunction with the Board of Education, will begin an educational campaign throughout the public schools of this city, with a view to helping the purchasing public in the matter of buying food supplies. The plan adopted is as follows:—

Approximately 800,000 circulars on a given subject will be distributed to the children of the schools on a given day, about once a week. This number will make it possible to place a copy in the hands of every scholar in every public school.

These circulars will treat on the following subjects: "How to Buy," "What to Buy," "When to Buy," "How to Save the Waste."

The first circular will be distributed next Tuesday morning and the subject will be "How to Buy." The circular will be explained to the children by the teachers and the children will be urged to take the circular home to their parents.

These circulars are being prepared from the standpoint of people who buy with the penny rather than the dollar as their unit of purchase. They are being prepared with great care and in consultation with people who are actually in contact with the problems involved. They will be thoroughly practical and, we believe, helpful.

This work will go on while the Mayor's Food Supply Committee continues its work on the broader questions of transportation, distribution, waste, etc.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea inactive. The market on teas to come forward easier.—Coffee quiet. Prices fairly steady, but with an easy undertone.—Spices slightly firmer, by reason of stronger conditions in primary markets.—Refined sugar considerably lower. Federal refinery now quoting 6¼ cents, but other refiners at this writing are quoting 6¾ cents. Dried fruits quiet, with an easy undertone.—Tomatoes show slight recovery but are still ruling on low basis. Other canned goods unchanged.—Sicily lemons 50 cents a box lower, by reason of large receipts.—Wheat unsettled and considerably lower for the week.—Flour in light demand and general tone easier.

The department states in the literature it is issuing for this purpose that there are successful methods of canning fruit which call for much less sugar than that usually employed in this process by home preservers. The department recommends the following method of putting up peaches and apples without any sugar for those who find their local sugar prices prohibitive or canning:—

Remove skins from peaches by immersing in boiling water for about one minute and then dipping in cold water. Place whole peaches in glass jars or tins and fill jars with hot water. Place rubber and top in place and sterilize for 15 minutes in hot water bath outfits, 12 minutes in water seal, 10 minutes at 5 pounds steam pressure or 5 minutes at 10 pounds steam pressure.

Of course the peaches when removed from the jar will not taste so sweet as those canned in syrup. However, if sweetening is desired, it may be added when the fruit is to be eaten.

This same method is good for canning with syrups containing varying amounts of sugar. A very thin syrup may be used if the housewife does not wish to dispense entirely with the sugar.

Apples may also be canned (for apple sauce, pie filling, etc.), using plain water instead of a sugar syrup. Department specialists have repeatedly canned them by this method. In the case of apples, jars should be sterilized 16 minutes in hot water bath outfits, 12 minutes in water seal, 10 minutes under 5 pounds of steam and 4 minutes under 10 pounds of steam.

It is suggested that grocers may pass this along to any of their customers who are not doing the usual amount of preserving because of the high cost of sugar.

Tetley's Tea

What is the "Flavor" of Tea

The Flavor of Tea is a dainty Perfume, easily lost upon exposure to the air. That is why Bulk Tea cannot run uniform in flavor or aroma. It is impossible to retain the delicate fragrance of any tea that is handled in bulk.

WITH THE EDITOR

Good times are coming without a doubt. Unmistakable signs are at hand that business is feeling a confidence in the future which it has not felt for many months, and that it is willing to spend money in that confidence.

The following want advertisements appeared in one issue of a daily paper:—

No. 1.

MERCHANDISE MANAGER WANTED.

A large general merchandise concern, engaged in ambitious plans for further increasing annual sales that now run well into millions, rich in good will, proud of its ethical standards and with a remarkable business record, offers a rare opportunity to a merchandise manager of large accomplishments.

Requirements: Good health and vigor. A spotless reputation. Strong creativeness. The intuition of a merchant. The ability to direct and to obey. The intimate knowledge of general merchandising necessary for the successful direction of large departmental operations.

Do not reply unless you are at present engaged and receiving not less than $5,000 a year.

Applicants must give complete and detailed history of business career.

Those occupying responsible positions may answer without risk. All replies handled as confidential. All correspondence returned if requested and stamped envelope inclosed. No applicant investigated unless specific permission is given. "Merchandise," P. O. Box 29, Madison Square, New York City.

No. 2.

AUDITOR.

A large mercantile establishment offers an excellent opportunity for a man meeting the following requirements:—

Good health and endurance. Experienced in short cuts, safeguards and efficiency installations. Must know general accounting theory and practice, the analysis of costs and have well developed ideas on co-operation and modern organization methods.

This is entirely an operating and not a manufacturing proposition. Department store or mail order practice would be advantageous. Only men showing they are possessed of force, initiative and experience will be considered. Give full business history. All replies treated in confidence. "Treasurer," Box 745, New York City.

No. 3.

BOND MAN.

With established clientele and at least five years' experience, wanted by high-grade bond house. Address A 205, Ledger Office.

Note that all these wants are for big men—men whose salaries will run into many thousands of dollars each. These are the infallible signs of prosperity that we spoke of. Firms in the midst of bad times, with nothing but gloom ahead, will not hire new and expensive employees. They will parcel the work around among the present force. They will get along somehow until the thing turns. Every tendency is to reduce rather than increase.

When three houses in one day—simultaneously—announce their willingness to bank on the future in this manner, it means one thing and one thing only—confidence, and confidence always brings prosperity.

From Binghamton, N. Y., comes to us the request to say something for a movement

"Made in America" which the Binghamton Advertisers' and Merchants' Association is launching—a concrete, systematic plan of using the war as a means of pushing American-made goods to the front. The Binghamton people send us the following description of their plan:

MADE IN AMERICA.

Binghamton merchants are the first in the land to take organized action looking toward boosting American made wares.

Through their "live wire" organization the Advertisers and Merchants' Association, "Made in America Week" will be devoted to special advertising, window displays and showings of American made goods. The plan of "Made in America" Week is:—

1.—Appeal to the patriotism of Americans to patronize home industries.

2.—Display window cards and flags emphasizing idea of American made goods.

3.—Give much advance publicity and help educate the public to the idea of aiding American manufactures.

This far-reaching work commands the active support of every workman, professional man, manufacturer and dealer.

Now is the time to end foreign domination of any field of useful endeavor, and Binghamton people will lead the army of trade invasion.

"Millions for domestic goods, but not 1 cent for imports," should be your slogan for "Made in America Week," September 28th-October 3d, inclusive.

We gladly support this movement and commend it to the attention of merchants everywhere. "It is an ill wind that blows nobody good." The European war has brought us the greatest chance in history to advance the interests of all manner of goods that we make —advance them not only in foreign countries, which must buy them, but at home, with thousands of people who have mistakenly thought that imported goods—now unavailable—were the only goods to use.

"Made-in-America Week" is a great little idea.

The staple food markets are gradually righting themselves, and with very few exceptions, all the products which soared to the skies when war was declared, or shortly afterward, have come down again to where they belong. The current market report of this journal confirms this. Tea, coffee, mackerel, sugar, beans and dried peas are notable instances of the declines, and there have been many others. Most of these products never had any decent reason to advance at all, and they are now simply returning to normal, not because there has been much change in actual conditions, but because the wind has all leaked out.

Touching the question which has been under discussion—a retailer's fair obligation to reduce prices when the market declines, regardless of his spot stock, particularly if he claims the right to advance with the market, a pertinent and interesting incident came under the writer's notice during the week. A large retailer who handled considerable of a certain brand of canned asparagus sent word to the Eastern agent, by a salesman, that he was done. Unless the packer could protect him and other retailers from the ruinous competition of the chain stores, he was going to throw his brand out and would never handle it again.

The Eastern agent made an immediate inquiry. The wholesale price of the asparagus was $2.40 per dozen and the chain stores which were being complained of were selling at 25 cents, a profit of 60 cents or 25 per cent. on the original investment. The retailer who was doing the complaining was attempting to get forty cents a price which he had put upon the brand the year before when the wholesale price was $3.75. He had never reduced this price, though he had sold his spot stock and had bought more several times.

The agent became so heated at the injustice of the complaint that he talked to the retailer in very plain terms. "You deserve," he said, "to be completely put out of the merchandising game! It is dealers like you who are responsible for the newspaper talk about excessive profits and the high cost of living. Here is a product that you don't have to weigh or even wrap up—yet you hold your price up way above what is proper, and kick at other dealers who are selling at a fair price!"

The retailer was not pleased with what he heard, but in the end he admitted the justice of it and ordered more of the brand. At the same time he reduced his selling price to 25 cents.

What reason or justice is there in that grocer's argument, if it makes one, that he has a right to advance with the market, when he refuses to decline with it.

U. S. Agricultural Department Now Advising Consumers to Buy Mutton in Quarters or Share Whole Lambs or Sheep With Neighbors.

This is Going Almost the Limit Along the Line of Co-operative Buying Says Consumers Will Find in This Great Saving.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

September 24, 1914.

The United States Department of Agriculture is now advising consumers to buy mutton in quarters or even more, share a whole sheep or lamb with neighbors. From its publication it has issued on the subject I take the following:—

Food specialists of the Department of Agriculture who have been investigating the subject find that there is a wide variation in the prices asked for lamb and mutton in different cities and towns and even in different butcher shops in the same locality. In many places the prices asked by the pound for these foods closely approach those asked for beef and pork. In other places, owing to conditions of local supply there is such a price difference between mutton and beef as to make mutton a relatively cheap food. The specialists of the Department of Agriculture find that in nutritive value and digestibility mutton is practically interchangeable with beef. The waste is about the same percentage, although mutton has a slight advantage over beef in containing less water.

In many markets where the price of mutton and lamb is high, careful shoppers will find that they can obtain this form of meat very much lower by buying hind quarters or half-carasses, instead of buying chops and roasts separately by the pound. In the case of a hind quarter, the chops can be cut off and served for one meal and the roast will serve for another meal. In this way the family frequently will obtain chops at a price per pound lower than that asked for roast alone by the pound. Where a half carcass is bought, in addition to the chops and roasts, the family will have a fore quarter and meat for stewing. The sheep is very convenient for purchase in this way, as it is small and can be kept in an ordinary refrigerator. Frequently families combine and buy a whole carcass and divide it, and in this case they get still better prices and obtain expensive cuts at a low average per pound. The specialists of the Department advise women who find the cost of other meats oppressive to investigate these quantity buying methods and also to look into the differences in prices charged for lamb and mutton by different retailers in their neighborhoods.

48—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because they will find the front anyway, if not in your store then in your competitor's

¶ You can't get away from the fact that everywhere you go you see nationally advertised products having the call. In one large city recently an investigator found that there were twenty-six brands of baking powder regularly selling through the grocery stores. Four brands were nationally, or very largely advertised, and they had ninety-one per cent. of the business.

¶ The other twenty-two brands divided the other nine per cent.

¶ National advertising was responsible for part of this, but only for part. The advertising was merely the introduction between the consumer and products which she found she liked better than others and so went on buying.

¶ So that it pays you to sell nationally advertised products first because they are the most widely known and the best selling, and second because they are the best.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

A Collection Agency that Collected $34.39 and Paid Over $1.69.

Striking Illustration of Collection Agency Methods. Charges That Ate Up the Whole Thing, But Which Were Probably Authorized by the Contract.

One of the best illustrations we have seen of the workings of the average collection agency comes to us from the West. It concerns the "American Adjusting Association," of Portland, Ore., a concern which does business chiefly in the West. Its methods, however, are not unlike our Eastern collection agencies.

The "American Adjusting Association" made the following return to a client upon claims of $34.39 placed with it for collection:—

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find our check for $1.69, covering statement attached. We are this date closing on our files all uncollected claims, and thereby releasing you from our contract.

There is this to be said in favor of this Portland agency: it did give up $1.69. We have collection agencies in the East which would have found some plan of absorbing even that.

Very probably every one of the charges that ate up these collections, and which were certainly excessive for the work accomplished, were authorized by the contract which this merchant signed. He either read it carelessly or not at all.

Dry Goods—Notions—Knit Wear

Cut and Fabrics of Fall Top Coats.

Top coats for women will be a distinctive style note this fall, and they will be along handsome lines. English designed coats are including very picturesque adaptations of the old Newmarket styles, and are coming in an accumulation of particularly effectively combined colorings. Warm hues and nubby piles are prominent, and the reefer styles, which provide a double-breasted effect without the double row of buttons, are newly cut garments.

The newly styled coats of great size are made of Scotch tweeds, English serges and of homespun weaves done in mixtures which suggest regularity of design in their colorings.

Spring Orders for Hosiery Now Being Placed. Dyestuff Situation Overdone a Bit. Fibre Silk.

A prominent wholesale house in New York, whose name is known far and wide in connection with hosiery and underwear, in speaking of conditions as created by current events, through its broad gauge sales manager, said last week: "Business in all lines is backward—slow and unsatisfactory for various reasons, chief of which is, of course, the European upheaval. Merchants are buying 'close to their chest,' so to speak; and orders which we should have booked for next spring delivery are now just being received. In other words, the spring business is just about opening. So far no change in prices has been made. Everybody now wears silk stockings, from the wash woman up. The fiber silk hosiery—at 25 and 50 cents a pair—are great value. They look fine and wear well.

The dyestuff situation is said to be serious, and probably is with some people. Personally I do not quite grasp it, for the reason that so many contradictory reports are in circulation. One day a supposed authority will say the shortage in dyestuffs is threatening every industry dependent upon the use of colorings. Immediately after the same source of information comes out with a statement that a full supply of material has or is about to arrive and no trouble on this account need be feared. So there you are, and therefore I am inclined to think there is more or less bunk in the whole business; that some insiders are bulling the market and making a pot of money out of the dyestuff scare. We have no reason to feel uneasiness, and our lines require the colors of the rainbow and all the intermediate shades and then some.

"Of these prize essays on the jobber, which were submitted to a special committee of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association, I understand 70 odd were sent in. What the delay is in making the awards is beyond me. A friend who read all of the papers told me they read as if the writers had heard an address on the subject and then transferred their impressions to paper, so much alike they are. Nothing new or original, I am told, is set forth. Personal experiences in a great measure, but no deep thought or new ideas are reflected; and at that they are not so 'rotten,' as the fellow said. But they do read very much alike. I believe I could pick out the winners in a half hour."

Black Dress Goods in Unusual Demand. Scarcity of Fibre Silk Hosiery.

In some respects the attitude of merchants as buyers at the present time is altogether different from the trade in the East, where conservatism prevails to an exasperating degree. In support of this statement, the John V. Farwell Co., Chicago, in their weekly summing up of business, say: "Large showing of black garments now being made by manufacturers has greatly stimulated the yardage demand for black dress goods. This condition applies especially to broadcloths, silk and wool poplins, serges and other smooth-faced fabrics. All distributors anticipated an unusual demand, but nothing equal to what they now are meeting; consequently a positive scarcity of black wool dress goods in desirable weaves now exists. Black and white shepherd checks have become active again; preference, however, being shown for the larger checks over smaller checks of previous seasons. Everything desirable in Roman stripes are being taken up as fast as produced by manufacturers. Prospects are favorable for continuance of popularity as long as present style of garments prevails.

"On account of vogue for tunic gowns, a marked increase in demand for linings, especially mercerized satines, messalines and percalines, is noticed. The call for New England made cotton blankets has been large this season. Merchants have had very successful opening sales and realizing that mills are practically sold up for the year, are anticipating their blanket wants in both cotton and wool."

Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say: "Immediate filling-in business is about normal, with a good number of buyers visiting the market. Retail selling has been somewhat retarded by the warm weather of the week. Salesmen are leaving on trips with lines for spring delivery, such as wash goods, hosiery and underwear. Orders on some lines are being taken subject to the ability of manufacturers to fulfill their contracts in view of the scarcity of dyestuffs, which still remains a serious problem.

"There promises to be a scarcity of fiber silk hosiery, as a large proportion of the yarns for this purpose have been imported from Belgium and Germany. There is a heavy fall demand for wool dress goods of all kinds. Stocks of broadcloths and all French goods in this country are about exhausted. Opening prices on wool goods for spring have advanced from 2½ to 10 per cent. Imported merchandise is being received in limited quantities from Great Britain and parts of the continent, but arrivals are uncertain and all ocean freight rates are advanced in some instances as high as 300 per cent."

Advance in All Grades of Linens.

Prices on linens for spring, 1915, deliveries show advances of from 12½ to 15 per cent. over the January list on a great many fabrics. On several crash numbers the increases are a great deal more, as much as 33⅓ per cent. being cited. Damask went up 12½ to 15 per cent., with white blouse linens showing an uplift of from 17 to 20 per cent. White linens were sold at an advance of 20 per cent., and on inquiries for additional quantities a further increase of 5 per cent. was quoted. Linen houses in view of the difficulty in obtaining goods, consider it prudent to confine their selling agents to merchandise in stock or afloat.

Knit Wear at Steady Figures.

Efforts to break prices on knit goods so far appear to be ineffectual. Outside of a brisk demand for jobs and irregular lots of goods the market is reported extremely quiet. In spring underwear there is a steady receipt of small size orders, with sweaters and sweater coats in the same category. The mills are holding out on prices, as they are supported by the impending inquiries from European sources. They are determined to hold to prices on goods made from yarns that were bought when orders were first taken and when the radical change in cotton had not come to the front.

Why Silk Underwear is Made From Foreign Material.

During the present crisis abroad much discussion has been indulged in regarding the opportunity of American manufacturers to make everything needful for the production of finished goods in any line. That an effort in that direction is being seriously considered, and in some instances carried out, there is no doubt. One of the best-known underwear manufacturers has the following to say of their product in the same connection:—

New York, Sept. 19, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We do not make any muslin underwear; our line is mainly made up of cotton materials, although we produce some silk goods, exclusively for the men's trade. We have a large mill of our own which makes a portion of our cotton supply, and the remainder is made for us under stipulations that we name, ever having in view durability and proper finish.

The silk that we use is imported, but, naturally, if it could be produced in this country, upon a fair basis of price comparative to what the imported cloth costs, we would be only too glad to shift that supply to American production. American manufacturers should overcome this difficulty, so that any manufacturer or retailer can purchase all his supplies in this country without any monetary detriment to himself.

With proper encouragement and no doubt it will not require very much effort, the United States can produce at fair prices and with quality sustained, all silk and cotton supplies this country needs.

Yours truly,

THE B. V. D. Co.
Abraham Erlanger, President.

Cotton Goods Run to Subdued Colors.

A curious condition prevails in the cotton goods market so far as merchants are concerned. Buying still continues along hand-to-mouth routes, and, few, indeed, are placing orders in accordance with periodical requirements. There has been an increased call for fine madras for shirtings and waists. Narrow wale piques continue at a premium, and some specialties in fine poplins are not to be had in the colors wanted. It is surprising to note how well the demand for staples and semi-staples in white goods hold up in various sections of the country.

There is a good call for clipped figure fabrics, and for some of the fancies and novelties for spring that can be delivered before January. Many mills making the better grades of fine fancies and novelties are sold ahead well toward the first of the year. There is decidedly a better demand for silk and cotton goods, deliveries to begin in December. On fine plain cloths prices are steady on a basis of 5½ cents for 11.35-

Wherever Clothes Are Washed!

Women wash clothes to get them clean, so they don't like to use dirty starch. Wherever clothes are washed, in city or suburb, in town or on the farm, women appreciate ARGO STARCH because it is CLEAN starch.

Not only will ARGO STARCH, in the neat 5-cent cartons, please your customers, but it is easiest and best for you to handle. The carton is convenient; it saves the work of scooping and weighing bulk starch; it saves the cost of bags and twine; it saves TIME.

ARGO STARCH MAKES A SPLENDID DISPLAY

A neat pile of ARGO STARCH in your window, or on your counter, is sure to catch the eyes of customers and increase your sales. Always have ARGO STARCH where it can be seen, and it will sell itself. Bulk starch only sells if customers remember they want to buy it; ARGO STARCH acts as a reminder, an advantage of package goods which the live merchant quickly appreciates.

Corn Products Refining Company NEW YORK

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"ARGO STARCH is pure, clean starch which is sure to please. Can be used for either hot or cold starching."

yard 88 x 80s. On small lots first hands will not sell on this basis for 1914 delivery. This is true of narrow as well as of wide goods. The shutting off of the importations of many heavy cotton novelties made in Germany, such as bath robes, blankets, waste cloths, etc., is being looked upon as decidedly favorable to American articles in the same line. Germany and Austria have also been the main source of mops, dish cloths, etc., which now will be made here. In fact, throughout the fancy goods market there is a feeling that trade will be decidedly better for domestic products in a short time.

Buyers of quilts are talking of lower prices for next spring, but this is not likely to occur for some time yet. The style trend in fine and fancy fabrics is for sheer printed and sheer white goods. It is confidently predicted that next spring will be one of the greatest white goods season known for some years. There is a decided tendency away from the brilliant and garish colors. Black and white in fine cottons seem to be in keeping with the more subdued tone of public feeling and taste everywhere.

Wide Ribbons in Stripes High Style.

A new development of importance to the buyers of ribbons is the demand for wide goods. This has been hinted at for a month or so past, and it now seems settled that ribbons from 65 to 108 lignes are the coming style for millinery purposes. This is spoken of in connection with next or the winter season, but the tendency is being already felt. Preparations in fancies for next season are along the line of different kinds of stripes. Black and white stripes are mentioned, also awning stripes of various widths and colors. There is less talk of a scarcity in merchandise.

Side Lines Which are Profitable.

Besides the regular or standard goods the general storekeeper should take advice as to the most desirable side lines to handle. For instance, corsets furnish more clear profit and less dead stock than any one item in the general lines. From 25 to 30 per cent. on corsets may be safely figured, with the better grades at a still higher percentage of profit. The main thing in selling corsets is to educate the customer to buy a good corset. Show a woman the real advantage in style, fit, wear, comfort and other essentials the same as in other articles to which such essentials appeal.

While the small town merchant may not feel very enthusiastic over handling ready-to-wears, he will find it very profitable to stock house dresses, kimonos, aprons, underwear, nightgowns and all kinds of petticoats, corset covers, shirtwaists, etc. Only the popular priced ones, ranging from $1 to $1.50. The silk or fancies in these goods is more of a problem, and it depends entirely on the class of trade. Children's clothes, boys' waists and, in fact, everything in this line, gives a good profit and are more profitable than yard goods. What a merchant may take on profitably depends altogether upon how well the field is already covered. The side line business, it is agreed, can very easily be overdone. The merchant's good sense and experience are the best guides.

Range of Favorite Materials in Dress Goods.

Both French serges and storm serges are well regarded, but soft finished, fine twills are given the preference by the cutting up trade, a point merchants should not overlook. Prices remain unchanged. Panamas are going to be a large factor during the next spring dress goods season. This weave has been used freely of late as compared with a year ago, because the style of skirts and dresses favor fabrics of this description.

Sheer dress goods, such as wool grenadines and etamine weaves, have been ordered in a way that reflects a good demand on the part of merchants who keep in close touch with the primary market, even if their orders go through the hands of jobbers ultimately. Broadcloth is being called for—deliveries to be in November and December—in a manner that convinces keen observers that this dress material will continue to hold its strong place during the fall, 1915, season. Fine French serges, poplins, gaberdines and lustrous satin cloths are among the other dress materials that are being called for in such quantities to lead one to believe them good sellers during the coming season.

Boots Shoes Findings

A Laced Boot of Distinction.

With all that is reported concerning the shortage in raw material the flurry over increased prices in shoes has not materialized. Certainly manufacturers and wholesalers are not lacking who have attempted to lead the merchant to believe that something was bound to happen if the war abroad continued. Possibly, but as yet the leading retailers, whose lines demonstrate the very latest creations of the shoe designer, are offering goods at the same prices. For example, one fashionable dealer advertises as follows: "The last court of France, with all its glamour and splendor, never saw footwear so smartly irresistible to feminine fancy—a new lace boot, to be had in these combination effects: gun metal calf, with tops of gray buckskin; gray cloth and gray suede, patent leather, with tips of fawn buckskin; fawn cloth and fawn suede." The price is arranged to go with a new style. This is the last word in footwear of the feminine gender, and though the small town merchant may not wire in an order for a duplicate lot by express, he is pleased to know such goods are sold and are in demand and it may give him a new slant on the stock he sometimes wishes should be up to the minute.

Another prominent retailer announces "new fall footwear for women at very special prices—light weight boots, feather weight and medium weight boots, usually $5 and $6, now $3.95." So there you are.

Rubber Heels and a Repair Outfit.

With the approach of the colder months, with their disagreeable weather conditions, the general merchant selling shoes should not overlook the profitable possibilities of handling rubber heels. Their use increases rapidly, many people being firm in their belief that besides being an insurance against slipping on icy or wet pavements, they are also conducive to comfort in ordinary wear. It is maintained that a certain springiness or elasticity is imparted to the impact of the shoe when walking, and therefore rubber heels are favored over and above their practical utility under inclement weather conditions. A merchant carrying rubber heels in his findings stock can just as easily install a repair kit for putting them on while the customer waits. These repair outfits are also adopted for other simple repair work, are made by specialists and their initial cost is soon reimbursed by the extra work and sales brought to the shoe department.

As an illustration of the consumption of rubber heels several large concerns are now specializing on new and improved goods. The latest arrival in the field is known as "Slipknot," which is being introduced to the trade as the "best yet." The "Wing Foot" is another brand of reputation, with still others in line. The main point, however, is that a merchant in stocking any goods of this kind preferred should not fail to have a repair outfit to round out and make effective the innovation.

Points on Buying Shoe Stocks. What to Avoid Chiefly.

At this time, when dealers are looking over the new sample lines preparatory to ordering stock for next spring and summer, it is well to remember that goods well bought are half sold. There is more in this than one would imagine at the first glance. Satisfactory buying consists in first selecting the lines which appear to be the most suitable for a merchant's trade, then the proper assortment of numbers and finally the sizes and widths. In these three particulars the retailer must be guided either by his own judgment or that of the salesman in charge of the shoe department. It is true the suggestions of the factory or wholesaler's representative are to be given due weight and consideration, but only so far as they will serve the buyer's own purposes the best. What another merchant has bought in another town, an argument the road salesman regard almost invariably as a clincher, is of no special account, when the dealer is acquainted thoroughly with his own shoe stock.

It is a great thing to select shoes, all through the lines decided upon, that reflect the standing and character of the merchant himself; in short, a shoe stock having individuality is an asset of value. The public usually know what they want, and as one merchant expressed it, "Your idea of what constitutes a good, practical, sensible shoe will not help a salesman much in making a sale if he has a customer who wants a Louis XV heel, square turn, and he has something entirely different to show her. Buy fewer lines and more shoes from the lines selected; also fewer numbers and a better run of sizes and widths." It is well to bear in mind that in ordering for future delivery it is not advisable to buy as if the patterns would be exhausted or discontinued. If the line chosen proves a good seller, the manufacturer will stock the goods, which can be drawn upon as desired.

Above all things, the general store-keeper should avoid novelties, fancies and freaks. A small line of fashionable models in women's wear may be stocked, but not too many. Just how fast such merchandise can be turned over is for the merchant himself to decide. Extreme novelties should be left severely alone. The city store is constantly up against this problem, and therefore the merchant with shoes as a side line should be still more cautious. Staples and standards are safe buys and can be adhered to in ordering the season's stock with little danger of having a lot of stickers on hand when inventory time has arrived.

Advancing the Price of Shoes is Sometimes Hazardous. The Findings Market Firm.

On shoe findings and materials which are either made abroad complete or the principal components are imported and the finished goods produced here, there has been advances. Perhaps the general merchant may not believe he is concerned in the remotest measure with this market, but if he is retailing shoes then his interest should be of a personal nature. The dealer will recall that shoe manufacturers in either making outright an announcement that his product will hereafter be sold at an advanced price, or cautioning the trade that notice to that effect should not be surprising, has laid emphasis upon the extra cost of findings, material and miscellaneous supplies entering into the make-up of a shoe, besides the higher prices prevailing for leathers of all kinds.

In speaking of this to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" the other day, George T. Laing, of Laing, Harrar & Chamberlin, who sell goods all over the country, said: "Certain findings of foreign make have been marked up, but more on account of the extra carrying charges and war risks than the actual cost to the manufacturers. Naturally, other items have followed through sympathy. We buy a lot of goods in England, Germany, France and Austria, and with the exception of England, the supply ceased several weeks ago. We cabled an order to an English firm for certain insoles, which arrived in New York last week and very much to our surprise the price had not been increased. On a grade of very fine sole leather of English tanning an advance of 8 cents a pound has been made. On wax, the principal ingredient of which comes from Germany, the quotations are higher. The same is true of certain laces made from a Germany yarn, and cement. Also thread made from Russian flax; and rubber, you know, is higher.

"With some lines American goods can be substituted without injury to the quality, but there are articles made abroad that as yet our specialty manufacturers have not mastered the secret of, or perhaps the skill in producing. You must understand that shoes are made on a small margin, and therefore the cost of every item in their manufacture means something, even to the extent of a few cents a pair, where thousands, and possibly millions, of pairs are turned out. It is no easy matter to advance the price of shoes which have been selling for years at a fixed price, especially in the cheaper and medium grades. A dealer who has sold a $2.50, $3.50 or $5 shoe cannot tack on 25 cents a pair without losing trade. People who buy these grades of shoes make up the great bulk of sales. Perhaps in the higher priced shoes 50 cents could be added without risk. The result is if a manufacturer's cost is increased by a similar situation in the leather, findings and materials market, he is more than likely to take the extra expense out of the shoe. I know one of the largest shoe manufacturers in the country has said, over his own signature, that shoes may go up $1 a pair by next spring should present conditions continue, but that remains to be seen. After establishing a price it is uphill work to increase it without the chance of losing business, directly or indirectly."

Hardware Tools Specialties

English Demand for American Hardware.

As an instance of American hardware making its way in the world's markets owing to the shortage in Germany, Great Britain and other European countries, buyers are already appearing here in quest of goods. Percy G. Donald, of Rownson, Drew & Clydesdale, dealers in builders' hardware and materials and a general line of specialties, arrived in New York last week seeking new sources of supplies for the goods which have been drawn from the continent in the past. His company is now interested in making American connections for nails, tubes, cast iron pipes, and builders' hardware, both light and heavy. In talking of the object of his trip here Mr. Donald expressed himself briefly as follows:—

We in England have been buying our wire nails principally from Germany and Belgium. The English production of wire nails is quite negligible, because Germany has had a system of government bounties, and the Germans have sold their wire nails at a lower price than the wire itself, the idea being to keep the English from making wire nails. In the six months from January to July of this year the English imported wire and wire nails from Germany and Belgium to the total amount of 120,000 tons. Nearly an equal amount of these goods passed through English ports on their way to Australia, Africa, South America and other countries to which they are exported from the European Continent.

Hardware manufacturers and wholesalers are now looking to "break" into these countries themselves. There is a big demand for American saws and other tools, not to mention the finer grades of table ware and general cutlery.

Fixed Prices That Yield Profit. Hardware Manufacturers Ignorant of Essentials.

The ignorance of many hardware manufacturers concerning the merchant's cost of doing business is the one obstacle to the success of any plan which contemplates the fixing of retail prices. Merchants in other lines say that many of the trade-marked goods are priced at figures which afford the retailer no profit. Of course, this is an old story, and it seems to be the most difficult thing in the world to convince some manufacturers of hardware specialties of this fact. Generally merchandise of this character are so well advertised that the public constantly calls for them and therefore merchants find it necessary to carry them. The dealer cannot obtain a higher price than the manufacturers have fixed because the prices are printed on the packages.

For example, in a certain line of machines sold by general storekeepers, especially in rural communities, the merchant would be justified in expecting that the manufacturer who wishes to dictate or suggest retail prices, to fix prices which would afford the dealer an adequate margin. Yet one concern which issued a retail price list showed woeful ignorance on this point. For instance, a machine which is sold to merchants at $85 was priced to retail at $90; another for which the dealer was asked to pay $31 was priced at $34. In short most of the machines in the list afforded less than 15 per cent. profit. With the cash discount deducted the average margin on the lot was about 16 per cent., which is the average cost of doing business in that particular branch of the retail hardware trade, taking it the country over.

Thus the dealer, selling at prices fixed by the manufacturer, would do business without a profit, and unless he cashed his bills and sold for cash or its equivalent he would be losing money. Briefly, the more the whole pricing question is considered, says an expert, the stronger becomes the conviction that the only man capable of fixing the retail price is the dealer. To be sure manufacturers who have a clear conception of the situation, and name and advertise a price on their hardware specialties commensurate with the cost of doing business by the general merchant, relieves the latter of this duty and brings a profit to him besides. This means the merchandise in this class is pushed at all times, because the advantage is mutual.

What the Kansas Mail Order Survey Really Means.

When it was reported that the Kansas Board of Health was to undertake a survey of the mail order business in that State some surprise was expressed. The statement was alluded to in a recent issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," to which the following official reply is received:—

Topeka, Kan., Sept. 16, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Relative to the newspaper clipping stating that the State Board of Health expected to make a survey of the mail order business in the State of Kansas, with a special reference to the hardware business, will say that it is slightly confused. The real facts are that in order to cope more successfully with the typhoid fever problem, which in Kansas is largely a rural disease, and in order to have a more intimate knowledge of the sanitary conditions of the farms, it was decided by the State Board of Health to make a sanitary survey of some one county in the State of Kansas. Sumner County, on the Oklahoma line, was selected as a fairly typical Kansas county.

Owing to the shortage of funds for this work, we were forced to call upon the Commercial Clubs in that county for assistance in supplying lodging and transportation for our inspectors. Of course, these clubs could see nothing in the survey which would further their interests; and in order to make it of practical value to them we agreed to conduct a business survey as well. We herewith inclose to you a sample of the score card used in the sanitary survey and also the card used in requesting business information.

Contrary to the predictions of many business men that the farmer would object to giving us this special information, we may say that out of the 2,700 farm premises which we inspected, we met with fewer than a dozen refusals. We have not as yet been able to tabulate these results or to plat out a trade map of the county, but we expect to complete the same sometime during the coming month. The information derived should be of particular interest to the retail trade. The work of tabulation has been delayed owing to our lack of funds to hire extra help. We shall be glad to keep your inquiry requesting same in mind, or if you will write us later will send you results of tabulation.

Very truly yours,

JOHN J. SIPPY, M. D.,
Epidemiologist, State Board of Health.

Aside from the medical survey referred to by Dr. Sippy, the questions propounded on the "special information" card mentioned inquiring into business relations of the recipient are very searching, to say the least. After asking about the real estate owned or controlled, the farmer is gently requested to answer the following: "Do you own an automobile?" "At what town do you buy your hardware and implements, groceries and meat, lumber, dry goods and clothing, furniture, drugs and extracts?" "Do you buy some goods from catalogue houses? If so, what has been amount of your purchases during past year and from what houses?" To be sure, the details of this survey will not be revealed by the State Board, but a summary of the facts deduced should suffice to give the merchant a line on the information desired.

Relative to "Five and Ten" Goods

In urging upon storekeepers the wisdom of putting in a stock of "5 and 10" goods, as leaders to attract trade for the better grades of hardware, this journal quoted a few examples in which the essay had proven both profitable and satisfactory. A number of manufacturers specialize on these goods, one of whom takes up the subject in the appended letter:—

Reading, Pa., Sept. 16, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We have read the article carefully and find same covers matters very well. However, we note also reference to 5 and 10-cent Exchange being established in New York. This Exchange is to be established not by the manufacturers, but by individuals who derive a commission from the orders coming in. Therefore we do not think much of this fact, and no doubt you have deceived some of your readers, as it would be necessary to pay a commission on all orders.

Very truly yours,
READING SADDLE AND MFG. CO.
Per H. E. Printz, Sales and Advertising Manager.

Mr. Printz should understand there was no intention to deceive any one in reference to this Exchange. The facts were given for what they were worth—no more, no less.

Good "Don'ts" For Housewives.

"Don'ts" for housewives dealing at the new Chicago municipal markets work on two of which was begun last week, have been issued with the approval of the Municipal Markets Commission. These rules are laid down as a guide to women eager to cut the cost of living, but who may expect the frills of fancy grocery store service on the school lots, where farm wagons, loaded with garden truck, will be found. Following are the "don'ts" for municipal marketers:—

Don't expect the farmers to telephone you at your residence and take your order over the wire.

Don't ask to have an ear of corn and a bunch of onions delivered.

Don't demand credit from the sturdy agriculturist who sells you tomatoes at bottom prices. Spot cash talks.

Don't hunt for premiums at the municipal markets. The farmer cannot give you a cake of soap or a silver handled mop stick with every 50-cent purchase.

Don't expect the municipal markets to deal in toilet goods, razors, imported olives, caviar, roller skates, hair tonics, pickled oysters and gasoline. Go to an up-to-date grocery store.

Don't come to market without a basket. It may not look stylish, but what you save might buy a new winter hat.

Don't expect that your purchases are going to be wrapped up like Christmas tree ornaments.

If you don't see what you want, ask a policeman.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

There has been no change in the market for spot teas during the week. Teas which are coming forward, however, are from $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 cent cheaper, due to the fact that there appears to be plenty of tea in sight. The market for new crop teas is coming close to normal now, and there is no present reason to expect any advance in the near future. The demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

The coffee market is demoralized and very weak. There is plenty of coffee in sight for the demand, or for even more than the present demand. Holders will shade prices on almost all grades of Rio and Santos coffees in order to make sales. Mild coffees are also weak and dull. Java and Mocha steady at unchanged prices.

Sugar.

There has been a slump in both raw and refined sugar during the week. Raws are off about $\frac{1}{2}$ cent and granulated is down to 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents. The demand is very light, and if there is any further change in the near future it will probably be a further decline. Predictions of a 6-cent market by January 1st are being made. All through the sugar market, from the big buyers of raws down to the consumer of refined, there is a noticeable lack of demand at present.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is unchanged and dull. Sugar syrup rules very firm and high and has not followed the decline in sugar, because it is relatively scarcer than sugar. Molasses unchanged and dull.

Fish.

Mackerel is cheaper all along the line. Norways are about $2 per barrel cheaper than the opening price, but are still about $2 above last year's opening, though no higher than the price to which last year's market went subsequent to the opening. The cause of the decline is additional receipts and evidence that there will probably be plenty of mackerel in spite of the war. Irish mackerel are not figuring much, because they have not really commenced to arrive as yet. The market is much lower, however, and shore mackerel are also several dollars per barrel cheaper. Lack of demand is one factor in the decline. Cod, hake and haddock are high, but without change for the week. The catch is light and the outlook strong. Salmon is unchanged and quiet. Domestic sardines are now quoted at $3 for quarter oils, f. o. b. Eastport, Me.; demand only moderate. The fishing is considerably better. Imported sardines are unchanged, very scarce and very high. Some Norwegian smoked are coming forward at prices which show relatively much less advance than other foreign sardines.

Canned Goods.

The weather has been especially favorable for packing tomatoes, and partly on this account the market has slumped from 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 5 cents during the week. At this writing the quotation for large lots, f. o. b. the factory, is 72 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents, and sales may be made at 70 cents before these words are printed. One vital reason for the decline is lack of demand from the jobbers. The packers cannot hold goods, many of them cannot borrow further on them, and they are accordingly under pressure to sell. The outlook is not strong, in spite of the fact that the pack is reasonably sure not to be more than equal to requirements, if it is even that. Corn and peas show no change for the week. Corn is strong. There is sure to be a short pack in many sections, notably Maine, where they are talking 50 per cent. Apples are unchanged and dull, outlook for low prices. California canned goods unchanged and quiet. Small Eastern staple canned goods quiet at ruling prices.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged and dull, both old and new. Peaches are still very cheap, but in light demand. Apricots unchanged and dull. Raisins have advanced $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ cent, according to grade, this being in fulfillment of the raisin combination's promise when the market opened. Seeded goods are up $\frac{1}{8}$ cent. Currants are now quoted at 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents for big lots in cartons, which is a total decline of 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents. Prospective receipts are the reason. Other dried fruits in light demand, but firm.

Beans and Peas.

Beans are coming down to a more nearly normal basis, the quotation on pea beans is \$2.65 in large lots, which is a total drop of about $\frac{1}{2}$ cent from the highest war price. Marrows are also off about $\frac{1}{4}$ cent and are now quoted at \$4 in a large way. California limas unchanged on spot and slightly lower on futures. There never was any warrant for the advance in futures. Greens and Scotch peas are also easier, meaning new crop.

Butter.

The recent hot spell has cut off the consumption of butter to some extent and the market is steady at a decline of 1 cent per pound. The quality of the current receipts will average better than it was. No important change seems in sight. This applies to all grades of butter, Western and nearby, solid packed and prints.

Eggs.

The egg market is steady and unchanged, with a fair consumptive de-

Poor Old Pack.

I ain't going to say who I think has got to be blamed for this war, because I don't rightly know yet, but I will say this, that if I knew who he was and had him here, I'd put a tenpenny nail in the end of my big winter shoes and do some carpenter work.

If it wasn't hurting anybody but the people that brought it on I wouldn't care a darn. It's like a fellow that drives an automobile when he's drunk. If he only busts his own head, you sort of feel good all over, but when he busts up poor old Granny Smith while she's crossing the street on her way to church, then you want to lam him, specially if nothing happens to his own head.

Ain't that right?

The latest bump that's come from the blamed old war has hit my old friend Packard.

He's 62 years old and has been a salesman a good bit longer than I have. He has rheumatics all winter. His hair is white. He's an old man—older at 62 than he ought to be at 70.

He's just been fired because his house has to cut down expenses. They have to cut down expenses because business is rotten, and business is rotten on account of the war.

And poor Pack is one of the expenses that they have to cut down.

He made his last trip a week ago. A couple of days he was with me, like he always is on his fall trip—has been I suppose for ten years. I sort of look after him.

Believe me, he was blue. He's never been a world winner, Pack ain't, though he's done the best he could. I don't suppose he's ever pulled over $25 a week, and with that he's kept up a little home with an old maid sister. He has no wife, thank the good man, though I suppose it's about as tough to see your old sister starve to death as it is to see your old wife do it.

He ain't got any money and not a mite of prospect. Can you see anybody putting on a salesman 62 years old, half sick and broke up, at a time when they're even laying off young fellows? I can't—nope, poor old Pack will not get any job as salesman, that's as sure as shooting. What'll he do? Selling goods is all he knows.

If it hadn't been for this infernal war, I'm sure he'd have been kept on, for he sold a few goods right along.

I don't suppose you can find much fault with his house. It was business with them. Maybe old Pack hadn't made any money for 'em for a good long time. Maybe they'd kept him on long enough as a charity, I don't know. It ain't fair to cuss 'em without knowing.

But here he is kicked out on the street. What in thunder can he do, will you tell me that? I know two things. He can go to the poor house, or he can starve to death. Two fine big beautiful things to do.

Wouldn't take me long to make up my mind between them. Before I sit around a poor house porch and slobber all over my weskit, I'd starve to death.

Nobody ain't ever thought of home for wore out salesmen though they have plenty of home for cats. I wonder why not. Do they ever expect a salesman to wear out?

I'll tell you what we need in this country, and when I get to Congress I'll put in a law to get it, too. It's a part of the Government where a man like old Pack can go now that he's sixty-two and down and out, and say "here, find me a job." Then the fellow in charge would turn to a book and find where he could put an old fellow with the rheumatics, but that could sell a few goods yet. Wouldn't that be out of sight? By George, if there was something like that a fellow could see himself getting old without lying awake at night wondering.

ADDRESS AD-WRITING CONTEST

MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

927 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Southern California Retail Grocers' Association.

The Southern California Retail Grocers' Association, of Los Angeles, Cal., has decided to inaugurate an advertising campaign through the local newspapers in order to disabuse the public mind of some of the prevalent fallacies concerning the grocer's position in the so-called high cost of living problem. Here are a few of the items to be incorporated in the advertising as showing what the grocers stand for:—

Quality first.
Full weight.
Non-substitution of goods.
Reduction of the cost of living.
The association adopted a resolution instructing the secretary to prepare a publicity campaign along these lines and featuring the stores of association members.

Another Grocers' Association Charged With Being a Trust.

E. C. Armstrong, a grocer of Sacramento, Cal., has filed information against the Sacramento Retail Grocers' Association charging that it is operating in restraint of trade and the organization will probably be investigated by the local grand jury. The specific complaint against the association is that its members conspired to prevent the grocer from being able to purchase a certain amount of flour. E. C. Armstrong, who makes the charges, declares that the members of the association have combined with the Phoenix Milling Co. of that city, on prices to consumers, and says that because he attempted to cut the price on this commodity the Phoenix company has refused to sell him any more flour. Officers of the association say that Armstrong's charges are unfounded. They claim that the milling company places a retail selling price of $1.70 a 50-pound sack on its flour and that it cannot be sold under this price and return a fair profit. Officials of the Phoenix Mills state that the company encourages retailers to sell the flour at $1.70, but does not compel them to sell it at that price. They deny that there is any agreement between the retail grocers' association and the millers regarding the price at which it shall be sold, but admit that they are trying to establish a uniform selling price for the product. As to the charge that the mills refused to sell flour to Armstrong, the Phoenix people make the defense that he is a new customer of the concern and that they were not in position to fill his orders, the demand being heavier than the output at present, and they felt obligated to take care of their old customers first. Armstrong claims to have evidence of the agreement between the association and the milling concern, however, and declares that he will push the charges to the limit.

CCLXXVIII.—Some Lessons From a Unique Case of False Pretence.

I have taken occasion to say from time to time that when you are attempting to collect a debt, or a claim of any sort from an apparently irresponsible debtor, if you can find in the transaction in which the debt was incurred some element of false pretence, which will enable you to go after the debtor upon a criminal charge, your chance of securing a proper adjustment is much greater than if you merely have a right of civil action against him. Any man will flinch at the idea of criminal prosecution, even men who are utterly indifferent to all threat of civil action.

An illustration of the truth of this is at hand in a recent case in which I indirectly took part. Had the only remedy in that case been a civil one, the person injured would never have recovered anything. After a careful examination of the case, it was decided that there was a chance of criminal prosecution, and in the end the victim collected over $200—the full amount of his claim.

The trick that was worked in this case was unusual and very bold. Here is a description of it which I take from the court's recital of the facts:—

The testimony showed that early in December, 1913, the defendant called at Jones & Wilson's place of business, and it was agreed between them that he would work for Jones & Wilson in the business of selling washing machines for $30 a week and expenses and would give his entire time and attention to Jones & Wilson's business. At that time he was in the employ of Mandel Brothers, a competitor of Jones & Wilson, and it was agreed that the agreement was not to be in effect until that employment was ended. A day or two afterwards the defendant telephoned to Mr. Jones, telling him that his resignation had been accepted by Mandel Brothers, and that he was ready to begin work for him at once. To this Mr. Jones assented. Thereafter the defendant sent daily statements in writing of his expenses and the progress he was making in his work to Jones & Wilson, and each week was paid the amount agreed on, together with expenses, until he had been paid the sum of $263.81. Mr. Jones testified that it was because of the representation that he was devoting his time and attention exclusively to his service that he paid him this money. It was shown that the defendant had not left the employment of Mandel Brothers, but continued in their employment during all the time he obtained money from Jones & Wilson.

Certainly nothing could be craftier or more dishonest than this. The defendant, whose name was Snyder, collected nearly $300 in wages before his fraud was discovered. Then demand was made upon him for the return of the money and he stuck his tongue in his cheek and professed an entire lack of interest. "He did not have it then, but as soon as he could spare it he would see what he could do."

It was finally decided to arrest him, and a warrant was issued on the charge of obtaining money under false pretences—the pretence first that he had resigned from his old employers and was in position to accept a position elsewhere, and second that he was working right along for Jones & Wilson. I neglected to say that the fellow made daily reports to his new employers, showing people called on and all work done. These were pure fakes of course. He was indicted as charged and in due course came to trial.

In court there was a furious fight and every legal technicality that could possibly be raised in a case of this sort was raised. In cases of false pretence, there are always many chances for legal technicalities. The alleged pretence, for instance, must be as to an existing fact and not a mere promise to do something in the future. If it is the latter, it is not a false pretence, even though clearly fraudulent, and no criminal prosecution will lie for it. For instance, if a customer comes to you and asks credit upon the strength of the fact that on the first of next month he expects to take a position with Jones & Brown, you cannot arrest him for false pretence even if you can prove he never had any such idea, because the statement was a mere statement of a future expectation. But if he says "I have been offered a position for the first of next month, and the fact is that he has not, he is guilty of false pretence. There is therefore always a contest over whether the alleged false pretence is as to an existing fact or something in the future. Deciding this is not always as easy as it seems.

Another necessary feature of false pretence is that the property, or money, or whatever was obtained through it, came directly from the false pretence. If it did not, then the case of false pretence will fall. This phase of the case always bristles with quibbles.

These and all other points that could possibly be raised were raised, but every point that amounted to anything was decided against the defendant. As to the first point, which is always the dominating one in false pretence cases—was the representation as to an existing or future fact?—the court usefully laid down the law thus:—

We do not agree that the representations made by the defendant were not of an existing fact. If the defendant had been paid the money upon the promise to resign from his position with Mandel Brothers and had not done so, it would not be such a false representation as is contemplated in the Act of Assembly, as it would not have been the representation of an existing fact, but a promise to do something in the future. But that is not this case. The representation set forth in the indictment is the representation that he had quit the employment of Mandel Brothers and was devoting to the business of selling washing machines for Jones & Wilson his entire and exclusive time. The testimony fully sustains this. It showed that the agreement made in Mr. Jones' office was not in effect until the defendant had resigned his position with Mandel Brothers, and that the next day, or the day afterwards, he telephoned to Mr. Jones that he had resigned and was ready to go to work at once. The two conversations make the representation of an existing fact.

Incidentally this case shows how a very simple ruse can completely hoodwink a business house. I suppose in this case Jones & Wilson were so glad to get a competitor's salesman away that they did not take time to go to the old employer and ask for a reference for the man, but I suggest that a single letter from Jones & Wilson to Mandel Bros. would have defeated this fraud before it was launched. Almost any investigation would have done so, in fact. It is a practical axiom that a little investigation at the right time would often save a lawsuit.

Question: Atco Stores Co., Atco, Bartow County, Ga.—We have an account against a girl who formerly worked in the mill here, whose father lives on a farm.

When this girl was here she frequently bought goods for her father and other members of the family, including herself, and always had a charge account. She was not good pay, but we made arrangements with her to have her payments deducted by the mill company from her weekly wages.

When she left here she owed an account of about $17. Her last purchase was made after she had quit and was ready to leave, although she told us she was still working in the mill. Now she refuses to pay, and her father also refuses to pay, saying she is her own mistress, and he won't be responsible for her, although he accepted and used a part of the goods she bought. Have we any legal recourse? If so, what steps can we pursue to collect?

Answer.—If these goods were bought for family consumption, her father being the head of the family, you can collect from him on the ground that he was responsible for necessities furnished to his family, and the girl bought them merely as his agent. As to goods supplied to her personally, for her own use, you may also be able to collect from him for those, if she is a minor, on the ground that he is responsible for necessities furnished to a minor child. This will not be so easy, however, because you will have to show that the goods were supplied to her with his knowledge and consent and practically by his authority. If you cannot show that, you must collect for those goods from her, and then also and particularly so if the girl is of age.

You have weakened your case somewhat by arranging for payment of the whole bill with the girl, thus treating her as the debtor, instead of her father. However, I do not think this is fatal to your case.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Mr. Smedley has received an invitation to address the merchants' association at Coatesville.

The Pottstown association has arranged for a big fall rally on October 6th. Mr. Smedley has been invited to address the meeting. An effort will be made to enroll every merchant in the town as a member. This live association expects to be a banner bearer at the next convention.

The Frankford Grocers' Association will hold a fall rally for members and their wives on October 7th. Mr. Smedley will deliver an address. This organization is adding very largely to its membership and is one of the associations that "does things."

We expect in the very near future to plant a good association at Uniontown.

Each association in the State will be visited by Mr. Smedley this year. The revival work started last year is to be continued until this State is thoroughly organized. Next year is legislative year. If we want legislation we must present a solid front. Through organization we can remedy many evils and help the retail merchant. Organize.

Delegates to the last convention are elated at the success of the gathering. Some splendid reports have been made to the local organizations. It was an incentive to better and closer organization. Or-

Sell Franklin Carton Sugar by the Container

Your customers know what sugar is and what it will do, and expect to keep on buying it and eating it as long as they live. The right thing to do when a woman asks for sugar is to sell her a SUPPLY instead of SAMPLE—sell her a WHOLE CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR instead of one or two CARTONS.

It's easy to show a woman the convenience of having a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the house, always handy when she needs it.

Selling FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR by the CONTAINER is not only a convenience for your customers, but it saves you money, because you make one delivery instead of dozens. It gives you a wholesale outlet at a retail profit—you don't have to even open the CONTAINER to make your profit on every CARTON in it. When you sell a woman a CONTAINER of 30 two-pound CARTONS you make the profit on her purchases of sugar for some time to come; if you sell her one CARTON you leave an opening for competitors to sell her the other TWENTY-NINE. Lots of your customers buy flour by the barrel, potatoes by the bushel, canned goods by the dozen—it just as easy to sell them FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR BY THE CONTAINER. Try it.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is packed 24, 48, 60 and 120 pounds to the CONTAINER. Ask your Jobber for full information as to grades.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Here's the right way to buy sugar, Madam—30 Franklin Cartons in a neat Container. It's a big convenience to have a supply of sugar in the house and know you won't have to run out every time you want a pound or two."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

ganizer Smith writes us that he has five new associations to come into the State association. Success will come to the retailers only by hard work. Let us all work.

The Pennsylvania Plan is better understood than ever before. Merchants are commencing to realize the power that is behind it and are conscious of the fact that the manufacturers who are backing up the plan with money should receive the support that they deserve. For a list of the manufacturers in the plan read the advertisements in this issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

The same amount of money will be distributed at the Meadville convention ($2,500 in gold) as was handed out at Philadelphia. The only change in the plan is to divide the money more equitably so as to cover more lines of effort and to place every association in a position to be able to contest. We expect to print more details of the plan in the next issue.

The "Buy at Home" pamphlets are ready for circulation and circulars have been sent out to the associations naming the cost.

Every merchant in Pennsylvania should join a merchants' association. We expect this year to see that an invitation to do this is sent to every retailer in the State.

Cider and Vinegar Cheaper This Year.

Cider will be cheaper this year on account of the great crop of apples. Orders for new goods are now being taken, on a basis of 10 cents per gallon f. o. b. the factory in carload lots. Last year the price was 12 cents. New vinegar prices are not yet made, and will not be for some weeks, but they are also expected to be lower for the same reason.

I have a copy of "Tettelbach's Flyer," from R. F. Tettelbach, the "Nu Way Grocer," whose town or city, rather oddly, does not appear upon his circular. I suppose it could have been learned from the postmark on the envelope, but that was thrown away before it became necessary to look for it, so at the present moment I am wholly unaware of Mr. Tettelbach's address. I do know, however, that he is doing some very good and very expensive advertising. His circular, which I reproduce below, is printed on extremely thick high-grade coated paper, rather unnecessarily good, I should say. Nobody on earth believes in good paper for advertising any more ardently than I do, but I don't believe in wasting money on it, and that I think perhaps Mr. Tettelbach is doing. He is using the kind of paper that the finest kind of colored art printing is done on, and if he issues many circulars it must count up. Here is the reduced circular:

ness, and the prices charged for the same goods by the ordinary dealer. I invite this comparison by quoting some of his own prices and suggesting that the reader compare them with what he is paying elsewhere, but I should caution it further—I should put it in my introduction. For instance, a point like this would always have weight: "To show you what a difference our way of doing business makes in prices, take Good Luck parlor matches. The regular price for these has always been 10 cents. I sold them myself at that price. I did business in the old way. But now I sell them to-day at 8 cents, and make as much profit as I used to at 10, while you save 2 cents—20 per cent." If Mr. Tettelbach's plan really does lower selling prices, and I am sure that it can, his stock is full of instances like this which would have very great weight with any consumer. Compare, compare! That is what I advise Mr. Tettelbach to preach in all of his advertising, for in a way he has a row to hoe. He is asking consumers to turn their backs on credit, delivery stamps, all conveniences which they have learned to love and which they can find at innumerable other stores. To succeed in that he must offer something very attractive. Not only offer it, but put it in people's faces and down their throats every chance he gets.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter so far as the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Big Mail Order Houses Stop Selling Sugar.

Both of the big Chicago mail order houses, Sears, Roebuck & Co. and Montgomery Ward & Co., have withdrawn from the sugar business, owing to high prices, and Sears, Roebuck & Co. have temporarily gone out of the grocery business altogether. Montgomery Ward & Co. sent out a sugar price in August, offering sugar at a price which it guaranteed against advance until September 1st. In spite of that, the house refused to sell sugar several days before September 1st, thus violating its guarantee. The general belief is that both of these houses have been rather hard hit by the sugar advances.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

This Grocer Retailed Flour and Sugar Below Wholesale Price. How It Paid Him

Erie (Pa.) Contributor Differs With Those Who Believe It Good Business to Always Advance With the Market Even If You Have Spot Stock. An Actual Experience With War Prices.

If Mr. I. M. Rothenberger, of Pennington, N. J., is really sincere in his wish to meet a retail dealer who does not advance prices in spite of advances in the market he can meet such a fellow at the Market Basket, 910 Parade St., Erie, Pa. Our competitors call us crazy, but our patrons think differently of us. This whole thing is simply a matter of opinion. If I buy an article to sell at 10 cents and I had the last in the country and the wholesale price went to a dollar, I would sell at 10 cents as intended until my stock was gone. Just simply a matter of opinion, you see. I would never condemn a man who does differently from my doings or thinks differently from the way I think; that is everyone's right.

As the advances on flour and sugar were the most rapid and really the most important, I will tell about my selling these two articles at retail for less than wholesale price. Three or four days before the rise in flour started I had on hand and in storage 190 barrels of flour; not cheap flour, but the best in the market. When flour started to advance we held to the old prices; we were selling flour at the rate of $6 per barrel when the wholesale price was $6.80. Some of the brands we carried went even higher. We never worried about the price; we sold our entire stock at the same old price until every sack was gone. Now we buy a week's supply at a time. If flour was suddenly to go back to where it was we would be out practically nothing. Our stock moved out so rapidly that our money was turned several times, where otherwise it would have been turned but once.

The same thing happened with sugar. Sugar advanced so rapidly it was almost impossible to keep track of the price. We found ourselves with about three tons of sugar with prices ranging from $4.40 to $7 per cwt. Not wishing to be the highest and not caring to be losers one way or another we advertised sugar at 6 cents a pound when the wholesale price was $7.40 per cwt. We limited the amount given to each purchaser to five pounds. It took us just two and one-half hours to sell our entire stock. We follow the same rules with everything in stock—selling at the same old prices until our stocks are exhausted. This might be poor business but we think it good. Perhaps we are a little selfish in following this rule for it more than pays us. When other fellows complain about no business we find business hours far too short to do our day's work in never being idle for a minute.

Postoffice Department Investigating Pinkerton Collection Agency

Complaint Has Been Made That Pinkerton & Co., U. S. Detective Agency, Which is a Collection Agency, Has Been Fraudulently Using the Mails. Scope of Questions Sent Out by Government Indicates Scope of Complaint.

The Post Office Department is after the Pinkerton Collection Agency, of Chicago, Ill. It has done business under the name of "Pinkerton & Co., U. S. Detective Agency," and the original Pinkerton Detective Agency has for years been accusing it of attempting to palm itself off with business people all over the country as the real Pinkerton concern. The Chicago outfit used a letterhead of which the following is a photograph:— of the National Retail Grocers' Association, reflecting rather severely upon the above concern for its methods of getting collection business. The Chicago Pinkertons at once threatened this paper and Mr. Green with libel suits, and have been threatening ever since, but nothing has come out of it.

The Post Office Department says complaint has been made that the Pinkerton Agency has been guilty of fraudulently using

1. What business, if any, and nature thereof have you transacted with Pinkerton & Co., U. S. Detective Agency?

2. In doing business with said concern, did you think or were you led to believe that you were dealing with the original Pinkerton Detective Agency?

a. Was it represented that this concern was connected by relationship or otherwise with the original Pinkerton Agency?

3. Did you enter into contract with Pinkerton & Co., U. S. Detective Agency, for the collection of your old accounts?

a. How much did you pay them and on what date?

b. What was the amount to be collected?

c. How much has been collected and turned over to you?

4. What particular inducement was held out or statements made which caused you to enter into the agreement?

a. What representations were made as to the methods employed in collecting accounts? Was it by detectives or by ordinary methods?

5. What was the name and address of agent or representatives with whom you did business?

a. Did he represent himself as a detective or as a representative selling contracts?

b. What did he state as to the location and number of offices of his concern and the facilities for collecting accounts?

c. State any other representations made to you material to the above questions?

rected to prices in Camden, N. J., of foodstuffs bought in the Philadelphia markets, and those of Newark and Jersey City, which are bought in New York markets. He believes that this field offers advantages for such an investigation, in that it will scrutinize in a comparatively small territory trade direct ascertainable as interstate commerce. An effort will be made to determine if fixing of food prices in Camden results from any agreement among dealers in Philadelphia, and similarly such a relation exists among New York dealers affecting prices in Jersey City and Newark. The next indictment likely to be sought by the Government as a result of the food investigation, was said to-day, will involve certain sugar refiners in Utah. It was predicted by Department of Justice officials several weeks ago that these indictments would have been reported before now but the Attorney-General thought it best that further evidence be sought before the case is laid before a Grand Jury.

Several months ago the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" published an article written by John A. Green, secretary of the National Retail Grocers' Association, reflecting rather severely upon the above concern for its methods of getting collection business. The Chicago Pinkertons at once threatened this paper and Mr. Green with libel suits, and have been threatening ever since, but nothing has come out of it.

The Post Office Department says complaint has been made that the Pinkerton Agency has been guilty of fraudulently using the mails. The following questions have been prepared for the purpose of eliciting information on the subject:—

Give Your Jobber a Square Deal and Other People Will Give You One

Little talks between wholesalers and retailers on the ethics of fair business—what is square and what is tricky?—Doing unto the jobber as you would have him and other people do unto you.

No. 3

You order something from your jobber, f. o. b. your jobber's address, you to pay the freight. Something happens to it after the jobber has delivered it to the railroad—part of it is either damaged or missing.

It seems easy and convenient to deduct for that from the jobber's bill, but is it fair? The goods became yours the minute they were delivered to the railroad, when the jobber's jurisdiction over them ended. He didn't lose them, he didn't damage them. Is it fair to force on him the loss or the trouble of claiming on the railroad?

It is astonishing how much more comfortable life is when you realize you are treating all men fairly.

ing the week. Interstate shipments of food products that are regarded as unfit for human consumption and have not been denatured will hereafter be seized by the Federal authorities, no matter what labels they may bear. The Bureau of Chemistry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture holds that the label is no obstacle against such products being used for food. Before they can be shipped, therefore, in interstate commerce they must be so denatured that they can only be used for technical purposes.

Another opinion deals with prospective violations of the law compelling all food products shipped in interstate commerce after September 3, 1914, to have the net weight stated on the label. The department holds that the burden of proof rests upon persons guilty of such violations to show that the products in question were either prepared or imported prior to September 3d. Persons who cannot prove this will be subject to the penalties prescribed by the Food and Drugs Act.

Opinions on the correct branding of canned vegetables, poultry food and cheeses are also announced. According to these, the use of sugar in canning does not justify the use of such terms as sweet corn, sugar corn, and sugar peas. These terms must be reserved for the varieties of the vegetables in question which are distinctly sweet and which are known as sugar corn or sugar peas in their natural state.

When shipped in interstate commerce or otherwise subject to the Food and Drugs Act, all skimmed or part skimmed cheeses must be plainly branded "skimmed" or "part skimmed," in accordance with the facts, on the wrapper or container of each cheese. Where the cheese is of the size commonly sold uncut to one customer the rind of the cheese itself must bear the statement.

List of Countries Which European War Will Bring Into the Market For All Kinds of American Products, and the Products Needed in Each Case. Enormous Trade Possibilities Shown by Government Compilation.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

October 2, 1914.

An active effort is about to be made by the United States Government to aid the sale of American goods in the various foreign countries which, by reason of the war, are certain to be buyers. A careful list has been made of these countries, and official information obtained as to the particular goods which they either want now or shortly will want. The Government believes this list serves a two-fold purpose. It is a direct aid to manufacturers who are about to seek foreign markets, and it clearly reveals the immense volume of trade on all kinds of American products which we are certain to do, sooner or later, with foreign countries. The list is here presented:—

Bergen, Norway.—The present situation will cause increased demand for cotton, woolen, linen, leather, rubber and electrical goods, hardware, tools, machinery, bar iron, beams, piping, fittings, iron, tin and zinc plate metal, paper and woodworking machinery, sugar, syrup, rye and wheat flour, chemicals, dyes, musical and scientific instruments. The principal exports from Bergen are fish, cod liver oil, skins.

Christiana, Norway.—America may supply Christiana district with rye, wheat, corn, corn meal, flour of all kinds, peas, rice, beans, sugar, syrup, molasses, grease, lard, fruits, electrical appliances, batteries, cables, copper and iron wire, iron and steel plates, angle iron and steel for ship building machinery, sulphur, druggists' supplies, medical and surgical instruments, gauze, absorbent cotton, chemicals of all sorts, soda, notions, novelties. Exports consist of mackerel, cheese, hides, chalk, cod liver oil, wood pulp, cellulose, nitrate of lime, nitrate of ammonia, matches, wood flour, paper, nickel, ferrosilicon, calcium carbide, aluminum, hardened whale oil, paving stone.

Rotterdam, Netherlands.—Articles specially needed in Holland include wheat flour and other foodstuffs. No embargoes on imports.

No moratorium. No obstacles to American export trade except contraband of war. Transportation facilities are fair, while banking and exchange are steady.

Patras, Greece.—Imports needed: Sugar, wheat, rice, coffee, codfish, cotton goods, copperas, coal, lumber, iron manufactures. Exports seeking markets: Currants, raisins, olive oil, sulphur oil, wine.

Malaga, Spain.—America may supply coal, wheat, lard, condensed milk, iron, steel, hardware, tools, phosphate, fertilizer, glassware, paper, leathers; directs imports small. Barcelona chief distributors. Markets desired for wines, olives, essential oil, pig lead, iron ore, bones, orange peel, aniseed.

Barcelona, Spain.—Merchandise needed at Barcelona: Coal, wheat, cotton, petroleum, chemicals, electrical equipment, corset metals, steel products, cotton mill equipment. Competition reduced in typewriters, office supplies, household hardware, woodenware, automobile parts, tires, electric bulbs, cutlery, tools, lumber, railway ties. Receipts of cotton are practically suspended, the chief obstacles being poor transportation and facilities for payment; this also applies to a limited extent to coal and lumber. Credit should be given to importers. No official moratorium. Exports available: Cork and bark products, glue stock and skins, glycerin, argols, canned peppers and paprika, cigarette paper, garlic, saffron, fusel oil, sulphur and olive oil, nuts and wine.

Aden, Arabia.—America may supply cotton cloth and thread, plain dyestuffs, gasoline, kerosene, soap, candles, flour, millet, starch, hardware, building wood, cement, glassware, iron bars, shoes, coal, canned goods, preserves, liquors, cheap enameled ware, automobile accessories, pottery. Market desired for hides, skins, coffee, beeswax, gums, ivory senna, pearl shells. Freight to America up to 50 per cent.

Zanzibar, Zanzibar.—Market in Zanzibar and East Africa for flour, groceries, hardware, kerosene, piece goods. Exports cloves and copra.

Boma, Belgium Kongo.—The United States should supply rice, flour, meats, milk, wine, beef, medicines, petroleum, coal. Kongo desires market for rubber, ivory, gum copal, palm kernels. Belgian consul in New York can give details.

Saigon, French Indo-China.—Possible market for American linen, woolen and cotton piece goods, thread, flour, canned milk, canned goods, preserves, hardware, structural iron and steel. Articles seeking market: Copra, pepper, gums and hides.

Nagasaki, Japan.—The Nagasaki district would take American drugs, chemicals, pulp, malt, wines, iron, steel electrical supplies. Market desired for porcelain.

Seoul, Chosen.—Markets open for flour, salted herring, condensed milk, kerosene, timber, paper, drugs, dyes, metals and manufactures thereof, electric apparatus, glass explosives. Exports are practically all absorbed by neighboring countries.

Auckland, New Zealand.—Mercantile needs include drugs, chemicals, glassware, pianos, fencing wire, locomotives, crockery, enameled ware, printing, paper, hardware, automobiles, aluminum, chairs. New Zealand exports for which market is desired: Frozen meats, butter, kauri gum, wool, hemp.

Port Antonio, Jamaica.—Principal imports affected by restriction of supplies from Europe: Condensed milk, butter, margarin, beer, malt, jams, confectionery, sweet biscuits, pickles, condiments, safety matches, laundry soap, saddlery, leather goods, hardware, paints, crockery, stationery, hosiery, buttons, underwear, ribbons, millinery, printed cottons, cotton tweeds, cotton sheetings, neckwear, notions, musical instruments, dolls, toys. Export market wanted for coffee, cocoa, pimento (allspice), dyewoods, honey, beeswax.

Turks Island, West Indies.—America may supply potatoes, flour, beans, salt meats, staple groceries, cotton goods and take in return coarse and fishery salt.

Georgetown, British Guiana.—Merchandise stocks normal; probable market for flour, coal, drugs, sulphate ammonia, corrugated iron, butter, bacon, salt fish, salt beef, pork provisions, cotton goods, shoes. Market desired for balata, sugar, rice, diamonds. Banking conditions normal.

St. Pierre, St. Pierre Island.—Increased demand for provisions from America probable in near future. Fish exports following usual channels.

Halifax, Nova Scotia.—Under present conditions the United States might supply this district with following: Cutlery, machine tools, drugs, chemicals, glass and earthenware, toys and novelties. Market desired for lumber.

Sydney, Nova Scotia.—Crockery, drugs, glass, jewelry, liquors, paper, textiles, toys, wines, are needed. Exports are coal, iron ore, pig iron, steel rails, ingots, nails, rods, fertilizers, fish, sulphate of ammonia, crude gypsum, cement.

Moncton, New Brunswick.—Principal articles required are window glass, sheet zinc, pig lead, block tin.

Rimouski, Quebec Province.—Aside from the general increase in prices of foodstuffs, meats, provisions, grains, etc., local conditions are practically normal. There is an abundant supply in the general stores to meet the demand for home consumption for several months.

Sherbrooke, Quebec Province.—Volunteers in concentration camp from this district make dull market; economy is the rule in purchases. Hosiery, electrical, household and kitchen specialties offer best opportunities at present.

Kingston, Ontario Province.—Trade opportunities include buttons, linens, trimmings, dress goods, laces, knitting wool, fabric, gloves, hosiery, knitted scarfs, braids (all kinds), musical merchandise, Belgian double barrel guns, revolvers, glass, tennis strings, combs and hairpins, toilet articles, toys, dolls, leather goods, chinaware, cut glass pins, needles, hooks and eyes, sulphur, saltpeter, German text books, lead and slate pencils, writing and printing paper, cardboard, vegetables, parchment paper, plate glass, enameled ware.

Hamilton, Ontario Province.—Principal articles for American houses to supply: Tin, lighting supplies, paper, porcelain tubs, sheet and tool steel, machine tools, dyestuffs, cutlery, china and crockery ware, glass, hosiery, silks, velvets, laces, ladies' woolen mantles, millinery, ready-to-wear dresses, coats, waists, collars.

Cornwall, Ontario Province.—No immediate demand here for increased American goods except for gloves, hosiery, knit underwear and ladies' ready-to-wear goods. Other articles may be needed if disturbed European conditions continue. Practically no exports from here, because almost all factory products are sold in Canada.

Calgary, Alberta.—Principal articles which America may supply for Alberta: Iron, steel and metals and manufactures thereof; woolen goods, locomotive and car wheel tires, cotton manufactures of all kinds, gloves and mittens, silk hosiery, glass, musical instruments, toys and dolls, paper, paint, sugar. Articles exported for which market desired: Grain and meats.

Winnipeg, Manitoba.—The principal articles from Middle Europe sold in this consular district: Braids, fancy boxes, clocks, cutlery, combs, cotton manufactures, particularly cheap hosiery and gloves; electrical apparatus, especially glass fixtures, cheap jewelry, cotton lace, lead pencils, rubber manufactures, imitation silk, tools, toys, violins. Principal exports from this district: Agricultural implements, cattle, fish, flax, furs, hides, lumber.

Victoria, Canada.—Vancouver Island imperatively needs daily beef, mutton, pork, eggs and butter, all from the United States. The island needs clocks, drugs, cutlery, optical goods, liquors, novelties, toys, barbed wire and wire netting, structural iron and steel, table and window glass, hardware, enameled goods, tin plate and other goods. The island exports salmon, lumber, fish and whale oil for soap manufacturing.

Porto Rico Coffee Crop Will Have to be Sold Here This Year.

Amounts to 50,000,000 Pounds. Europe Has Always Taken It All, But That Market is Closed This Year and it Will be Offered in the United States!

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

October 2, 1914.

Europe has until now purchased almost the entire Porto Rican crop of coffee, which amounts to about 50,000,000 pounds per annum.

On account of the war conditions in Europe, Porto Rico will be obliged to depend on the American market for the sale of this year's crop, which will be harvested between September 1st and January 1st. Many merchants in the United States are already dealing in this coffee.

Free samples of the roasted or green coffee is being sent to any one who sends 4 cents for postage to the Commercial Agent of Porto Rico, 8 Beach street, New York.

number of inquiries along the line of the following:—

Philadelphia, Sept. 26, 1914.

To the Editor.—

Dear Sir:—Would you please inform me regarding the law which went into effect September 1st compelling all packages and bottle goods to have the net weight marked on? Is this up to the storekeeper, jobber or manufacturer?

Yours truly,

JOSEPH O'NEILL.

The net weight law which went into effect September 3d was the Federal law—an amendment to the National Food and Drugs Acts of June 30, 1906. It has no application to retail dealers who break the packages in which goods are shipped to them, and sell smaller packages from them to people within their own State. The Federal act provides simply that package food and drugs shall bear upon the label a statement of the net weight of contents, if they become a part of interstate commerce by passing from one State to another.

Goods sold by a Pennsylvania dealer to Pennsylvania customers need pay no attention to the Federal law, for they are not a part of interstate commerce. But they are subject to a State act much like the Federal act. The Pennsylvania State law goes actively into effect January 1st next, though nominally it is in effect now. No prosecutions will be brought, however, until the first of 1915. When this law goes into effect it will be incumbent on everybody who sells package goods, manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer, to see that the net weight appears upon the label. Of course the original duty is that of the manufacturer. If he does it it will be done for everybody. But as to goods already on the retailer's shelves, upon which the manufacturer has not put any label of net weight, they must be labeled by the retailer, according to the view of the State authorities who will enforce the law.

A large and well-known flour manufacturer expressed an opinion to a "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" representative during the week which is worthy of reproduction here.

Listen and Heed This Prediction.

"Money is to-day tight," he said, "as everybody knows, and in my judgment it will continue tight for a year or two no matter how soon the war ends. Because it is tight there will have to be a curtailment of credits all along the line. The manufacturer will—in fact has already begun to—tighten up his credits with jobbers, and jobbers will do the same with retailers. Retailers must do the same with consumers, but they will probably be the last to do it, though they should be the first. Retailers ought to be urged to house-clean their credits at once and to keep them house-cleaned from now on. It is always easier to do this now than later; conditions never improve of themselves. Certainly they must do it sooner or later, or be forced out of business."

Perhaps this prediction is a little strong; perhaps the outlook is not quite as critical as this prophet would have us believe, but there is much in what he says. With or without a war, there is always need for the average retailer to house-clean his credits. In all our experience we have never known a retailer to lean toward the extreme of severity in credits—the leaning is all the other way. It is always the consumer who gets the big end. Not alone from the small stores; we have known of cases (not our own) where the John Wanamaker store has allowed customers' bills to run nine months without doing any more than to send little notes and statements.

There is never any decent reason why a consumer should make a convenience of his grocer—why he should pay his insurance, and his department store bills, and his taxes and his general bills first and the grocer last. That happens every day. And it will continue to happen until the grocer asserts himself. Can he afford to assert himself? That is a question, particularly where there are many stores and no association, or an association to which a minority of the merchants belong. With a strong association, he can always assert himself, though in many cases he does not do so even then.

A beautiful scheme has been interrupted and may be broken up.

Convicted,

We refer to the scheme of "Pinkerton & Co. U. S. Detective Agency," of Chicago, which for some time has been running a collection agency business. Both large and small business people—consumers, too, no doubt—thought this concern was the original Pinkerton Detective Agency, and acted accordingly. There is a difference of opinion as to whether the Chicago Pinkertons fostered that delusion. They say they did not, while many others say they persistently and deliberately traded on the Pinkerton reputation. In the belief that the latter charge may be true, the United States Postal Department is now making an investigation.

Is there a collection agency that is straight clear through? That uses no misrepresentations in its canvass for business, no exaggerated promises; that honestly works to collect money for its patrons, and uses no trickery in the process? And that promptly returns all the money it collects, less its fair and honest charges?

There may be such, but we don't know any.

A Farmer's First Hand View on Parcels Post

The other day at a country fair not far from Philadelphia I had just bought a couple of dozen ears of corn from an old farmer who was varying his pleasures as exhibitor by selling stuff from his farm.

I paid him 20 cents a dozen, which did not seem exorbitant until I had had the corn cooked and tasted it.

A man who looked like another farmer was standing by, observing the transaction. When I had paid for the corn and was turning away, he spoke to me—

"That's the advantage of being near a large market," he said. "Here's this old fellow selling his corn at a beautiful price, while other farmers can't get anything for theirs."

"What other farmers?" I asked.

"Those where I live," he said, "down in the southern part of Gloucester County, N. J. Down there you can't get anything for your corn because it's such a nuisance to get it to market—it's a long trip to Philadelphia, the big market. Unless a man has the right kind of team he's stuck there with a lot of stuff that city consumers would gladly pay good prices for.

"Take potatoes," he said. "Down there you can't get 10 cents a bushel for potatoes for home consumption. City consumers are paying 45 cents a bushel for them. It's very discouraging."

"Are you a farmer?" I asked.

"Yes."

"Why don't you try parcels post?" I had an idea I was giving him something new, but it developed that he knew much more about parcels post than I did. Most of the more intelligent farmers do, I imagine.

"The parcels post doesn't seem to be working out so as to help the farmer," he said. "The trouble is to get in touch with the people who will buy that way."

I mentioned what the Government was doing to put the farmer and consumer together, but he didn't seem impressed. "Another question which needs to be worked out," he said, "is the question of credits. I want cash for my goods I ship by mail, and the average person doesn't want to send cash in advance before he sees the goods. Opening accounts with a lot of strangers is impracticable—no farmer could do it."

"Then there is the uncertainty of the mails," he added. "That is the worst of all. I ship eggs or poultry or some other perishable stuff. It has got to reach its destination at the earliest possible minute or be lost. You never can tell with the mails. For the farmer, using the parcels post is so complicated and has so many holes in it that I don't believe it will ever work out. I am expecting more from open city markets where the farmer and the consumer can meet together."

I reproduce this conversation because it emphasizes what has always been and probably always will be the fatally weak places in the parcels post scheme. At least that part of it which involves the shipping of food products direct by farmers to consumers.

Here's an Advertising Plan That is Working

Not Only Gets Business But Brings Customers In. Special Cash Combinations For Given Days. New York State Contributor Says Customers Spend Twenty to Fifty Per Cent. More When They Come to the Store.

Mr. Charles L. Goetzmann, general merchant of West Webster, N. Y., writes this paper about an advertising plan he has been using, which he says is proving a business getter. Not only is it getting business, but it is bringing customers to the store, according to him, which of course every retailer wishes to do if he can. We reproduce Mr. Goetzmann's description of his plan, together with reproductions of his circulars:—

Since June 1st I have been sending my customers a circular similar to the small one inclosed, which we change weekly. The large ones are being posted in conspicuous places in the store. In town the circulars are delivered by a small boy and out of the village they are sent by R. F. D. We change the color of the circulars monthly, to give variety.

This system is proving a business getter, as customers are forced to come to the store in order to avail themselves of the special offers, and in coming to the store they notice the stock, which we try to display to the best advantage. We estimate that our customers usually invest from 20 to 50 per cent. more than they otherwise would. It also stimulates us—myself and clerks as well—into talking our goods and in using good taste in their display.

Here is the small circular, which is delivered by hand:—

¶ Never was there such a chance as there is now for a retail merchant to ride into prosperity upon the crest of the national advertising wave. There is more national advertising, it is being more generally read, and the merchant who will yoke up with it and use it—squeeze the last dollar out of it that he can get for himself—will find a force behind him that he can never get from the sale of unknown brands.

More Farmer-to-Consumer Parcel Post Work.

Philadelphia was one of the 15 cities selected for extension of the farm-to-city service by parcel post, according to an announcement made last Thursday by Postmaster-General Burleson. The cities selected were: Chicago, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Indianapolis, Denver, Seattle, Portland, Cleveland, New Orleans, Austin, Providence, Nashville, Los Angeles, Hartford and Richmond. The new service becomes effective October 1st. Postmasters of the smaller towns in contiguous farming areas will prepare lists of farmers who are desirous of selling their products direct to city buyers via parcel post. Each farmer will be required to specify articles which he desires to sell. The lists then will be sent to the postmasters of the large cities, where they will be printed and distributed by the letter carriers.

Talk of Co-operative Delivery Among Retailers in Various Lines. Organized Grocers Talk of Rising Against City Market Plan. New Chain Store Idea is Twenty Retail Fish Stores. Corporation Formed to Exploit "Made-in-America" Goods. Market Summary.

New York, October 2, 1914.

There has been considerable discussion during the past week among the retail trade, meaning especially grocers, butchers and bakers as to the feasibility of establishing a co-operative delivery system in this city. The plan has aroused widespread comment and seems to have originated with the Commissioner of Weights and Measures, who some time ago issued a statement in which he advocated more systematic organization for the delivery of merchandise sold to consumers.

The usual arguments for co-operative delivery, namely, economy and increased efficiency, are being made, but they are not proving convincing to the entire retail trade by any means. Many retailers feel that such a plan in a city as large as this would not be practical. The following suggestion is made as to the beginnings of the plan: In certain zones of the city will be established central stations to receive from the retailer and distribute to the customer, butcher, grocer and baker. The project involves the central station to have its delivery wagons call within the zone of the different retailers on the schedule of receiving deliveries every hour during the dull hours of trade, and every half hour during the busier hours of trade each day, the packages to be brought to the central station and there separated and sorted for house delivery, the packages to be carried from the retailer to the consumer on a schedule of prices based upon capacity as to pounds. It is said 5 cents for each package less than 50 pounds, 10 cents for a package 100 pounds and under. The central station could act for the retailer in cash on delivery transactions, as well as a clearing house through its delivery agents to receive orders.

The organized grocers of the city are beginning to rise against the City Market plan. The call to arms was sounded last week by Charles Thorpe, secretary of the New York Retail Grocers' Association, who issued the following statement:—

GROCERS WAKE UP.

It is high time that the retail grocers wake up to the new form of competition that has made its appearance during the past few weeks.

The retail grocers of this city have shown that they are capable of meeting the competition of the chain stores, the calico grocery, etc., but whether they can meet the unfair competition imposed upon them by the city authorities in the establishing of free markets is another question.

The retailer pays rent and taxes, license for one commodity and another, and in addition has numerous calls from inspectors to see that he conducts his business in a way that meets with the approval of those who have laid down the law.

On the other hand, the city authorities allow outsiders, under the guise of selling direct to the consumer from the producer, to occupy space in our public places and do business without contributing one cent to help to pay the expenses of the city administrations.

This is what we have more than once called unfair competition. It is not justice for the city authorities to demand taxes from the retailer and then turn round and use the taxpayer's money to foster competition of the nature that is to be seen in these free markets.

With all the publicity of the newspapers and with the solid backing of Borough President Marks and his committee, coupled with the fact that the farmers and occupiers of these stands pay no rent or taxes, there is considerable doubt that taking all in all whether the housewife as a whole is really making a saving, or that the high cost of living has been reduced by the free markets.

The other night one of the city officials said that he did not think that any retail grocer lost a dollar's worth of business through the free markets. The answer to that is—every dollar taken in at the free markets for produce comes out of the pocket of the retail grocer.

To make the free markets permanent would be a crime against the retailers of the city. If the city authorities are desirous to engage in the business of buying and selling they should be willing to do business with no advantage such as free rent and no taxes.

The retail grocer, we believe, is willing to meet any fair competition in the conducting of his business, but it is unfair and unbusinesslike for our city authorities to promote competition that gives favors to one and not to the other.

There should go up from the retail grocers a big protest to the city authorities against discrimination such as is shown by the free markets.

Unfortunately there are not many who believe that the opposition of the organized grocers would amount to very

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

On Being Neutral.—Whether your sympathy is with the Germans or with the allies, the proper thing to do in business is to keep a respectful neutrality of speech. You may say we live in a free country and have a right to express our opinion.

Sure you have—in the proper sphere.

Back of that counter you represent a firm that accepts U. S. money from all classes, all creeds, all nationalities. They deal at your store because you have received them politely and served them attentively.

They're your friends. Is it wise to break this bond of business friendship unnecessarily?

Is it wise to assail the government under whose protection they were born and the people there of who are still dear to their heart?

No sir, it is not.

In so far as it has worked out so superbly at the White House, just in proportion will it apply in your case and mine.

Some First Things.—The first sack of Brazil nuts you receive should be dumped into the show window.

The first buckwheat placed right near the door and the first barrel of cider tapped right in the store.

All first things deserve a prominent place for two reasons. One is for the sake of announcement and the other for the sake of getting people started early in the season on your goods.

We have great faith in first sales on new goods, because if quality is there, continued patronage will be there, too.

Some stores make a great feature pure sweet cider—apple juice, as it is now properly called. One firm increased their sales from three barrels a season to 15 barrels, all because it was tapped and sold right in the store and because the men pushed it, sending it out in clear glass gallon jars.

Enthusiasm's the Thing.—This habit of keeping mum all the time about goods sends a fellow to seed. That is, it makes him what Mayor Mitchell would call a "non-producer."

Just imagine a fully grown man getting some wages and three meals a day and still numbered with dead ones.

Just wake up and get nutty on some one thing every day—that's enthusiasm.

No doubt our old professor would define it in more classical English. But the above is good enough for our business.

Said an old merchant the other day: "I never in my life discharged an enthusiastic clerk if he was honest."

much. The cry in this city from every standpoint is: "Reduce the high cost of living," and there is a well-founded feeling among the public that city markets, maintained under the auspices of the municipal government, would do this. While there is only very slight evidence so far that this is true, nevertheless, there is some evidence, and it is believed that the grocers' position would not be considered disinterested.

A new idea in chain stores is about to be tried here, in the shape of 20 retail fish stores, which will be started in the Manhattan district early in October. It is announced that they will buy fish direct from fishermen operating all the way from Maine to Maryland, and selling only fresh pound fish. It is said that a capitalist hitherto unknown to the food business, is behind the idea, and that he was inspired to invest his money in the chain of fish stores by the effort of the Mayor's Committee on Food Supply to extend the general use of fish.

At present in this city the demand for fish is enormous on Friday, and is comparatively little on other days.

The new concern will have a capital of $50,000.

A charter was granted during the week in Albany to "Made in America Products Association," with a nominal capital of $10,000. The new incorporation is the crystallization of the plan which is now taking form among business people to use the present situation for exploiting American products. The stock is to be issued in shares of $100 each, and nobody will be permitted to buy more than one share, which admits to membership in the association. Nobody can buy even one share who is not the representative of an important manufacturing or distributing concern.

Headquarters have been opened at 115 Broadway. The prime movers are: President, Mr. C. A. Whelan, of the United Cigar Stores Co.; Carl J. Schumann, of Moller & Schumann, varnish manufacturers; Harry Tipper, president of the Advertising Men's League; R. A. Holmes, of Crofut & Knapp Co., manufacturers of hats; Henry Thompson, of Thompson, Freedman & Cooke.

The association proposes to launch a comprehensive and carefully planned advertising campaign in newspapers and magazines, the theme of which will, of course, be the advantages of American-made products.

Backers of the campaign contend that in a very short time American consumers can become entirely independent of foreign products. Members will be asked to pay a fixed sum monthly towards the expenses of the enterprise.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet on account of sufficient spot stocks. Prices fairly steady during the week.—Coffee heavy and weaker in Brazil. Demand very light.—Sugar unchanged at 6.50 to 6.75 cents for granulated. Demand quiet.—Dried fruits in light demand and unchanged in price from a week ago. Citron somewhat eas-

So far as we know, we have never seen the contract these people use and can therefore not speak with intelligence about them. Their collecting fee, however, is far too high.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. The demand is still fair, though it lacks the keenness of a few weeks ago. Prices are slowly easing off, and apparently will be normal again in a short time.

Coffee.

The coffee market is still in an unsatisfactory condition from the holders' standpoint, though not so bad from the buyers'. Values in Rio and Santos coffees are easy, nobody is buying coffee except for immediate wants, and the situation is as usual when sellers are more anxious to sell than buyers are to buy. Mild coffees are also easy and not very active. Java and Mocha unchanged and dull.

Sugar.

Sugar is steadily weakening. Raws have dropped to 5.02 cents, though it is reported to be hard to buy at that. Refined is still 6¾ cents for granulated, with the Federal selling at 6½ cents. The margin between the present price of raws and the selling price of refined is much too large, but the refiners are not getting the benefit of this because they are working on raw sugar for which they paid much more than 5.02. The outlook for sugar is downward, and a 6-cent market is predicted by January 1st, if not before. Home-made beet granulated is being offered in Chicago as low as 5¾ cents, which shows more than the usual difference between beet granulated and regular refiners' granulated. The crop this year will be about 100,000 tons below last year, which is by no means all due to the lowered tariff.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is coming into some demand as the weather cools. The price is off 10 points. Sugar syrup scarce, high and in light demand. Molasses dull at high prices.

Fish.

Mackerel is still inclined to be easy, shore mackerel especially. The trade do not want shore fish when they can get Norways, and in consequence holders of shores are pressing them for sale, at prices that would probably be pretty close to those ruling before the war, with very few takers. Norway mackerel are coming in now, at prices that show no change from last week. They are wanted. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged, being high in price and fairly active. Salmon unchanged and dull at the moment. Domestic sardines easier and in light demand. French and Portuguese sardines still very scarce. None are coming over and none will come over this season. Prices of the small spot stock are very high, but unchanged for the week. Norwegian sardines have been coming over right along, and the stock in the country is now good—enough to last for several months. Some factories have closed, but there is no sign of any immediate scarcity. Norwegian sardines are ruling at very moderate prices.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged from a week ago. The demand is fair, and information is that the pack is about over. Definite data as to the size of the pack is still entirely lacking, and will not be available much before the first of the year. Corn and peas are unchanged for the week, corn being the stronger of the two, with a short pack in prospect in various sections, notably Maine. Early frosts are responsible. Apples are unchanged and dull. California canned goods are dull from first hands, and also from second hands holders, as the consuming demand has not yet begun. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are dull, with most of the trade expecting lower prices, particularly if the demand does not improve. Peaches are still very cheap, but dull, and apricots are dull at unchanged prices. Raisins unchanged. The California combination says it sold more than half the crop at the opening, in spite of the large previous sales of 1913 reprocessed goods. Currants are unchanged on spot. Futures are priced at 7¾ to 8 cents in a large way, and spot prices will probably get down to that very shortly. Other dried fruits, citron, dates and figs still scarce and high but unchanged for the week. Prospects point to about the usual supply of dates, in spite of the war, but the outlook is not quite so certain as to figs.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are working down, and stock has been offered to come forward during the week as low as $2.43 in a large way. This is a drop of nearly $1 per bushel from war prices. Marrows are off 10 cents and are now quoted at $3.90 in a large way. California limas on spot are off 50 points and are now quoted at 7 cents per pound, with futures nearly 1 cent lower. Green and Scotch peas are also easing off and are about 10 cents per bushel lower.

Butter.

The butter market remains unchanged for the week, with about the usual consumptive demand. The make is about normal for the season, and the quality is improving with the cooler weather. Nearby butter is very scarce and all grades of it meet with ready sale at present prices. No immediate change seems in sight.

Eggs.

The bulk of the eggs arriving show only fair quality and are being sold at concessions. Strictly fancy eggs are scarce and are selling readily at full present prices. Storage stocks of eggs are reported to be larger than last year, and the market is only steady. If there is any change it will probably be a slight decline.

Cheese.

Cheese is steady and unchanged, with a fair consumptive demand. Stocks are reported a little heavier than a year ago. The quality arriving is very good and the market is fairly healthy at present prices.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are in normal consumptive demand, at prices somewhat higher than usual for the season. A decline is likely as the season advances. Pure and compound lard are barely steady and if they change at all will probably decline. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are all firm and unchanged, with a moderate demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS

Standard Canned Goods.

This last week developed another surprise in the tomato market; in fact, two surprises, namely, the non-arrival of the anticipated, or rather the predicted glut in raw tomatoes, based on the very hot weather during the last two weeks, and, probably, all chances of a glut this season have gone a-glimmering, for the reason that it is now too late in the season, the nights being too cold for the fruit on the vine to ripen rapidly. The other surprise was the sudden decrease in the buying orders, in point of numbers as well as in the average size of them. In almost any kind of a season the month of September is counted among the heavy buying months and there are several very good reasons why this September should have played a star role in that direction. Before the canning season opened the buying of tomatoes for future delivery was the lightest in many years and the stocks in the hands of the jobbers from last year's crop were remarkably small, so that the liquidation of a big, broad market for new pack in September was considered to be excellent. Things market-wise have gone awry temporarily, but the jobber who has the courage to buy tomatoes at to-day's prices will have less trouble him in the next four months than the buyer who waits longer. Canned tomatoes are not going out of fashion this winter.

The receipts of raw tomatoes this week, instead of increasing heavily, are actually smaller than they were in the previous week, and not a cannery in Baltimore was able to secure enough tomatoes for a full day's work. Nor are they able to buy them any cheaper so that the cost of manufacture was less. In the face of these facts, the market prices of the canned article declined for the reason stated in our last week's letter. Everyone who knows something about it agrees that it is almost a sure thing that the output this season will be much less than it was last year, and that the average cost of manufacture will be higher. The basis of a stronger market being admitted, it remains to be seen what counter elements may develop to overcome it. In the other lines of vegetables there were three items that showed some strength in a dull market. Sweet potatoes were active and strongly inclined to advance because of unfavorable crop reports. Spinach and string beans were only other articles that found more buyers. But there was an absence of buyers for any other line of goods excepting the usual daily small-isolated orders. Some of the ordinary grades of oysters were easier this week because of lack of demand and all of the other lines were dull.

Further reports about the pear crop being short caused a small increase in the buying of them. Larger receipts of apples attract little attention to them, although the prices look inviting. Blackberries are firm, but none of the other items of canned fruits received much attention during the week, except peaches and second peaches, for which there is a fair demand and the prices are reasonable. Love oysters were dull this week; prices unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar campaign is practically over. The big advance in the market is due to the demand from abroad, and the sensational publication in the papers causing the housewife to buy sugar. The sustaining factor for the campaign was the demand from Great Britain, which last year imported 2,136,189 tons of sugar, say, 1,046,481 tons raws and balance refined. Of the raws, 471,000 tons came from Germany, 161,083 tons from Austria-Hungary, 11,377 tons from the Netherlands, 2,526 tons from Belgium, 223,980 tons from Cuba, and balance elsewhere. Of the refined 446,749 tons came from Germany, 198,431 tons from Austria-Hungary, 178,789 tons from Holland, 49,720 tons from Belgium, 26,576 tons from France and balance scattered. So you can see that the principal source of Great Britain's supply was cut off by the war. The continent of Europe was expected to produce this year 8,254,700 tons beets, the bulk of which is from the countries at war, as follows: Belgium, about 230,000 tons; France 900,000 tons; Germany 2,800,000 tons; Russia 2,000,000 tons; Austria 1,000,000 tons.

the German army spread itself over West Liege and East Brabant Provinces of Belgium, which produces one-half of the crop of that country, destroying buildings and factories, as well as fields, then later in Hainaut Province, which produces about one-third, and altogether, it is hardly expected that over 80,000 tons can be gathered. Later, in France, the German army's right flank passed Roubaix, in the Department of Nord, where there were 42 sugar factories, whose productions it was estimated this year would be 116,000 tons, following this they passed through the Departments of Calais, Somme and Oise, where there were 26, 37 and 21 factories, respectively, with estimated productions of 149,000, 134,000 and 114,000 tons of sugar, respectively. Then the Department of Aisne was entirely overrun, having 54 factories, with estimated productions of 194,000 tons; in the East the Department of Ardenne and Marne, 10 factories, producing 36,000 tons, were also crossed, and in the Department of Seine et Oise, which contains 12 factories and producing 58,000 tons, where the advance of the German army was stopped.

From the above we may fairly conclude that the beet crops in the Departments of Aisne, Nord, Calais, Somme, Oise, Seine et Marne, Marne and Ardennes are all or partly destroyed. These leave a possibility of harvesting about half the estimated crop in France and about 80,000 tons in Belgium, provided they are to get to work by December, and of course if there is no more damage done. There is no evidence that either the German, Austrian or Russian beet crops have been damaged as yet, as there are only a few factories in Galicia or Russian Poland and none in Western Germany.

It is apparent that the damage to the foreign growing beet is not as bad as was first expected, but as England can only produce about 85,000 tons of refined a month, while her consumption will probably be 100 to 125,000, she will buy the balance from this country and will to some extent steady the refined market, which will rule, as long as the war lasts, higher than usual.

However, prices declined very rapidly the last two weeks from the very high prices (about 1½ cent too high), and it will be wise for all dealers to buy as they need from week to week, as the domestic beet crop, say, about 600,000 tons, is now coming in the market, to be followed by the Louisiana crop of 200,000 tons, then by Cuba, who it is reported has already sold 200,000 tons to England for January, February and March shipments, at the basis of 5½ cents for raws, which indicates a lower price for refined than is now ruling.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Quiet reigns supreme may best be applied to the business done in our line during the last week. We are, of course, busy enough; in fact, very busy and our business as far as volume concerned is ahead, against this month last year, but at the same time compared with the enormous rush that had since the outbreak of the war, naturally, business may be called quiet.

A few lots of Holland herrings of fancy quality arrived this week, but prices are so enormously high that buyers are taking them only in a small hand-to-mouth way. If there are more arrivals in Holland, we will get more fish, and undoubtedly also the cheap grade, which will stimulate the demand.

Scotch herrings are selling in a small way. The demand is only fair and prices just about well upheld.

By steamer due here to-morrow and the day after is expected the first fine fancy Norway fat white mackerel. Both of them have been sold to arrive. Our cables from Norway report an advance in the price during the last week most likely on account of the large demand.

Irish mackerel quiet and neglected.

The sale of imported sardines continues in a fair way. No rush whatever, but there is a regular and steady demand, particularly for the fine grade of Norwegian sardines, and the better grade of Portuguese sardines. Prices are held somewhat above those quoted before the war, but it is only natural because figuring the higher rate of exchange and war risk insurance, extra heavy freight expense and cabling expenses, etc., the importers naturally must add this to the cost, and naturally the selling price is then much higher, but no one can really complain to-day about high prices. They are really reasonable in our line.

Sprats are scarce. None can be had from either Belgium or France.

Norwegian Sardines.—The fishing very poor and packers are unable to offer any freshly packed goods at the present time.

We are getting shipments from practically all our sources of supply, except food products from Germany and Russia. Of course, we are having great difficulties and great expenses in getting those shipments, but we feel that we are obliged to get those goods so as to satisfy our old friends in the trade.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

There has been a better demand here for evaporated apples and the stock cleaned up from the evaporators as soon as it is made. It will be a couple of weeks before we have any surplus, and it is very doubtful as to how many evaporators are going to open up.

The market is quotable at 5¼ to 5½ cents for small shipments of prime quality, in 50-pound boxes, with choice stock held ½ cent per pound higher.

Sellers would probably shade the prices a little for November or December shipment, although they are not firm sellers for late months, owing to the uncertainty of the output.

Raspberries are firm and scarce. Good stock is quotable at 21 to 21½ cents f. o. b. in barrels.

Again in Season!

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

Boots—Shoes—Findings

Women's Lace Shoes in Vogue.

The appearance of laced boots for women this season is a departure not anticipated by the retailer when orders were placed in the spring for this fall's delivery. Possibly a few fashionable stores in the cities may have been tipped off, or had the prescience to stock them with a view of having and pushing an exclusive line. Certain it is the general merchant would fight shy of buying a line that is properly ranked as an extreme novelty until their wider sale led up to a staple demand. At any rate, this line is being placed before the public in an alluring way by clever advertising, the new tops of white calfskin and other features making up strikingly dressy footwear. They also come in patent coltskin, short vamps, with narrow patent leather laces and back-stay stitched in white, also fawn cloth tops, tan kid laces and back-stays. The feature, of course, is the use of laces and made after the so-called French model.

Worthy Recommendations in Ordering, Shelving and Retailing Shoe Stock. Adjustment of Complaints. Clearance Sales.

Every year a conference committee representing the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association and the National Shoe Retailers' Association settle disputed points in manufacturing, selling, deliveries and retailing. The report has been distributed among the trade, the recommendations and conclusions being of more than passing interest to the general merchant handling a shoe stock, and which may be turned to practical account in more ways than one by the storekeeper and his clerks. For example, the committee says that the public has been served with too free a hand in the adjustment of complaints and that it has been led to expect too much. To lessen the number of unworthy adjustments that operate against the merchant and the manufacturer, it is recommended that with the sale of each pair of shoes the retailer deliver a ticket setting forth the conditions of sale, as follows:—

We don't mean that these shoes will last forever. We do not guarantee the life of the shoes, as one will wear a shoe longer than another. If they rip in unreasonable time we repair them for you. If a bad defect shows up in the making of the shoe we replace with a new pair. Any shoe will wear out, so don't make foolish and unreasonable claims on us. This ticket must be brought back when you come to make a claim or we can't make any adjustment for you.

The committee, in the same connection, also advise that when a customer returns a worn shoe with a complaint that the case be adjusted on the basis of the purchaser paying for the service and value received from the shoe. Whenever possible the retailer is to repair the shoes instead of giving a new pair and charging them back to the manufacturer, as is not infrequently the case when the dealer has the opportunity and thinks that the former will "stand for it." It is urged, that the manufacturer be treated with consideration in all such transactions, and he should not be "held up" for no more than his proper share of the cost of adjusting a complaint of this kind, the retailer bearing in mind unavoidable imperfections in workmanship and material. Retailers are cautioned against guaranteeing shoes made of patent, enamel and Russian or tan leathers, as well as fabrics of every kind.

Whenever a new store is opened or an old one remodeled the recommendation is again made that the shelving be built to accommodate the standard size cartons, the measurements of which were adopted in January, as follows:

| | Length. | Width. | Depth. |
|----------------------|---------|--------|--------|
| Men's | 12¾ | 6½ | 4⅞ |
| Boys' | 11¼ | 6 | 3¾ |
| Youths' | 10½ | 5¼ | 3½ |
| Women's | 11½ | 5½ | 3½ |
| Misses' | 10½ | 4¾ | 3⅞ |
| Children's | 8¾ | 4½ | 2¾ |

In order "to save waste and expense that result from cancellations, your committee urges that retailers be extremely careful in placing orders; and to make a purchase in the true spirit of a regular contract." In returning shoes to the manufacturer the cheapest way should be employed, whether freight, parcel post or express. The suggestion is renewed that, wherever possible, manufacturers should dispose of their "floor goods," such as cancellations, returns and damaged stock, to their regular customers and not to job lot specialists. That when a dealer's name is stamped on such merchandise that it be effaced before the shoes are disposed of. The stamping of fictitious values and names on shoes is condemned as a vicious practice, and one that should be abolished in justice to the public and as a means of curtailing the questionable merchandising methods of the so-called "sample" shoe store and the retail mail order house.

That the profits of the retailer be better conserved it is recommended that the time of so-styled "clearance sales" be curtailed and the regular selling season lengthened. For example, in the Northern States or territory, no winter shoes should be cut before February 1st and no summer shoes until August 1st. Dealers should purchase stock closer to the requirements of their trade, avoiding freaks and extreme novelties, excepting in very limited lots. If this were more generally observed merchants would have less merchandise for the clearance sale season. All manufacturers are urged to adopt a uniform size system for sample lines, in order to make them more salable, in a range of three or four sizes and widths for all kinds and grades of shoes. It is likewise recommended that manufacturers use all diligence and care that goods are shipped "as near the date specified as it is possible to do so." This would lessen cancellations and diminish returns so that the "floor goods" sold to the detriment of manufacturer and retailer will be greatly reduced.

An important new regulation relates to "split shipments," which will help manufacturers to distribute their products more evenly over a season with better success. By splitting the shipments, which should be done with due regard to the seasonability of the shoes and the size of the order, the retailer will be enabled to make a quicker stock turnover and, at the same time, keep his merchandise new and fresh. The general storekeeper should consider and follow all these recommendations as along progressive lines of merchandising.

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

Cancellations and Returned Goods.

For a time the returned goods question was a live issue with a large number of jobbers and manufacturers who sell the retail trade. After much discussion on the "still hunt" plan, it was decided that the problem was so complex that each individual concerned should settle cases as they arose in their own way. Nevertheless the complaints against merchants returning goods willy nilly are yet to be heard. The boot is on the other foot, however, when it comes to cancellation of orders on the part of the same complainants. Jobbers of note are said to be the guilty parties, and on this score the "Textile Manufacturers' Journal" says:—

It must be a new experience to underwear buyers to be told that cancellations of orders are absolutely refused. It is refreshing to note this evidence of backbone on the part of knitters, which is so diametrically opposed to their attitude in many previous seasons. It was time the worm had turned, and evidently manufacturers and their selling representatives have come to realize it. So far as we can learn the edict has gone forth that bona fide orders will have to be taken as per contract, and though in instances shipments may be deferred at the earnest request of buyers, they will eventually be delivered unless the house is financially irresponsible.

Of course this has not always been the case, and the buyer has come to feel that he could accept or refuse his contracts as he saw fit until he has grown arrogant in his assumptions.

Certain of the demands made by buyers of knit goods this season have been ridiculous. A million dollar house in the South is reported to have demanded that an order for four cases be cancelled or payment would not be forthcoming. The buyer was politely, but firmly told that the goods would be shipped as per contract and that payment would certainly be expected in due course. These instances could be multiplied indefinitely.

New Lines in Embroideries.

With skirts becoming wider, embroideries are showing an increased demand, and road salesmen recently started calling upon merchants are sending very satisfactory orders. The orders so far placed are for staple goods. The new lines are well supplied with fancies. Ribbon insertions, beadings, narrow edgings and some 18-inch flouncings are included in the current purchases by the retail trade. The new goods is the continuance of sheer light materials, swisses, cloths, on the organ-die order, and some voiles and light woven fabrics are again featured for next year. Colored novelties are also represented in the new lines, with small neat figures dominating in the bulk of the patterns.

Range of Seasonable Suitings. Lustrous Fabrics Popular.

Questions regarding what suitings will be worn are answered in this wise by retail authorities: First of all, broad cloths for redingote suits and tunics dresses. The color assortment is of a wide range in new as well as staple shades. Gabardines, also used for dresses as well as suits, are very soft and pliable. Wool poplins in a large variety of qualities and weaves, in many dark shades. Serges, principally in navy blue and black and a few colors. New ripple suitings, slightly rough.

Retailers, for next spring, are buying popular priced worsted dress goods quite freely. Satin faced goods are strong sellers, particularly gabardines. Indications point to large sales of lustrous faced prunelles costing around $1 a yard in the primary market. The business placed by general merchants on medium price piece dye worsteds are substantial. A wide range of weaves has been bespoke by retailers. Serges and poplins are also being bought for spring delivery. Serges of 36 to 54-inch width are in demand and not easily obtainable in desirable quantities, duplicate orders having been taken for November shipment. New weaves in low-end dress goods, with special stress on ottoman are being taken freely from merchant by the wholesalers. Mixed coatings of various sorts continue in good demand for immediate delivery. Stocks of domestic and foreign novelty coatings are not plentiful.

Owing to Increased Foreign Sales Dry Goods Going Higher.

The mixed situation with jobbers, manufacturers and merchants, so far as the supply of dry goods and allied lines was concerned owing to the European troubles, is now gradually clearing. The demand for goods from Europe is growing stronger and more pronounced daily, and with the continuation of the war conditions will grow more acute. This means an advance in prices to retail merchants here in proportion to the development of the foreign sales.

which promise to be large. Goods already bought to be shipped abroad include sheets, pillow cases, knit goods, blankets of all kinds, towels, duck, hosiery and some men's wear. These purchases have been largely of spot goods.

A month from now the market effect of these purchases will be more strongly felt when domestic buyers, including tailors, begin to look around for goods for immediate shipment. Wide shirtings, for example, have been steady for some time, and the quantities bought for export recently will have an indirect effect, at least, in keeping them strong. On towels for spring delivery prices would have been named last week, but for the lots engaged for foreign account, and the possible scarcity of linen, had not obliged first hands to be careful in not making quotations too low. Also with the threatened shipping abroad of large orders of this merchandise may compel merchants and buyers to order ahead if they are to have stock on hand.

There is a good inquiry from interior merchants for certain standard ginghams. More interest is being taken in wash goods—the medium priced American dress ginghams—because of the uncertainty of getting foreign merchandise that was counted upon a month ago but did not materialize. Fine zephyrs are selling better than usual and with Western houses some of the highest American yard dyed fancies are in better demand.

Reasonable Weather Causes Active Buying.

Cold weather is expected to bring a tremendous volume of orders from merchants in the Middle West. Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say: "Retailers now have their stocks in a condition for the first cold weather. Current wholesale distribution will be somewhat lighter until lower temperatures start the movement of heavier goods, necessitating the filling-in of retail stocks. A good volume of early spring business is being booked on such lines as are being shown. Domestic Valenciennes laces are in large demand, and the limited number of plants in this country equipped to make this character of lace means that they will be kept extremely busy. Oriental or net top laces are the most wanted items in the foreign lace lines. Chiffons, wash blouses and embroidered veilings are other imported items for which there is already sale.

"Prominent among the accepted ideas in white goods for spring are embroidered voiles, crepes and organdies. This is foreign merchandise, but orders are being taken with reasonable assurance that they can be delivered in time for spring business. Sheer lace effects in popular priced domestic white goods are selling freely. In wash dress goods, printed and embroidered effects on sheer fabrics are the leading styles for spring."

The same spirit is reflected in the advices from John V. Farwell Co., Chicago, which say: "That a tremendous volume of orders for seasonable merchandise for at-once delivery will press upon wholesale distributors as soon as cold weather is fully established is indicated by the order fluctuations at rise and fall of the thermometer. Each drop in temperature brings its corresponding increase in orders and puts vigor into immediate business in sweaters, fancy knit goods, underwear, hosiery, blankets, comforters, etc. Roadmen now out with samples for spring report stocks low and active demand for desirable merchandise, especially in wool dress goods.

"There is much more than the usual demand for spot delivery on such fabrics as navy and black serges, broadcloths and fancy cloakings. Customers recognize that there is a legitimate advance in values and appreciate their being able to secure goods for immediate delivery. Black silk and wool poplins continue very active sellers. A demand is also noticed for lightweight chiffon panamas, both for at-once and spring delivery. This fabric is always active when pleated skirts are popular. Black dress goods are having a phenomenal sale, with prospects of popularity continuing into spring. Sales of black dress goods are double those of last year. Fancy scrim in Arabian and white are in great demand. Sheer tulle ginghams and all lineweave white fabrics are selling very well for spring. An advancing market is reflected in the increased demand for all kinds of linen handkerchiefs."

No Activity in Underwear. Change Impending at Better Prices.

So far the underwear market is very much to the satisfaction of the retailer. That is to say, goods of all kinds are plentiful and no change in prices has been announced that is causing any special worry. Perhaps the increasing inquiry from abroad may change conditions, and news of this kind is not lacking. The price of cotton and wool has also led to the existence of this sluggish market, the mills not being disposed to grant any concessions in view of the existing and future uncertainty. Manufacturers of brand merchandise are not included in this classification, for if their publicity has been properly looked after, they control their own market. The reputation of the brand becomes practically an insurance policy on the concern's business. The unknown maker of unmarked goods, on the contrary, has no assurance whatever that he can keep his trade, for he has no reputation to fall back upon.

Ribbons Slightly Higher. Narrow Velvets in Front.

Changes in ribbon preferences are announced every week. First a demand for the wider kind is reported as the proper lines on the market, until an expert or two declare the narrow description is the vogue. Advance orders for next season, while of fair volume up to this time, now show signs of hesitating on the part of retailers. Revisions in prices for next spring delivery amount to at least one-eighth of a cent to a quarter of a cent a ligne, and are mainly for plain goods. Imports, especially for velvet ribbons, are now coming more freely. Narrow velvets are wanted, such as 2s and 3s, and the latter are reported scarce. The advances on imported velvet ribbons so far are said not to exceed half a cent a ligne in the primary market.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

Colors and Stripes in New Fall Shirts.

Warmth in color is the marked feature of the fall shirts, now being delivered. Road salesmen are pushing the pinks as a leader, but it depends upon the merchant's constituency whether such a shade would appeal to his constituency, excepting with the younger element. In fact, the season's shirting, in many instances, may be truly described as just short of loud. As in other lines, the tendency is toward subdued colors, for obvious reasons, and probably men's shirts, as the fall advances toward winter, will reflect this sentiment more emphatically than at present.

Other patterns favored are the blue grounds with white stripes, white goods with line stripes of several shades, such as brown, green and blue. In other lines, while the stripes are wide and more pronounced than in the past spring and summer, many models show the stripes running across instead of vertical. The smart thing in shirts is the pleated bosoms, and cuffs are medium, between the stiff kind and the soft starchless description. The latter have proven so popular with men, excepting for formal dress, that the shirt manufacturers, even with their commendable desire to introduce innovations for the laudable purpose of stimulating sales, are uncertain as to the merchant's indorsement of the change.

Seasonable Weather Stimulates Buying. Hosiery Situation Vexing.

With the arrival of seasonable weather, retailers are buying more freely. This is also due in part to the knowledge that stocks in some lines of dry goods are running low. Narrow serges in blacks and blues are reported scarcer and bleach goods are down to a stage where they soon may be at a premium. It is admitted there may come a scarcity in hosiery in wanted colors, and merchants are not backward in consulting with their jobbers and wholesalers, and the mills which sell to the dealer direct, as to the future possibilities in this respect. Many hosiery manufacturers are accepting orders stamped "Subject to delay in delivery, and also to a reduction of quantity if the product of the mill is curtailed by inability through war embargo to procure necessary materials and supplies."

Gloves and Notions Commanding Higher Prices.

Since early in August no kid, cape, mooha or suede gloves have arrived from Europe, where they are made chiefly. Stocks are therefore low, and prices have been advanced from 25 to 50 per cent. It is believed merchants are inclined to advance prices on their old stocks as well as on the new season's goods. Notions are also none too plentiful, excepting lines of domestic manufacture, and there is a tendency to maintain prices at as high a level as the buyer will stand. There is no reason for this attitude on the part of either the jobber or manufacturer, but the inclination to take advantage of the situation seems too tempting not resist.

Hardware Tools Specialties

When the Merchant Carrying Hardware is Weak Against the M. O. House.

After chatting about current trade and the immediate possibilities of the future, especially that of the general merchant with a hardware stock, the manager of a prominent wholesale house said to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World:" "One reason why mail order houses have such a swing, particularly in villages, small towns and among farmers as well as artisans of any class, is the enormous stock of everything they catalogue. Everybody must concede these tremendous institutions have carved out a line of business which the retailing merchant either deliberately neglected or overlooked, and their present overshadowing status cannot be overthrown by association resolutions or the futile denunciation of the individual dealer.

"Now, our position in the trade is along similar lines. That is to say, when a merchant is making up an order for hardware, and is being solicited for certain items by small concerns which carry limited stocks, we usually have the preference. There is not an article in hardware we do not carry, and are therefore in a position to meet any demand completely and promptly. I do not say but what other firms are likewise equipped; though I am positive, from many years' experience, they are precious few. Further, we take pains with orders from all classes and grades of merchants, so that if any of them want the twelfth of a dozen of this or that, or the quarter or third of a dozen of anything else, from gimlets to the finest tools or a carload of something besides, it makes no difference. We have the goods.

"This is where the catalogue house appeals to the buyer in isolated communities. Perhaps he wants a hammer or an axe; at the same time he makes out an order for a shirt, some dress goods or a coat or some paint, and perhaps a side of bacon or a pair of shoes. So you see when a merchant starts in to go up against this kind of game it must necessarily be a co-operative affair—and in his neighborhood or section—else the scheme will fall flat. They must either have the stock or the wholesalers' or manufacturers' catalogue to convince the customer the goods can be had promptly and at a competitive price.

"Our foreign trade, excepting with continental Europe, has not diminished. Of course, there we are about cut off, but in South America and other parts of the world trade is expanding in a really astonishing way. Our men who are selling in European countries have been shifted to China, Java, Japan and other Far Eastern territory, more as an experiment and to feel out the market on hardware than with any special expectations; but they are doing wonderfully well in selling goods, and American made hardware will secure a permanent foothold there that nothing can disturb in the future. I have heard of complaints of business being slow in some sections, and it is undoubtedly true; but our monthly percentages of sales are increasing and not diminishing."

How to Display and Sell Scissors and Shears.

Evidently no time is being lost by American manufacturers of cutlery to draw the attention of the trade anew to the quality of their lines in comparison to German made merchandise. This is true particularly of the low price goods, the major portion of which was of foreign origin. As previously stated in this department on scissors and shears, while there seems to be a stock on hand for a few weeks longer, it is rapidly becoming depleted. This is the opinion of the John J. Conway Co. Their advice on the proper methods of displaying and selling shears and scissors in the 5, 10 and 25-cent class is worth considering. It follows:—

First.—Our first suggestion is that every store should obtain cloth-lined trays made to fit the counters, having a section for small scissors and a section for the correspondingly large shears. Shears or scissors of the same size and style should be kept together as far as possible, and your counter tray should always be well filled.

Second.—Shears and scissors must be thoroughly wiped up clean every day (trays should also be cleaned out at least once a week), as we all realize that nearly every woman coming into a store picks up one shear, then a scissor, and so on, until she buys what she desires; but all items that have been handled will show finger marks and are not presentable to the next purchaser.

Third.—Keeping up of stock on your counters is very important. Has it ever occurred to you that oftentimes a woman comes into your store for a six-inch scissor with small handles, and you have plenty of stock in the boxes in your stock room, but your clerks allowed the trays to run out of the particular scissor your customer wanted. The outcome is you have lost a sale because the customer did not want the large sizes you displayed, but all the time you had under your counters just what she wanted.

Fourth.—We also have observed that oftentimes a merchant lays out on his counters a large stock of different styles and sizes, and two or three sizes have a heavy sale and the clerk has not replaced the shears on your counter, thus leaving an empty space. A purchaser enters to buy some particular shear or scissor, but the clerk has crowded hammers, screw drivers or some other articles in the places left vacant by the sale of your shears and scissors; your clerk is busy waiting on some customer; the prospective customer does not see the scissors displayed that she wants and goes out. There's plenty of stock on hand in your store room, but it's not displayed on your counters.

Last.—Having visited thousands of retail stores, we know that if you will keep your shears and scissors properly displayed, cleaned and brightened, that this end of your business will surely take a remarkable jump in the right direction.

The Rewards of the Mail Order Business.

Richard W. Sears, founder of Sears, Roebuck & Co., of Chicago, who died last Monday at his summer home near Waukesha, Wis., left a fortune estimated at $25,000,000, it was learned today. Mr. Sears, according to business associates, was the originator of the mail order enterprise. He began his business career in 1884, while working as a railroad telegraph operator, making a purchase of a dozen watches. He was then 21 years old, and retired at the age of 45. He was 51 years old at his death.

Here's a Great Big Beautiful Scheme.

The other day I went over to Camden, N. J. You know where Camden is—it's just across the river from old Philly. Some people stick up their noses at Camden—crack jokes at it and all, but you take it from me, it ain't any slouch of a place and if it hadn't Philly within reach of a 3-cent ferry fare it would be some pumkins. (I know just as well as you do that that ain't the way to spell pumkins, but that's the way I say pumkins and it's the way I'd rather spell it. I may be a darned fool, but I'm honest.)

The stores in Camden ain't bad at all, and considering that they have the big Philly stores to fight, the business they do is enough to make a fellow open his eyes.

If all the business people in the place would say "here, we'll buy everything we buy in Camden," they wouldn't know the place in a week.

I went over to see a customer of mine. He has a good grocery store out where the homes are. When I got there he was at a funeral, but they expected him back pretty soon, so I camped out and waited. In ten minutes he showed up.

He ain't a young man but he's a good-looker. Big Indian with a lot of white hair, and he keeps himself clean.

"Say old man," I said, "that's some suit you got on." It was too, sort of gray and it fit him great.

"I like that suit, too," he said, "the madam don't like it—thinks it's too dudish."

"Nothing to that," I said, "ain't any reason why you shouldn't be a dude with the rest of us, is there?"

"Us!" he said, "did you say us?"

"Sure!" I said, "I'm one of 'em, ain't I?"

"A blind man might think so," he said. Ain't that a dirty mean thing to say?

"Where'd you pick up that suit anyway?" I asked him.

"Jacob Reed's." Jacob Reed's is a Philadelphia store.

"There you go," I said. "No wonder you fellows over here all kick about business. Why don't you hang together?"

He told me only last month that a lot of people that ought to trade with him went over to the Philly stores.

"Why don't you buy your clothes in Camden?"

"I couldn't get a suit like this in Camden if I went in every store in the place," he said.

"How d'ye know you couldn't? Did you try it?" No, he hadn't.

"Then you ain't got any call to say so," I said.

"I'd buy my stuff over here if everybody else would quick enough," he said. "It would pay me."

"Sure it would pay you! would pay everybody," I said. "The only thing is to do it. Start it!"

"Start it how?" he said.

"I'll give you the whole scheme. Get somebody to go around among the business people with a buy-at-home paper. Let 'em all sign it. The clothing man signs up to buy all his groceries and everything else in Camden and you sign up to buy all your clothes and other stuff here too. Why that would make a big difference right there. How many stores are there here anyway?" He didn't know but I thought there ought to be two or three thousand. "Well, don't you get it then?" I said. "There's two or three thousand new customers for the Camden stores, for there ain't one of 'em where the women folks don't go over the river to buy some of their stuff. Mostly a lot of it."

"It might work," he said, "but I doubt it."

ADDRESS AD-WRITING CONTEST

MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD

927 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"That's right, go ahead and doubt it," I said. "Doubt it and do nothing. That's the way to get ahead."

Oh I was plumb sarcastic. He probably didn't eat any supper that night, I talked to him so sharp.

"But who's to go around with this paper?" he said. "I don't have time to do it, and neither does anybody else."

I had to own up there was something in that point. There's plenty of bang-up schemes, but everybody's so blamed busy with his own business that he ain't got time to tend to 'em.

Know something? I'll bet I could make a lot more money than I make now, just by tending to other people's business for 'em. Know what I mean? I'd go into a town like Camden with this grand beautiful scheme that I just gave my friend, and I'd go around with the paper. I'd be a professional worker on stunts that everybody'd be glad to have done, but that nobody has time to do himself. How'd I get paid? Why I'd say to every storekeeper, "Here's this scheme—it's buy-in-Camden. I'll get every fellow to sign up to buy everything over here if the others will. There's 2,000 of 'em all told and it'll take some time to see 'em all, but I'll do it. Will you pay me a dollar a week while I'm working on it?" I'd make $2,000 out of it and I'd see the whole 2,000 in say three months. Is it a grand scheme? Say!

I'd like to see somebody go into that line of business and I'm giving somebody a great big beautiful idea here. Every town has stunts like that it could pull off for its own benefit if it could only hire some professional worker to do it. Everybody's business is nobody's—you've heard that. It's all true. I wish I could do it, but I'm tied to the road and will be till I die. The trouble is—whisper!—my house can't get along without me. That's the whole trouble. I don't want to see 'em fail.

CCLXXIX.—Something of the New Laws Against Unfair Business Practices.

The following letter enables me to say something regarding a very important public movement:—

Elkhart, Ind., Sept. 24, 1914.
Elton J. Buckley, Esq.

Dear Sir:—I have read articles from time to time recently regarding the new laws that are being passed by different States and by Congress, against unfair competition. The most important point of these laws is that they prevent any concern from making one price on its product in one section and another price in another. I wish you would explain just what these laws mean and how they will affect merchants. Almost everybody in business quotes a lower price to some customers than to some others. Have any prosecutions been brought against anybody under these laws as yet? Please also say something about the similar law which we are told has just been passed by Congress. Will it have any bearing, say, upon a retail or wholesale dealer doing business all within his own State?

Respectfully yours,
ROBERT O. SIMPSON.

Where he speaks of the Federal act this correspondent refers to the law known as the Federal Commission law, which I believe was signed by the President only a few days ago. It creates a commission which has to a degree the same power to supervise business that the Interstate Commerce Commission has to supervise railroads. But only interstate business. A retail or wholesale dealer buying his goods wholly from people within his own State, and selling them wholly to people within his own State, has no need to consider the new Federal law at all. It only touches business between different States, or business in United States territories and the District of Columbia. If a dealer sells wholly within his own State, but buys from people outside of his own State, he is a part of interstate commerce, of course, and the new law will indirectly touch him. The dealer who both buys and sells in other States is directly subject to it, but only as to that part of his business which is done in that way.

The important part of the Federal Trade Commission law is the provision "That unfair methods of competition in commerce are hereby declared unlawful." Not a word as to what shall be considered unfair—that is left for the decision first of the new Commission and second of the courts on appeals from the Commission. I anticipate some stirring times over establishing a definition for "unfair" which will really define.

The law which concerns the average dealer much more directly is the State law which is being passed by different States on the same subject and which is much more definite than the Federal law. The States which have passed laws against unfair business so far are Nebraska, South Dakota, Iowa, Minnesota and New Jersey, but similar laws are being introduced in other States as fast as their legislatures meet, and probably such legislation will be general in a comparatively short time.

One of the important features of all these State acts is a provision forbidding the making of different prices on the same product in different sections. But there is always a condition—provided this is done either to destroy a competitor or create a monopoly.

The Nebraska law prohibits a person's selling at a lower price in one place in the State than another "with the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor."

Minnesota prohibits it, where it is done "for the purpose of destroying the business of a competitor or creating a monopoly in any locality."

Iowa declares it unlawful, when done "for the purpose of creating a monopoly or destroying the business of a competitor."

New Jersey makes it unlawful for any person, etc., engaged in the production, manufacture, distribution or sale of any commodity of general use, or rendering any service to the public to discriminate between different persons, etc., * * * "if the effect or intent thereof is to establish or maintain a virtual monopoly, hindering competition or restriction of trade."

The South Dakota act makes local underselling unlawful, "if done for the purpose of destroying the competition of any regular established dealer in such commodity, or preventing the competition of any person who in good faith intends and attempts to become such dealer."

This proviso, which as I have pointed out, appears in all the present laws and must appear in all future ones if they are to be constitutional, will not prevent a seller of merchandise from varying his prices in different sections for the usual reasons that sellers have for doing that. Only where his interest is to destroy a competitor, or gain a monopoly, can he be prosecuted. In my judgment, this will make the cases that can be brought under these laws very few, because only in the clearest cases of illegal intent can the law apply.

For instance, the first case brought under this provision of the New Jersey act was decided a few days ago. The Standard Oil Co., which by the way has in the past been one of the most flagrant perpetrators of competitive schemes such as these laws are intended to prevent—got into a fuss with a competitor and a price war resulted—prices where the two concerns were competing sunk far below where they were in other sections. Prosecution was begun against the Standard Oil Co. under the new law, but it fell flat—the court's decision has not been fully reported as yet, but the understanding is that the decision was that this was simply a price war—there was no evidence of an intent to destroy a competitor or obtain a monopoly.

Of course everything we do, in a sense, is done with the hope and intent of getting the better of a competitor and that far destroying him. But that is not the sort of destroying that the law means.

I can say to the trade generally, wholesale, retail and manufacturing, that none of their usual and customary practices, in the course of competition, will be affected by these laws at all. Here are some specific instances:—

A seller who sells goods in different sections, in some of which he has competition and in some of which he has not, can legally continue to sell higher in the non-competitive sections.

A seller can legally continue to sell one customer cheaper than another, for any reason based on the varying desirability of the two customers, or for that matter, from mere whim.

A seller can legally continue to cause the price of an article to be lower in one section than in another, by giving premiums or stamps in the former section and not in the latter.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Steelton has a good association. An effort is being made to have it affiliate with the State association. B. F. McNear is president and W. H. Whitebread is secretary. On September 17th the association had an outing to a nearby town, going in specially decorated trolley cars. Part of the enjoyment was a chicken and waffle dinner, after which there was a fine musical programme and some good addresses. Merchants, their wives, sweethearts and clerks were among the guests, also the borough Council. The outing was the talk of the town.

The Lock Haven association netted $211.11 from the baseball game and the money was turned over to the Lock Haven Hospital.

Mr. Smedley addressed a big meeting of retail grocers at Johnstown on October 1st.

The Lebanon association has its coat off for first award at Meadville next year. They can win if they try.

The New Castle Association is planning a "Buy-at-home and Booster Week." It will be a big affair.

David H. Rankin addressed the merchants of Mt. Pleasant on October 30th.

E. T. Messick, Pittston, Pa., has been appointed an organizer of the State Association. He will devote his attention to towns nearby to his home city.

Merchants of Meyersdale, Pa., are about to organize an association.

The Allentown Merchants' Association is planning a big fall rally in the hope of securing the membership of each merchant in the association.

Mr. Smedley will address the Pottstown merchants on October 6th; Frankford Grocers' Association on October 7th; Pittston Merchants' Association October

Your Customers Know Franklin Carton Sugar As Soon As They See It

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is a neat, clean, attractive package that looks well on your shelf, and once seen by customers is sure to be remembered. They remember the cleanliness, the sparkling purity of the sugar, and insist on having the CARTON that keeps it clean and pure.

Sugar is probably the most sensitive article sold in a grocery store and should be protected from dust and dirt. Scientists tell us that it breeds germs with dangerous rapidity, when once exposed. Women may not examine sugar to see if it has germs in it and they may be content to use sugar which needs no examination to show that it is dusty; BUT, as soon as they see FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR they KNOW it is better, purer, finer, cleaner sugar than they have ever had before. If you are the proprietor of a pure food store you can tell your customers about FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in a way that will increase their respect for your desire to serve them with the purest and cleanest foods which can be obtained. (See foot note at the bottom of this advertisement, "What to tell customers.")

Prosperity Prediction From High Source.

An expert, unbiased and very creditable opinion upon the immediate future of business in this country, as the result of the European war, has been furnished by the First National Bank of Boston, Mass., and is here presented:

In response to inquiries as to the effect of the war thus far on various lines of business and the outlook for the future, a large number of representative New England firms have submitted confidential figures and opinions, which taken together, give a broad view of prevailing business sentiment. The composite result is distinctly optimistic.

The principal industries consulted were textiles, jewelry, fertilizers, chemicals, spices, paper, office supplies, confectionery, pianos, paints, machinery equipment, leather and shoes. Certain interesting facts are brought out.

First, since early August there has been no general marked decrease in operating capacity; obviously, a few lines are for the moment restricting output, but this is overbalanced by increases in activity in other directions.

There is a strong disposition to keep labor employed, even in the absence of profit and a desire to keep organizations intact to meet a future demand, which manufacturers, almost without exception, believe is soon forthcoming.

Again, the widely heralded cancellations of orders were actually small in volume, disappeared after the first few days of war, and, in many cases, have since been reinstated. Not only that, but the volume of orders has held up to a remarkable degree during the first six weeks of the war. Naturally, there is a feeling of great uncertainty about the immediate future. Cotton manufacturers are at sea as to the price of their raw material, but their machinery is being kept running, and, especially in the case of fine goods, at a profit.

Worsted and woolen mills have been very active, their problem as to raw material, while somewhat similar to that of cotton, being not so immediate and not likely to be so acute. Here and there mills and factories report large foreign orders, which they believe are forerunners of greatly increased foreign business.

In general, the consensus of opinion seems to be that New England's great workshop is shortly to be very actively engaged not only in meeting the demands usually made upon it, but also in partly supplying that market, both domestic and foreign, heretofore held by the nations now at war.

I have from Davis Bros., who have retail stores at Wilkes-Barre, Plymouth, Nanticoke and Kingston, Pa., a circular which they recently used, I judge in all their stores, printed in English on one side and in some other language on the other. That is because the Pennsylvania coal regions, where these stores are, are full of foreign consumers. The circular is a long, narrow affair—6 x 17 inches, and is here reproduced in miniature:—

which appears just below the heading. That is not the place for the name and address, and putting it there merely clutters up the advertisement, wastes space and does absolutely no good. The name and address should go at the bottom. I repeat what I have so often said—that if the circular is attractive enough the people who read it will find the address no matter where it appears on the sheet, even if it is printed in type that can't be read except through a microscope. In the average case the name and address are the least important things in an advertisement, and should go in the least important place.

This circular is a price list rather than an advertisement. With few exceptions no real advertising is spoken of the goods at all—merely the name and price. In some cases the price is a good advertisement and will bring results. As, for instance, Mother's Oats, for 9 cents and Campbell's soups, three cans for 25 cents. In other cases where the goods are sold in bulk or the brand is not named, I don't consider it advertising at all to stop when you have mentioned the price, for you haven't said anything that is even remotely calculated to get business. Don't you see what I mean? Suppose my tailor telephones me and asks me to come around, perhaps at some inconvenience to myself, because "we have some suits here at $35." If he hangs up the phone after he says that—which is what this circular does—do you think I would go, just on that? Of course I wouldn't, for "suits for $35," doesn't mean anything. What kind of suits? What is their regular price? I wish I could make the readers of this department see that when they quote a naked price under such conditions as I have outlined, they are practically doing nothing which is calculated to make even the slightest impression upon consumers.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Don't Sell Poisonous Flypaper.

The well-known children's paper, "Child's Betterment," is making a campaign against poisonous fly paper and mixtures, of which there are many. The last issue contained the following:—

Considering the safe up-to-date methods of destroying that pest, the domestic fly, it is remarkable that people will persist in using the poisonous fly papers. The basic toxic principle of all these papers is arsenic, one of the deadliest and most insidious of poisons. The danger to children is great, and the danger to adults is by no means inconsiderable. The danger in general is proved by various items in our exchanges. We herewith present a partial list of accidents from poisonous fly papers which speaks for itself. The list covers only the period between July 1, 1914, to August 24th, inclusive, and covers 35 cases of poisoning, 5 fatal and 30 non-fatal or uncertain:—

| | Total. | Fatal. | Non-fatal or Uncertain. |
|--------------------------|--------|--------|-------------------------|
| July | 19 | 5 | 14 |
| August | 16 | .. | 16 |
| — | 35 | | |
| Illinois | 4 | | |
| Indiana | 6 | | |
| Iowa | 5 | | |
| Kentucky | 2 | | |
| Minnesota | 4 | | |
| Nebraska | 2 | | |
| New York | 2 | | |
| North Carolina | 2 | | |
| Ohio | 3 | | |
| — | 35 | | |

The very logical suggestion is made that retailers should confine their sales to fly papers that are non-poisonous.

More Big Business People Buy Cotton.

In an effort to further the National campaign recently started to better conditions of the stricken cotton belt of the South, John N. Willys, president of the Willys-Overland Co., has purchased a bale of cotton for each of the 400 Overland dealers in that section of the country. Mr. Willys has also declared his intention of buying an additional bale of cotton for each Overland car purchased during the two months ending November 17th, and also of trying to interest each of the prominent American concerns affiliated with the Rice Leaders of the World Association. Armour & Co. have purchased 700 cotton bales for their Southern agents. The Pillsbury Flour Co. and many other concerns of National prominence have bought or signified their intention of buying a bale for each of their Southern agents.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Notorious Collection Agency Defunct.

The Sprague's Mercantile Agency gave up the ghost in Chicago a short time ago, and is now said to be making feeble efforts to get a foothold in Denver, Col. Inquiries directed to the former Chicago headquarters, where it did business for nearly 30 years, are being replied to by The Union Agency, 329 Century Building, Denver, Col. The Chicago headquarters, which have been completely dismantled, the furniture sold to a firm of second-hand dealers and the help discharged. Thus ends the career of perhaps the most notorious collection agency in the United States. It is believed to have been the parent of all the evil practices that so many younger collection agencies are guilty of to-day.

Awards in Ceresota Ad-writing Contest

The prizes for the best advertisements in the above are awarded as follows:—

First Prize of $20—B. F. Boutcher, Abington, Pa.

Second “ $10—R. M. Crawford, Camden, N. J.

Third “ $5 —Lily Dougherty, Gettysburg, Pa.

Some very high grade work was submitted in this contest—it was not easy to make the selections, and the judges pondered a long while. The three prize-winning advertisements appear below on this page. Eight others which were also considered very excellent indeed appear on the opposite page, being awarded honorable mention. The best of the others submitted are also reproduced on the following pages. Lack of time and space prevented displaying them all.

FIRST PRIZE

Mother's Hand- outs When We Were Boys

“Sam, in all these years I have not tasted bread half so good as your mother's handouts when we were boys.”

“That is just so, James. Mother says they don't make good flour any more. But some months ago I had her try and listen, Mother says its different. It's all to the good. It seems to have just enough of ye old time milling to put that golden brown tinge on the loaves, that good old smile on Mother's face, and say, Jim, that genuine moreishness on the inside so remindful of Mother's handouts when we were boys.”

CERESOTA

There are many kinds of good flour, but sometimes a flour is good one time and no good another time. One quality we claim for this is uniformity. It is always the same. If you use it successfully one week you can depend on it for good results ever after. It sure to give satisfaction. Bad bread is always blamed on

IS

"I Won't Quarrel With My Bread and Butter"

This phrase of Dean Swift's has been passed around the world for one hundred and fifty years. It is as good to-day as ever, if the bread is made from "CERESOTA" FLOUR

"Better Half a Loaf Than No Bread"

An old saying of Heywood, and one that has traveled for three hundred and fifty years. And it is especially true if the bread is made from

"You Can't Eat Your Bread and Have It Too"

Very true. But what a lot of satisfaction you get from eating your bread if made with

"CERESOTA" FLOUR

We might give many other "chunks" of wisdom showing the value of bread. But we simply ask the housewife to purchase a sack of and place the resulting products upon the table when the family gathers around it. The question of family flour will be settled on the spot.

"CERESOTA" FLOUR

The Making of Best Bread

The general recipe calls for the usual proportion of flour, salt, and yeast or baking powder as preferred, a boiled potato, mixed well and formed into a stiff dough, then baked. With usual care and experience this would make good bread.

But try this:

CERESOTA

salt, yeast or baking powder, boiled potato, and proceed as above. This makes the finest bread. Note the difference—

CERESOTA

The particular flour that makes a particular bread for the particular taste. Always the same because Ceresota is a uniform flour. Our specialty is uniformity. Stop experimenting. You will stop when you reach Ceresota. Why not stop at the start? Start at once with the best. Remember too a point of economy: 12½ lbs. net in our 12-lb. bags. This new law requiring the net weight on all food stuff shows Ceresota full weight and over.

Use Ceresota first and get acquainted with the best results.

What the Sweet Young Bride Wanted

SWEET YOUNG BRIDE TO GROCER: "The food experts and bakers say that

THE BEST FLOUR

- (1) Is white or of a slightly yellow color.
- (2) Contains no dirt—no fine pieces of bran.
- (3) Has enough starch to absorb water readily.
- (4) Contains a sufficient quantity of gluten which is firm, elastic, white or slightly yellow and which expands.
- (5) Does not have too much gliadin, because that makes sticky dough.
- (6) Does not contain too much glutenin, since that would reduce the power of the dough to expand.
- (7) Should contain about thirty five per cent. (35%) glutenin and sixty five per cent. (65%) gliadin.
- (8) Is made from wheat that has not been permitted to get damp and which did not suffer from wheat rust or smut.

A Special Sale of Nationally Advertised Food Products and How It Turned Out

Increased Business One Hundred and Sixty-three Per Cent.
Over Very Heavy Record of Same Week of 1913. Not Only Brought Business to Grocery Department, Which Was Practically the Only One Advertised, but to All the Others.

The George A. Ducker Co., of Joliet, Ill., of which the undersigned is advertising manager, held a special sale of Nationally advertised food products one week from September 14th to September 19th, which was the most successful department sale the store ever held, both in the number of people attending and the amount of business done.

Some three years ago the writer was converted to the cause of featuring Nationally advertised goods by Mr. Richard H. Waldo, then advertising manager of "Good Housekeeping" magazine, and through his teachings our business has steadily increased month by month.

Mr. E. E. Thornberg, our grocery manager, who is a live wire, was quick to pick up the idea, as I pointed out to him the value of “hooking on” our advertising to the National publicity of the manufacturers of food products and getting all the business we could out of it.

Last year during the week of September 15th to 20th we had an unusual heavy business in the grocery department, and Mr. Thornberg was somewhat worried as to what to do to overcome it this year, and when I suggested a sale of Nationally advertised food products, he said, "That's the stunt."

The first move was to ask a few of the manufacturers if they would like to have a demonstrator with us during the week or send us samples of their products for distribution, which they were very glad to do. We made it plain to them that this was not a "hold up" but an opportunity for them to "hook on" to our advertising, as we had been doing right along with their National advertising.

One manufacturer pulled out in the week a good month's business in his line, and so far as we have heard all were very well satisfied with their business.

The sales for the week showed an increase of 162 per cent. over the same week of 1913, which under present conditions we consider most remarkable.

We are sending under separate cover all the ads run during the sale, which will show how we got the business. -

This being the first sale of the kind many good things were not thought of, which we learned from experience and will be worked out in our next. If we had known at first, what this sale has taught us, 200 per cent. increase would have been reached.

You will notice by the ads that the grocery department was the only one that had much to say, except on Friday when some of the others came in with small space, yet all the departments showed a most satisfactory increase for the week.

We have also enclosed with our advertisements one of our competitor's, who comes out this week following our idea in a way, who seldom mentions Nationally advertised goods except to cut the price on some one item occasionally to cost or less.

We appreciate the co-operation of "Good Housekeeping" and other high class magazines, and the manufacturers with our efforts to sell good merchandise, and see no reason why we should not continue to do so, as the results have been most satisfactory to us.

You have our consent to use whatever you wish from this experience of ours in featuring Nationally advertised goods, and if there is any further information we can give you we will be very glad to give it.

Now the Plumbers Get It for Combining in Restraint of Trade.

Thirty-three officials and members of the National Master Plumbers were indicted by the Federal Grand Jury at Erie, Pa., last Monday for having unlawfully engaged in a conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade and commerce in plumbing supplies in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. Those against whom true bills were returned are charged with being in a secret agreement with manufacturers of plumber supplies not to sell supplies to plumbers not members of the association at standard prices and often refusing their sales entirely. Among those indicted are William McCoach, City Treasurer of Philadelphia, also treasurer of the National Association; S. Louis Barnes, National president, and D. F. Durkin, Jr., National secretary, both of Philadelphia. They will be tried in Pittsburgh this winter. The others against whom indictments were returned are Frank J. Fee, New York; B. Joseph O'Donnell, Syracuse; Alfred C. Eynon, Canton, Ohio; Thomas J. Dyer, Andrew J. Murphy, Ray J. Hillenbrand, John Vogelpohl, Edward H. Morgan, Cincinnati; David H. Roberts, W. E. Latest Innovation is Table Syrup From Apples.

Government Has Found How to Do This and Will Shortly Introduce Commercially. Boon to Apple Industry, Because It Uses Up Culls.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

October 9, 1914.

Following extensive experiments begun last spring, the head of the fruit and vegetable utilization laboratory of the Department of Agriculture has applied for a public service patent covering the making of a new form of table syrup from apple juice. This patent will make the discovery which the specialists believe will be of great value to all apple growers as a means of utilizing their culls and excess apples common property of any cider mill in the United States which wishes to manufacture and sell apple cider syrup.

The new syrup, one gallon of which is made from seven gallons of ordinary cider, is a clear ruby or amber colored syrup of about the consistency of cane syrup and maple syrup. Properly sterilized and put in sealed tins or bottles, it will keep indefinitely, and when opened will keep under household conditions as well as other syrups. It has a distinct fruity aroma and special flavor of its own which is described as being practically the same as the taste of the syrup substance which exudes from a baked apple.

The syrup can be used like maple or other syrups for griddle cakes, cereals, household cookery, and as flavoring in desserts. The Government cooking experts are at present experimenting with it in cookery and expect shortly to issue recipes for use of the new syrup in old ways and for taking advantage of its special flavor in novel dishes.

The department chemists have already produced over ten gallons of this syrup in their laboratories, using summer and other forms of apples. The success of the experiments has greatly interested some of the apple growers, and during October a large cider mill in the Hood River Valley, Oregon, will in co-operation with the Government chemists endeavor to produce 1,000 gallons on a commercial scale and give the new product a thorough market test by making it accessible through retailers in a limited field. The interest of apple growers in the product arises from the fact that the new apple cider syrup promises to give them a commercial outlet for vast quantities of wind-fall and other apples for which they hitherto could find no market either in perishable raw cider or in vinegar. Cider production, it seems, comes largely at one season of the year, during which the market is more or less flooded with this perishable product. The bulk and perishability of the raw cider, moreover, the cider makers state, often make it unprofitable for them to ship the raw cider of one district long distances to a non-apple growing region. The market for cider, therefore, has been largely restricted in many cases to localities near the area of production. No method of sterilizing ordinary cider has been found practical for the reason that boiling cider at once interferes with its delicate flavor.

Don't Let Your Tea Trade Go to Peddlers

The taste for tea is acquired—not natural. Once acquired, it stays.

Every live dealer can, by little effort, educate his trade to a particular quality or flavor of tea and, by selling TETLEY'S TEA, he is sure of uniform quality and flavor the year around. This will insure the return of customers again and again for that particular tea, and keep his business steadily progressive.

No premiums, no china, nothing but the finest selection of India and Ceylon tea, carefully blended to a permanently uniform quality and packed in attractive air-tight tins—

WITH THE EDITOR

The Pennsylvania net weight law, which becomes operative on January 1, 1915, contains a provision that "if it (a commodity) is in package form," it shall bear upon the label a statement of weight, measure or numerical count. The Federal net weight law, which became operative September 3d last, contains a similar provision. The writer is informed that the officials who will enforce both laws are taking the position that "if in package form," includes potatoes in barrels, apples in boxes, coffee in 135 pound bags—in fact all products sold in any kind of a container. Since practically all products are sold or delivered in some sort of a container, this ruling would require all products to be labeled, including pianos.

We have every confidence that the first court that gets a whack at this ruling will demolish it. It seems to us utterly ridiculous. Very evidently the Legislature realized that there would be goods other than package goods, otherwise it would not have said "if it is in package form." The official ruling really nullifies the words of the law because it would make everything package goods, which the law clearly does not do. Outside of package goods, what can there be but bulk goods, and what can bulk goods be but goods sold in bulk—goods sold in big masses, as distinct from those sold in small packages.

It is not surprising that the weight and measure officials include as much within the law as they can. That is what officials charged with enforcing a law always do. It gives them more power, if they can get away with it, and then, if they are sincere, they may be animated by a desire to get as much protection for the public out of the law as they can. It is difficult, however, under this or any other view, to see any sense in another ruling which the Pennsylvania Bureau of Standards has just made under the same law. It is that soap must have its wrapper labeled "This wrapper contains one cake of soap." This is sheer rot. The object of the law is to prevent the deceit of consumers—where numerical count rather than weight is involved, to inform the consumer how many of a thing she is getting so she will not believe she is getting more than she is. Naturally the fulfillment of that object would not require the labeling of soap, for the consumer could hardly believe she was getting more than one cake, soap having been sold by the single cake from time immemorial.

We believe that an official who would seriously make such a ruling as this should wear this label on his hat: "This hat, when worn, contains one croquet ball of solid construction."

We in the United States certainly pride ourselves upon being superior to semi-savages, such as those of the Philippine Islands, yet in one respect at least we are hopelessly behind them. There has just gone into effect in the Philippines a law regulating the sale of patent medicines which contains the three following very necessary provisions. We print the substance and not the full text:—

What Semi-savages Do to Patent Medicines.

Section 1. Every preparation, whether of a simple substance or of compounded substances, for the prevention, alleviation or cure of human ailments, whether issued in or for retail sale, shall be accompanied by the formula of preparation plainly and legibly expressed upon the bottle, label or package immediately containing the preparation, in such wise that it shall reach the purchaser at each and every purchase.

Sec. 2. No preparation, whether of a simple substance or of compounded substances, or any fraudulent therapeutic appliance or device for the prevention, alleviation or cure of human ailments, shall be accompanied by any advertisement, announcement, persuasion, recommendation, testimonial, reference, certificate of merit, declaration of merit or efficacy, mark of distinction or picture, symbol or emblem signifying or suggesting any of these, either upon or in the article itself, or upon the bottle, box, container, cork, capsule, label, or attachment, or upon the invoice, bill, advice, notification, or otherwise by any device or method which is false, fraudulent, exaggerated or misleading in any way.

Sec. 3. No advertisement or announcement of any proprietary, patent or secret cure or any fraudulent therapeutic appliance or device shall be published or circulated in any newspaper, journal, serial, book, pamphlet, handbill, poster, wall plate or by painting, impressing, embossing or otherwise, within the jurisdiction of the government of the Philippine Islands which is false, fraudulent, misleading or exaggerated in any way, and every such advertisement or announcement shall be accompanied with the formula as provided in Section 1 of this act.

In short, on the label of every patent medicine you must print your formula—not only the ingredients, but the quantity of the ingredients. There is no such provision in the United States, because here it has always been believed that a patent medicine formula was a manufacturer's own property, which was violated when he was made to tell it. There is something in that, but not so much as there is in the need of public health protection.

Then all fraudulent patent medicines, and fraudulent advertising of patent medicines, is forbidden. That provision would probably touch 90 per cent. of all the patent medicines on the market today. In fact it is doubtful if there is a single patent medicine on sale whose label and whose literature are absolutely free of all deceitful and exaggerated statements.

Everything considered, patent medicines are about the least desirable and attractive merchandise a retail dealer can handle.

We have from a valued correspondent from Penn Yan, N. Y., a little statement about the psychology of selling goods through advertising which condenses the whole subject into fewer words than we have ever seen used before. Here it is:—

Two Ways of Advertising.

According to our experience, there are two ways of making a woman buy. Make her think that the thing you want to sell is very cheap, and she will want to buy it whether she needs it or not. Or make her feel that she really ought to have it, and that it will do her or her family good, and she will probably buy it, regardless of the price. Way No. 1 might be called the price pull, and the second the educational style of advertising.

Can it be doubted that the second way builds up the biggest business and makes the most money? Woe betide the wholesaler or retailer who is continually educating his customer to buy cheap. There is in everybody a make-up a strain of bargain-loving. With some it sleeps and only occasionally awakes. With others it is always awake, and night and day smells hungry about for goods under price. It is a very foolish merchant who deliberately and continually plays upon this human peculiarity, for the logical end of it is the constant, burning need of offering bargains and more bargains, and the complete destruction of a profit.

Every merchant offers bargains some time, and should do so, but it is well to remember that the more he offers the more he will have to.

President Bedford of Corn Products Co., Makes Lively Defense of Wholesale Grocer.

The following interesting paragraph recently appeared in "Leslie's Weekly":

Wholesalers! In the crusade for lower food prices, the retailer and wholesaler are constantly subjected to the charge that they are needless and that they are largely responsible for the increased cost of living. This is unfair. The retailer and the wholesaler have their functions or they would not exist. They maintain the balance of supply and demand. They meet the special requirements of the public. Their profits are not large and depend upon the volume of their business.

They are as much entitled to a living as the farmer or the workman. Mr. E. T. Bedford, president of the Corn Products Refining Co., makes a spirited defense of the wholesale grocer. He says: "There are over 3,000 wholesale grocers in this country. They have thousands of salesmen and can be commended as business men of high, if not the highest, character of any in the country, with a signal ability as distributors. As such, they are the most economical medium through which the manufacturer can reach the consumer." Others bear similar testimony. Let those who are seeking to eliminate the middleman bear in mind that he has a place to fill and fills it well. An excellent motto for all is the old one, "Live and let live!"

More of the "American Grocers' Society"

Some Additional Information Regarding a Scheme Published and Discussed Several Months Ago. Offers Its Stock for Sale on Agreement to Sell Standard Brands at Cut Prices. This Paper's Advice is Unfavorable.

We have received several requests for information and advice regarding the scheme of the "American Grocers' Society," a stock promoting cut-price scheme discussed several weeks ago. For instance, the following:—

Doylestown, Pa., October 5, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Kindly let me know what you can say about the American Grocers' Society, Inc., Essex Building, 31 Clinton street, Newark, N. J. They want to sell four shares of stock (at least), $12.50 a share, or $50.

This entitles you to purchase groceries or such items as they have listed at better prices, such as Fels Naptha, $3.60 per case; Ivory, small, $3.75 per case; P. & G., $3.75 per case; Shredded Wheat, $3.25 per case; Cream of Wheat, $4.10 per case, and other items not mentioned.

They also believe they can declare a dividend of 8 per cent.

AUSTIN B. BENNER.

We also have had an inquiry to the same effect from Charles J.

Donohue, Peekskill, N. Y., and from others. Several months ago the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" had several inquiries about this concern, which then gave its address at a number on Front street, New York. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" investigated the scheme rather thoroughly then and advised its subscribers not to do business. At that time the scheme was apparently composed of two men only, neither of whom had much resources, and it had not been incorporated. One report which we received was that they were evidently endeavoring to collect enough money from subscribers to pay incorporating expenses. The other firms using the Front street address had never heard of the "American Grocers' Society" when our representative called there, though they had heard of one of the promoters, who had desk room in the building.

The letterhead used by the concern now gives its address as "Essex Building, 31 Clinton street, Newark, N. J." We have read the literature which these inquirers sent and see no reason to change our opinion that no money ought to be invested with the "American Grocers' Society." So far as we have been able to learn, nobody of financial substance is behind it. All of the literature is of the familiar stock scheme promoting type, and is not of a character to inspire confidence. Subscribers are offered 10 to 20 per cent. discount, for instance, on trade-marked brands, and on top of that, are practically offered a dividend of 8 per cent. on their investment. This wonderful thing is done by eliminating the jobber's profit, which doesn't begin to be that much.

Here is a "partial price list" of some of the proprietary brands which the concern says it is ready

¶ This is not a pretty figure of speech—it is solid fact. All of the money which manufacturers of nationally advertised products are spending for advertising and general exploitation, is being spent to make consumers go to your store and buy goods. You therefore draw a direct profit on the manufacturers, investment, not only through the profit on his product, but through the profit on other goods that you sell to the customers that the manufacturer has inspired to come. Of course we have no access to the secret workings of the "American Grocery Society's" mind, but we suggest that the very best way of collecting from merchants a very large sum of money in a short time would be to offer those merchants a list of the goods they are regularly handling, at much below the regular prices, with the agreement that if they would subscribe to stock, they could continue to buy those and other goods at cut prices. Hardly any bait is more tempting, and many a hard-headed merchant would gladly buy himself into such a fertile field of money-saving buying. But after the stock had been bought and paid for, what assurance is there that the "American Grocers' Society" will go on supplying the goods at cut prices? Suppose the manufacturers refuse to sell it, and it has to buy of the jobber? What becomes of its scheme?

Some of the literature indicates that the American Grocers' Society will shortly if not now pack its own brands, and will expect its stockholders to sell them. That prospect, we should say, is not particularly alluring.

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

Karo Moves Quickly From Your Shelves

You'll find KARO listed on a majority of the orders you receive and your customers ask for it because our advertising has taught them its many uses, while its purity and quality bring them back for more. KARO is easy to sell and the demand for it is increasing throughout the entire year. It moves so quickly and gives such perfect satisfaction to your customers that you will find KARO the most profitable syrup you can handle. Display the well known KARO cans where your customer can see them—you'll find it pays.

Besides its many other uses, KARO (Crystal White) is widely used for home preserving. It will pay you to speak of this to your customers, because KARO pays you more profit than sugar.

The New York Letter

Plans Shaping for Opening South American Trade. Mayor's Food Committee Educating Public to Buy Cheaper Meat. War Brings Big Chance for American Oleomargarine in England. Another Co-operative Store Failure. Austrian Sugar Offered Here.

New York, October 9, 1914.

Advertisements are beginning to appear in the daily papers, particularly the financial papers, from individuals and firms offering to introduce American goods into the South American countries. Quite a number of persons are coming to the front who claim to understand the peculiarities of the South American business and to be able to put American firms in a position to get good business there.

It seems to be the general opinion among New York firms doing an export business that South America, if it is to be conquered by our firms at all, must be conquered by natives of those countries, or at least by native Spaniards. The racial attitudes toward business are so radically different in South America than in this country, or in any other country where we are accustomed to deal, that it seems to be believed rather hopeless for us to accomplish anything without native aid.

All authorities agree, however, that there is an enormous business waiting for our products in South America if we can go after it intelligently.

During the week the Mayor's Committee on Food Supply has issued to consumers a chart showing a complete picture of a beef, with an analysis revealing the various cuts and the price of each. Accompanying the picture are a number of suggestions intended to make consumers pay more attention to the cheaper cuts of beef. It has always been contended that one reason for the high price of beef is that consumers have come to choose only the choice cuts, leaving the others, which, in many respects are just as good, to be sold for what they will bring.

The wording of the committee's chart was as follows:—

This list shows the price of each cut as compared with the others:—
No. 1, Porterhouse28 cents
No. 2, Sirloin26 cents
No. 3, Round24 cents
No. 4, Top sirloin22 cents
No. 5, Rib roast20-22 cents
No. 6, Rump20 cents
No. 7, Cross rib20 cents
No. 8, Flank18 cents
No. 9, Chuck16-18 cents
No. 10, Blade16-18 cents
No. 11, Shoulder16 cents
No. 12, Neck14-16 cents
No. 13, Brisket12 cents
No. 14, Plate12 cents
No. 15, Navel12 cents
No. 16, Shin10 cents

Do you know that the less tender cuts are more nourishing than the more expensive cuts?

Do you know that the less expensive cuts, if properly cooked and seasoned, are mighty good eating?

Flank steak costs much less than top sirloin or round steak, but it makes an excellent roast. It can also be pot roasted or used as chopped meat.

Chuck or round steak costs much less than porterhouse or sirloin and can be broiled in the same manner.

Chuck roast costs much less than rib roast and will make just as appetizing a dish if the bone is removed, the meat rolled and then roasted.

The beef neck is juicy and well flavored. It rarely sells for over 16 cents a pound, and makes a good pot roast and excellent stews and soups.

The cross rib makes an excellent pot roast and there is no waste.

Shin of beef makes a good "beef-a-la-mode." Cut it up the same as for stew; then brown the pieces in hot fat; then add water; cook in a pot the same as pot roast, and serve with the gravy. By browning the meat in hot fat you retain its juices and this adds greatly to the flavor of the dish.

Shin of beef makes a most nourishing soup and the meat can be taken from the pot afterwards and served with horse radish sauce.

In broiling or roasting the less tender cuts, if you are afraid that they will not be as tender as you would like, they can be made tender if treated in the following simple manner: "Mix two tablespoonfuls of oil and one tablespoonful of vinegar; brush this over the meat and let the meat stand for half an hour before cooking it."

If you buy a rib roast of beef have your butcher cut the rib end off, so that you can use it for making soup. If it is left on and roasted with the rest of the meat, it is largely wasted.

In corned beef, the flank piece, the navel piece, the plate piece and the brisket piece cost the least. These cuts are much more juicy and palatable than the rump piece, and the left-over portions can be used to make a splendid hash.

Be sure that the beef you buy has a red, rosy color; that it is well streaked with fat; that the fat is yellow white; that the lean is firm and elastic and scarcely moist when touched with the finger.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

"The Voice with the Smile Wins."—Very likely the New York Telephone Co. never issued anything for the benefit of their subscribers in so few words that contained more thought than the above headline.

That headline tells us as phone salesmen to be patient, polite, attentive. It tells us to speak gently, pleasantly, slowly, and it says this kind of voice "wins." And it does win. Truly "distance lends enchantment" in the case of the phone order taker. Abruptness is unforgivable. Put your best manners into your phone talk.

Shelf System.—Where there is no regular stock clerk and where you men have to fill the shelves yourselves, often hurriedly, the temptation comes to "pack," that is, to shove the older stock back instead of bringing it front, which means a lot more time and work. Better empty space than "packing." No man with a recent sense of stock keeping will be guilty of such an act. This time of the year especially, this bringing forward method should be strictly attended to on account of so many fresh lines coming in.

Apples by the Barrel.—Your "voice with a smile" can sell apples by the barrel because you can show her that her peck and half peck way of buying is expensive and that your wholesale price means a saving of about 30 per cent.

A little talk on their wholesomeness and cheapness would help. Take pip-pins, for instance. Good to bake, good for sauce, good for pies, good for dumplings, and above all, good to eat.

Case Mixed Vegetables for $2.30.—

In some stores this case of mixed goods makes a great hit. And this is just the time to start taking it, more for the sake of associating it with your place than for present buying, perhaps, because it might be a trifle early for some of the things.

Anyway, here is the variety, the price, of course, is approximate. Four cans corn, three of peas, three of tomatoes, three of string beans, three of limas, two of soup vegetables, three of succotash and three of asparagus tips.

But the success of a thing like this Depends Upon the Salesman.—Simply because it is out of the ordinary, in a measure. Train yourselves to talk a proposition of this kind. Its far better than trying to sell a case of tomatoes at a cut rate barely making the store's expense on the transaction.

You see, in the sale of the mixed goods you get away from the individual cut rate on any of them and you get your full line introduced at one time. Try it out.

I always look forward with much pleasure to receiving the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" as it has given me lots of good pointers in the line of buying groceries. You can enter my name for two years' subscription as per check enclosed. Wishing you much success.—J. W. Boyd, Manheim, Pa.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market seems in fairly satisfactory condition, though undoubtedly the tone is gradually easing as the supply increases. Much of the war advance has already been lost. There is no surplus of tea, and there will probably be none, therefore there is no reasonable probability of any slump in prices. The consumptive demand for tea is fair.

Coffee.

The coffee market is still very sick. The Brazil markets are weak, owing to unfavorable financial conditions down there, and this is reflected in the markets of the country. Nominally the prices for Rio and Santos coffee are unchanged from last week, but the market is in buyers' favor all along the line. Buyers are distrustful all along the line, however, and are buying only what they must have. Individual purchases are much smaller than normally. Mild coffees are quiet and unchanged for the week, market there also being in buyers' favor. Java and Mocha steady to firm and moderately active.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows additional weakness. Granulated is down to $6\frac{1}{4}$ to $6\frac{1}{2}$ cents, and it looks like 6 cents quite soon unless the situation changes. Raws are somewhat easier and there has been a slight decline during the week. The demand for refined sugar is comparatively light.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose declined another 5 points during the week, and compound syrup in bulk is easier in consequence. The demand for compound syrup is fair. Sugar syrup is scarce and unchanged in price. Molasses quiet and unchanged.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are weak, but show no quotable change during the week. The bottom seems to be $72\frac{1}{2}$ cents, f. o. b. the factory, in a large way. The pack is still proceeding, but is dwindling to an end; the aggregate is still uncertain. The demand for tomatoes is moderate. Corn and peas are unchanged. There will be a short delivery in Maine corn, ranging from 50 to 70 per cent., due to cold weather. The trade are warned against frozen Maine corn, as it is known that freezing weather prevailed during a part of the packing season, and that usually means frozen canned corn. Peas unchanged and quiet. Apples dull at ruling prices. California canned goods are quiet in first hands, as deliveries of new pack are just being made. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

There is much uncertainty in the mackerel situation. The new Norway combination has begun active selling in this country, and during the week about 9,000 barrels came into this port, consigned to the American representatives of the combine. There has been no market for it, because representatives of independent packers have been offering mackerel $2 to $3 per barrel cheaper. So far they have gotten enough for their needs and seem to believe they can go on doing it, but the combine claims it controls the large share of the fish, and the future is uncertain. Irish and shore mackerel show no change for the week. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged, still steady to firm and in light demand. Domestic sardines are much weaker and there are now offerings at $2.85, f. o. b. Eastport, in large quantities. Better catch and sharp competition among the packers is responsible. Imported sardines show no change whatever. Salmon is quiet and unchanged.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are easier, meaning futures, and the basis price has now declined to around 5 cents. Spot prunes are neglected and unchanged. Peaches still very cheap, but unchanged and dull. Apricots unchanged and dull. Raisins quiet at the moment and unchanged in price. Currants unchanged and steady, demand moderate. Citron is a trifle easier on increased supplies. Other dried fruit unchanged and quiet.

Butter.

The butter market is firm at an advance of 1 cent per pound over last week. The quality is fully up to standard and the make is slightly below normal. Butter in cold storage warehouses is lighter than a year ago, and the entire market is healthier at present prices. An increased consumptive demand is expected, with possible slight advances.

Eggs.

The receipts of new-laid eggs are normal for the season and meet with ready sale at unchanged prices. The quality of the receipts is averaging good, and the market is fairly healthy. The consumptive demand is normal, with no marked change in sight.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged, with only a fair consumptive demand. Stocks are reported a little heavier than normal and no change seems in sight.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are still lower. The price on spot in a large way is \$2.45 to \$2.50, but it is now possible to buy to come forward at around \$2.30. The market is easy. Marrows are unchanged on last week's basis, new receipts showing very good quality. California limas are also easier. Spot supplies are down $\frac{1}{2}$ cent, or to $6\frac{1}{2}$ cents in a large way, and new crop are 5 cents in a large way on the coast, which is 5.90 cents delivered in the East. All these prices are in carload lots. Green and Scotch peas are somewhat easier for the week.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are barely steady at $\frac{1}{4}$ cent decline. The consumptive demand is moderate. Pure and compound lard are also $\frac{1}{4}$ cent off, and show fair consumptive demand. Barrel pork is firm and unchanged. Canned meats strong, with only moderate demand, as is dried beef.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

Evidence of the closing of the tomato canning season is now becoming plainly visible, in a convincing way, by the return to the city of large groups of the factory workers, men, women and children, who make a picnic of their six or eight weeks' stay in the beautiful open country in the neighborhood of the canneries in Maryland. Another piece of evidence that the final scene is on, and that the curtain is soon to be rung down, is the absence of orders for extra supplies of empty cans from country packers who had not bought enough of them to take care of the crop overflow. As one of them expressed it in a recent letter to us, "there ain't agoin to be no overflow this season." It was not expected that the receipts of raw tomatoes this week would be as light as they were last week; some increase was confidently expected, but everyone was disappointed and not a canner in Baltimore got enough of them for more than a half day's work. Under such conditions, some reaction from the present low market prices is not wholly unreasonable.

There was a quiet, orderly buying movement in tomatoes this week and the character of the buying indicated that the purchasers felt sure of their ground. The bulk of the buying was by Eastern houses, and by Baltimore canners who have been unable to accumulate a surplus stock for the winter and spring trade, above their present contract requirements. The absence of a glut in the crop this season has been a great disappointment, especially to the Baltimore canners with big cash balances in bank awaiting the opportunity. There will be no famine next winter in canned tomatoes; don't buy them in that expectation, but buy them with reasonable confidence that they are safe property to own at to-day's cost.

'Twas a dull market for the other lines of vegetables this week. There was, of course, the usual flow of daily orders for nearly every article in the list, but the average quantity was smaller than in the week previous. The redeeming feature was the fact that they were well-scattered, an indication that the jobbers, as a rule, are not overburdened with canned goods. Spinach, string beans, sweet potatoes and corn were a bit more active than the other items, but that is not saying very much for them. They will all have their innings by and by.

The fall crop of pears is now arriving, and the Baltimore canners are busy on them. There is always an excellent demand for them, as well as for the fall pack of apples, and the quality of both is excellent. The canning season for peaches is about over, and there is a fair supply of the different grades. The average quality is, perhaps, the best in ten years. There is a fair demand for pie peaches and seconds peaches. The buying of berries and cherries is Cove oysters continue dull; prices unchanged.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Our agents in Holland report by mail that stocks of Holland herring are practically exhausted, but we had a cable yesterday advising us of some shipments, so it seems that fresh supplies have come forward, although we do not believe in large quantities. Naturally, under the circumstances, prices asked for Holland herrings in the primary market may be considered exorbitant, and while they may not be higher than the situation warrants, the demand will certainly be very small if they cannot be had at less money than shippers are asking for them at the present time.

Scotch Herrings.—The market has been supplied with new shipments of some size. Nevertheless, the market is quite good for Scotch herrings. The demand continues good, inspired by the high prices for the Holland herrings, and we do not look for any lower prices on Scotch herrings in the near future.

Another shipment of new Iceland fat herrings has arrived and proved of exceptionally fine quality. The fish are larger and fatter than we have had during the past few seasons.

Further shipments of Norway fat mackerel have arrived. The quality shows very satisfactory on the whole, although some lots arrived which are rather poor, and therefore are being offered at prices below the market.

Norway reports poor fishing of sardines and rather a scarcity of both the cheaper and finer grades of Norwegian sardines. The demand continues very good, but supplies here are rather small. Some shipments of Portuguese sardines have arrived here by direct Italian steamer, but the market being rather depleted, arrivals found ready sale at satisfactory prices, ex dock, with the exception of some lots of not well-introduced brands.

We have no advice of any fishing of French sardines and no French sprats nor Belgian sprats are to be had at the present time, in fact, nothing can be shipped from Belgium. We, ourselves, have some goods which have been transhipped to Antwerp still lying there, and are unable to move them. Of course, food products cannot be exported from Belgium, the Belgium Government not permitting it. No food-stuffs are coming from Germany nor from Russia at the present time. Italy, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark still continue to ship. The rate of exchange is still exorbitant. War risk insurance has settled down to a more settled basis, and we are now able to cover war risk under an open insurance policy, rates, of course, changing from time to time, according to circumstances.

STROHMEYER & ARPE Co.

New York.

Spices.

The market is fairly active, with but few changes in price. The current demand is fairly brisk. Conditions are very much unsettled and the uncertainty of obtaining supplies from abroad, together with the high cost of exchange and war risk, has a tendency to restrict buying to parcels that are now afloat on declared vessels.

Peppers.—Stocks here, as well as in Holland and England, very small. There is some Lampong now en route to America, though the bulk of this is to fill contracts already placed. Shipments from the Malabar coast are reported impossible at present. All indications would point to firmer and higher prices.

Red Peppers.—Fairly active at unchanged prices.

Pimento (Allspice).—Very firm and in good demand.

Mace.—More active, with much better trade demand. Prices firm and steady.

Nutmegs.—Unquestionably firmer. It is freely predicted that higher prices will rule.

Gingers.—Remain dull and unchanged for all grades.

Paprikas.—No new supplies from Europe have arrived lately. The season for heavy consumption has just commenced, so it is not expected that we will experience any decline in values.

Tapiocas.—In fair demand at unchanged prices.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—The market continues unsettled. Some articles have declined, others advanced. Celery is somewhat easier. Coriander slightly lower. Cummin caraway firm. Sage and sweet herbs now in big demand, with high prices prevailing for savory and thyme, as well as German and French marjoram.

McCORMICK & Co.

Baltimore, Md.

Rice.

Business conditions continue to show real marks of improvement, though the improvement is, perhaps, more sentimental than anything actually tangible, and this makes the situation rather a complex one.

The demand continues slow and prices are showing signs of a slight falling off in values. The fact is that the mills are still refusing to meet the planters' views and decline to take up rough on the present fixed minimum basis, on the ground that it leaves no margin of profit whatever. This situation naturally affects the market for the cleaned, so that with the accumulation of stock, the trend is clearly towards a lower plane of values.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast are to the effect that recent conditions remain unchanged, demand being of a hand-to-mouth character. At New Orleans the demand has fallen off and the general complaint is that the trade are not responding to the prices at which the offerings of the mills are put out.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, report no change in the rough situation and the standoff by the millers and planters continues same as last week.

Sugar Brokers Protest Against the War Tax on Brokers.

The following protest has been forwarded to the Senate Finance Committee by the National Association of Brokers in refined sugar:—

On behalf of many thousands of merchandise brokers in all sections of this country engaged in the actual distribution of the necessities of life, we hereby enter an earnest protest against the passage of that section of the proposed war tax directly affecting commercial brokers.

The gross injustice of this proposition to the merchandise brokers may readily be seen, when under the terms of the proposed bill, this class of business men will be taxed, in addition to National and State taxes paid in many States, four times, as follows:—

First.—Tax of $20 for doing business.

Second.—Ten-cent stamps on each and every contract, which, in a great number of cases, are for very small quantities, as the article dealt in is frequently purchased by the jobber every day and on which the commission is very slight, amounting frequently to less than $1.

Third.—A tax on telegrams.

Fourth.—A tax on telephone messages.

Note.—Telegrams and telephone messages are a very large part of the expenses of doing business. The merchants require frequent and accurate postings.

A majority of these brokers have no capital employed and their only source of revenue is the commission obtained on the distribution of merchandise, a great many earning a bare living for themselves and families by hard work. The imposition of the above proposed taxes would work a great hardship and be a disproportionate taxation as compared to other lines of business, as well as being excessive taxation on the amount of business done.

Do not buy beef that is wet or flabby or that looks pink or purple as it lies on the counter.

Advices have reached this city during the week that the Government believes the war brings with it as great an opportunity for increasing the trade in American oleomargarine in Great Britain as for increasing the trade in anything else. This is because the usual sources of butter are closed to Great Britain. It appears that the United Kingdom ordinarily imports about 80,000 tons of butter from Denmark and produces and consumes about the same amount of oleomargarine at home. The supply of butter from Denmark is very much reduced on account of the war, and England's own war troubles have crippled her facilities for manufacturing oleomargarine.

Oleomargarine made in England is a different product from American. The latter is a mixture of oleo oil and neutral lard, with cottonseed oil; whereas, in England copra oil is mixed with cottonseed oil. In this country some of the better grades of oleomargarine also contain considerable quantities of butter. Most of the copra oil comes from Germany, and of course this supply is done for the time being. In order to increase the demand for our oleomargarine in England, it will be necessary practically to introduce a new product.

The tie-up in the cotton industry of the South is beginning to have its effects in collateral lines. During the week the Corn Products Refining Co. has reduced the price of starch 10 cents per 100 pounds, giving the curtailment of the output of the cotton mills as responsible.

Another co-operative store enterprise has failed. After an attempt lasting two years and a half, to establish a paying co-operative store in Brooklyn, the Glenwood Co-operative Stores, Inc., is to close its doors on Saturday night, and the corporation will go into liquidation. Lack of support on the part of a large majority of the stockholders is given as the reason for closing. It is said to-day that the liabilities are comparatively small and will be paid 10 cents on the dollar. The stockholders of the store, or a majority of them, voted on Monday night to wind up the affairs of the concern.

Information has reached this city that 12,000 tons of the best marks of Austria Crystals sugars are being offered at a price f. o. b. at a port in that country which would land the sugar in New York at a cost of 4.75 cents per pound, duty paid, without including war risk insurance. But if they offered it free of cost it could not come here without the consent of the war powers. If there was any way of getting the sugar into the United States (without risk of seizure by British cruisers), it would, to some extent, offset the advance in prices which war has made. But war will not permit Great Britain to allow United States money to go for Austrian sugar (directly or indirectly), even if Austria consented to exportation. Hence

United States consumers of sugar must continue to pay the war penalty, which seems to go along with neutrality, while the consumers of countries at war, except Great Britain, are getting their sugar much cheaper than they would without war.

Without supplies of sugar in the United States from the Continent, and with Great Britain in competition here and in Cuba for our local sources of supplies, only one result can follow within a comparatively short time, a curtailment of our supplies and a corresponding advance in the price of sugar to consumers.

For a short period there may even appear to be an oversupply of foreign and domestic sugars for our use and prices may possibly conform for a while to such appearances, but the coming campaign, October, 1914, to October, 1915, holds possibilities of high prices for sugar, which it will be wise to watch for constantly and anticipate, if possible.

The latest effort to put consumer and producer together through the open city markets occurred on Friday, when fresh-killed poultry was offered at 17 cents a pound and bottled milk at 7 cents a quart. Both of these prices are very considerably below the regular market, poultry ruling at 4 to 10 cents higher than the above price, and milk 2 to 3 cents. This did not take place until Friday, and the results have not yet been learned.

Local wholesale grocers are much interested in the circular, copies of which have reached this city issued by Mr. J. H. McLaurin, of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, to the jobbers of the South. It is headed, "Less Cotton, More Corn," and the point is that jobbers should use their influence to induce the Southern farmers to diversify their crops and devote more attention to corn and less to cotton. The moral, of course, is that if they had done so they would not be in their present predicament.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea dormant, with the market slightly in buyers' favor. Demand light.—Coffee weak, dull and unsettled. News from Brazil tells of depressed financial conditions there, although reports were a trifle better as the week closed.—Sugar unchanged, with quotations at 6¼ to 6½ cents. Federal will close down next week for the usual yearly clean-up.—California raisins dull and unsettled. Other California dried fruits also very quiet, and the market inclined to be easy.—Nuts firm. Demand light. Canned tomatoes somewhat steady. Corn firm; peas dull. New York String beans firm.—Salmon quiet and steady. Domestic sardines weak and declined 15 cents per case.—Wheat slightly firmer on stronger foreign advices, but shows no particular advance for the week.—Flour in light demand, with prices fairly steady.

A Profit Paying Department.

The American News Company of New York City will gladly tell you how you can start a news department so that you can reap the good profit that comes from the sale of magazines and periodicals. They will buy other lines from you as well. It is a well-known fact that there is good money in such a department, and as it practically runs itself you can readily take advantage of it.

Give Your Jobber a Square Deal and Other People Will Give You One

Little talks between wholesalers and retailers on the ethics of fair business—what is square and what is tricky?—Doing unto the jobber as you would have him and other people do unto you.

No. 4

It is your privilege and your duty to buy just as cheaply as you can, consistent with the principles of honesty and fair dealing.

Occasionally a retailer will play off against a salesman a price which nobody has given him. "I can buy for two cents less, or ten cents less, or half a cent less." Of course this is dishonest, but it is something more—it is downright cruel to a hard-working salesman. He must meet competition to hold his trade and his position. Existing competition is hard enough to meet without breaking his back with fictitious competition.

The modern salesman is almost as useful to his customer as he is to his house. He is particularly deserving of the squarest of square deals at all times.

CERESOTA—The Flour That Makes Housewives Happy

Costs a few pennies more than some other brands, but more than makes good in the wonderful product that will be turned out of the household oven. Don't demoralize the health of your family by giving them bread that is in any respect inferior. In considering the high cost of living, do not begin with the mistaken idea that the best flours are too expensive. CERESOTA WILL PLEASE YOU EVERY TIME YOU BAKE. More and more of our customers are buying it every week, and there is no reason why this should not be the case. CERESOTA contains nothing that should not be in flour and everything good that should be. It is always the same—always reliable. Always in the front rank.

Imported Ginger Ale or Domestic Ginger Ale.

A Comparison Between Them When the War Makes Timely. It is Impossible to Make Better Ginger Ale Than We Make Here.

American enterprise and brain can and do produce American products that are unexcelled throughout the world over.

There is a considerable class of consumers, however, that is still caught by the magic word "imported" and this is especially true of food products. That seems to be the chief reason why a food product manufactured across the water from materials of the same identical grade by concerns with no more enterprise, capital, brains, employing poorer paid labor, and forced to pay a heavy duty, is able to compete with the American product in its class, and in many cases sell at a much higher price.

This was true for many years of ginger ale, which is undoubtedly the most popular soft drink ever bottled. When properly prepared it is a wholesome, healthful carbonated beverage sweetened with pure sugar, colored slightly with caramel (or burnt sugar avored with pure fruit flavors of lemons, lemons and oranges, blended with the finest Jamaica ginger with dashes of pepper and lemon or lime juice to give it the desired pungency and acidity. These are the ingredients and their careful selection as regards quality and very skillful blending as to quantities will produce what comes mighty near being the ideal beverage, boozeless, dopeless, thirst-quenching and refreshing. Its mildly stimulating properties and grateful warmth are pleasing both summer and winter, and your physician will pronounce it both good, and good for you.

Notwithstanding the simplicity of the manufacture of ginger ale, the imported article enjoyed a wide sale for many years, and it is only within recent years that the American bottlers realized that there was a big field for a Nationally advertised and distributed ginger ale.

How well they have succeeded in cultivating this field is seen in the ready response which the discriminating consumer had made, and the very large sale for their product which a few of the leading manufacturers have obtained, and it would seem as though the present time is the most opportune that the American manufacturer has ever experienced to popularize the slogan "Made in America" at the expense of our "imported" friends, and to relegate many of these to the shelf along with the Swiss watch and the French limousine.

Bill Introduced in Congress for Standard Grape Basket.

Congressman Shreve has introduced a bill in Congress for a standard grape basket. He provides for 4-pound, 8-pound and 20-pound baskets. The dimensions for the 4-pound baskets are that the bottom shall be $3\frac{5}{8}$ inches wide, $4\frac{5}{8}$ inches long and that the basket be $4\frac{1}{4}$ inches high. The top on the outside shall be 5 x 11 inches. For the 8-pound basket the measurements are: Bottom, $4\frac{3}{4}$ x $12\frac{1}{4}$, and $5\frac{1}{8}$ inches high; the top cover to measure $6\frac{1}{2}$ x $14\frac{1}{2}$ inches. The 20-pound basket dimensions are: For the bottom, $7\frac{1}{8}$ x 15 inches, and $6\frac{3}{4}$ inches for the height, while the top is to be $9\frac{1}{2}$ x 18 inches. The bill provides that there need be no mark to indicate the quantity when the baskets conform to these dimensions. Otherwise they must indicate the quantity or subject the seller to a fine of \$1 for each basket sold or offered for sale.

"If I Can Save $\frac{1}{4}$ c a Pound I Must Do It" and most of the time by so doing the merchant gets a very inferior Coffee. This kind of saving is not alone confined to Coffee, for in our business life we have heard of many sad experiences, which indicated that some of our good customers when placing either Fire or Life Insurance were attracted by a low price rather than by the strength and safety of the Company, where their interests would have been properly protected and the cost so little more, that you would hardly think that anyone would take the chance and place their policies in Companies that are practically unknown. Not long ago a customer's store was destroyed by fire. We knew him to be perfectly honest in every respect, but it took him a long time to collect his insurance owing to various reasons, questions and quibbles raised by the Company just for delay. If that Fire Insurance had been placed in a good Company, the claim would have been paid very soon after the proof of loss had been made up. Another customer who recently died, had carried a Life Insurance Policy for some years, and when his widow went to collect it, she was informed it was of no value, owing to some technicality which was in no way the fault of the insured.

If you are making an investment don't be attracted altogether by the rate of interest paid, but consider the security of the proposition. It is just as important for merchants when buying Coffee not to be attracted by a slight difference in the price, it would pay them much better to buy Parke's Unmatchable Coffee, as it is the Coffee that is standardized in value and cup quality. The merchant who buys quality Coffee, makes a sanitary display, talks Coffee to his customers, puts some ginger and snap into the work will increase his Coffee business and make it a success. Keep out of the rut.

Dry Goods—Notions—Knit Wear

Domestic Goods Replacing Foreign Lines. Blanket Prices Advancing.

With the curtailment of receipts of foreign made merchandise, domestic products are now having an innings, which will probably continue indefinitely. Merchants are specifying these goods in their orders, and American mills are accordingly busy meeting the welcome engagements. Of this, Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review, say: "Bookings of orders for spring delivery are ahead of what they were up to this date a year ago. This is partly due to the fact that many of the lines made in our own mills are replacing foreign productions. During the latter part of September, 1913, retail business was stimulated by a few days of very cold weather. Extremely mild weather this year during the same period has retarded retail business all over the country, and this has had its influence on current wholesale business."

An unusual demand for woolen dress goods is thus explained by the John V. Farwell Co., Chicago: "One of the most active lines at present is wool dress goods, which during the last two months have shown more than usual activity. The volume of wool dress goods business has been so unusual that a careful investigation has been made to find the cause of increase. Aside from National and recognized reasons, such as low stocks, fall season and approach of winter, it is found that the domestic science movement in our public schools, as stated some time ago, is resulting in a large increase in yardage demand. Home dressmakers are also big factors in consumption of dress goods by the yard. Another cause is the wave of economy sweeping across the country and the curbing of extravagance Nationally as well as locally."

"Many garments being made by home dressmakers both from new fabrics and gowns being made over, continue the demand for Roman stripes and other novelties in combination. The dysteuft situation and uncertainty of deliveries later are causing merchants to buy wool dress goods and silks more freely than usual this season, in preparing for immediate wants and spring business."

"Woolen blankets are in large demand for export and the products of woolen mills are contracted far ahead. An enormous consumption of woolen blankets by Governments for field and barrack use will undoubtedly further advance prices. The strong call for New England made cotton blankets continues. Heavy draperies, tapestry and sunfast portieres and yard goods are selling well."

Selecting and Retailing Corsets That Give Satisfaction.

Perhaps the general storekeeper may be indifferent as to the range of quality, size and fitting possibilities of his corset stock. If, however, he is a modern merchant, such as is contemplated as a reader of this department, he carries a line to which these three requisites are not overlooked when an order for such merchandise is placed. Suggestions made by a manufacturer of repute are not to be disregarded if a merchant's customers are to be satisfactorily served. The time when "any old corset," even if made of hoop iron and burlap, with the flexibility of a hitching post, would pass muster has happily gone by, never to return. Even the sloppiest country store at the cross roads can no longer put over such goods, but are expected to sell corsets that are designed to give comfort to their wearer, as well as to display a dress to the best advantage. Fifty-cent corsets are ausgespielt, though some storekeepers may not think so, for they are devices of torture and ugliness, which the most careless will no longer abide when better goods may be had designed along modern lines.

No doubt many of the highest priced corsets were originally designed in Paris; and then again a still larger number—the commercial article—were originated and "Made in America." It is now proposed that with the war upsetting and demoralizing the business of the French corsetieres, the designing, manufacturing and sale of this class of merchandise be taken in hand by domestic talent, with a view of making the home article supreme and pre-eminent in the future. The concern in point is planning to accomplish this very commendable object, and in connection therewith has formulated the appended classifications as an aid in selling corsets. Women are divided into nine general types—tall and stout, short and stout, large shoulders and small hips, small shoulders and large hips. Then in the selling argument these facts are to be considered:—

First.—The woman who is influenced by the price, and who generally buys $2, $3.50 and never over $5 corsets. Second.—This class covers all types of women and divides them up according to their figures. The sales person must tell each customer how a short, heavy woman may be made to look taller, the slender woman look fuller and rounder, the angular ones appear more graceful by the selection of an appropriate corset. All models of women should be appealed to by inquiry, of course, as to whether a corset is desired that will look well and still be comfort-giving when one simply works or walks, rides, swims, golfs, motors or dances.

Finally, a telling point is—of course, the general storekeeper may smile, but it is practical and establishes confidence in the store, nevertheless—to not lose track of corset customers altogether after the purchase has been made and delivered; but to follow up the sale by inquiry either personally or by letter if the goods are perfectly satisfactory as to fit, style and ease. If not to call and allow the firm to see that it is made right. This is better than for a dissatisfied customer to "knock" the corset to her neighbors and friends.

Spring Shades in Dress Materials.

Orders for dress goods from merchants of every grade are somewhat erratic, considering the time of year. Merchandise of this nature for immediate delivery in the hands of secondary distributors or jobbers is none too plentiful and the mills are pretty well filled up until the first of the year. Retail concerns which have placed commitments with foreign houses are blocked on deliveries, that were guaranteed but are unable of fulfillment after all. In these instances the buyers are obliged to turn to domestic lines. In the cheaper varieties of staple dress goods it is quite evident the need for immediate requirements have become pressing. Orders on file for December delivery are being urged for shipment at once. This, however, cannot be complied with readily, authoritative advices state, because the leading mills are sold up well ahead and have no goods in stock that can be so applied.

Further, dress goods jobbers and wholesalers are reported as not going to press very hard for spring orders until they see how some of their merchant customers meet obligations that fall due on the 10th of this month. Otherwise buying is about up to expectations, and in a number of instances the advance orders from retail distributors are better than selling agents expected. This is attributed largely to the cutting off of foreign supplies, as mentioned above. The prices on new business is figured as about fair when everything is taken into consideration.

The demand for broadcloths of the better grades continues strong, but the cheaper woolen fabrics are neglected. The best selling shades in worsted dress goods for next spring season are a tan, called sea sand by some and putty by others; monsoon, a darker shade of tan; serge green, amethyst, Dutch blue, Labrador, dark navy and crow blue. Leading dress goods producers are declining to accept orders on material in the grey.

Silk Prices in a Transitory State.

Conceding the coming seasons will run vigorously to silks as dress material, there is no disposition, however, to force sales. Both merchants and distributors are holding off for more favorable prices, and orders are placed only to take advantage of concessions by first hands or else to supply at once requirements. Foreign factors are figuring on shipping merchandise here that were originally made for other markets, which are now inaccessible on account of the European eruption. It is believed that prices will be materially affected because mills abroad are in a position where they must realize on a cash basis if safe transportation can be assured.

On Wednesday last an auction sale of domestic silks was held in New York, which included the following weaves: Taffetas, faille, charmeuse, gros de londre, peau de soie, crepe, satin, moire velours and poplin, plain and printed bengalines, etc. The lot included 1,000 pieces of black, colored and fancy silks, as per foregoing specifications, 20 to 40 inches wide. Fair prices were realized and a large number of merchants from the small towns were in attendance and active bidders.

Agitating for a More General Use of White Goods.

Many fancy white goods are being bought more liberally by those who are looking ahead. Not a few merchants large and small, are convinced that white fancy cottons will be largely worn next spring. While retailers as a rule are not disposed to take much stock in "sunshine" movements, they are encouraging the sentiment and aiding the work to enlarge the use of white dress cottons. These same merchants are of the opinion that they are beginning to see the approach of a demand for white goods which will amount to considerable if the agitation is carried on during the winter. The change in fashions, whereby more cloth is required in a dress, and more sheer goods are being used than heavy, are factors working in favor of larger sales of cottons for the spring season.

The New Collar in Fashion.

Sales at the notion counter have been considerably augmented by the arrival of the new collar for women. The summer and early fall witnessed a brisk trade in white neckwear of organdies and lawn. Now the vogue is cream net, lace and pique. There is less wiring of the collars. Fine Venise, applique and point laces are noted in the collars of the new dress models. Some of the lace guimpes are of embroidered net of the applique type lace and they finish at the top with a round neck that does not come quite up to the base of the throat. They are rapid sellers, providing the goods are prominently displayed at the counter.

Metallism a Dominant Note in Fabrics.

Metallism is the dominant note which influences all fabric and trimming modes. It is really the only abstruse style movement of the season, which began suddenly and is sweeping smart costume circles with vigorous thoroughness. The dainty goods are glittering with scaly black, dark blue, green, gold, silver and opalescent spangles. The goods are being extensively used for overskirts or paillettes and even in trimming for hats. It also enters as material for capes, and is destined to be very popular for age and youth. This is a development the merchant who has pretensions to keep anything but a "cracker barrel and cheese" store, with a few yards of calico and gingham on the side, should note.

Cancellation Test Case Proceedings.

The right to cancel an order at will is to be given a judicial interpretation, the case in point being a jobber who, after accepting and paying for part of a large order for hosiery, directed cancellation as to the remainder. The suit will be based on the fact that the raw material has been purchased by the manufacturer especially to cover the order and the goods subsequently made up according to specifications. The court proceedings will be carried on by the aggrieved party under the auspices of the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers. When the matter was brought to the attention of the association, the jobber was informed that cancellation would not be accepted. If he persisted in refusing to accept the hosiery contracted for, proceedings would be instituted for establishing a precedent. Allied interests have pledged co-operation in the event of a test case being taken to the courts, as they had also been considerably disturbed by cancellations.

Boots Shoes Findings

Faults Ascribed to Cheap Grade Shoes.

Perhaps the average merchant is not aware that the cheap shoe calls for as good workmanship as does the medium or high-grade shoe. The workmanship seen in some cheap grades of welts and McKays is the greatest objection to those shoes. The lining is not pulled in smoothly, the back-stay wrinkles and the tips are crooked. Those are some of the objections most noticeable, says "American Shoemaking." The back-stay wrinkles because the last is not moved down against the upper when the shoe is assembled. To pull on the back-stay does not always smooth out the stay, as the edge of the insole offers too much friction. The lining does not fit properly because the shoe is not pulled forward enough.

When the upper is not set lengthwise of the last to its full extent, the lining will wrinkle, and no amount of pulling at the sides will do away with the wrinkles. A shoe having a wrinkled lining is damaged beyond repairs. The cheap grade shoe, therefore, calls for perfect lasting, as this is where most defects are to be noted in welts and McKays.

Fixed Prices Shackle Trade.

Repeated reference to fixed prices, pro and con, has appeared in this department at various times. Advocates of both systems have energetically advanced their ideas, so that there is doubtless more or less confusion regarding the question in the minds of the average storekeeper. Shoe manufacturers and retailers in their National Association have come to the conclusion that fixed prices are unscientific. Their Conference Committee, at a recent meeting, declared that fixed prices are chains which shackle the trade, because they prevent the retail shoe business from being elastic and flexible in adapting itself to changed markets, varying trade conditions in different communities and the differing services of stores. The committee, in summing up this evidence, makes the following recommendations:

Every shoe business has its own particular atmosphere and its own particular talent and service, which will stand or fall as the consumer desires it. In order that the right prices prevail in your business, it is necessary for a dealer to know his entire overhead expenses. Then his legitimate profit should be added to this. Whatever figure results from this method should be the price of the shoe to the consumer. This is scientific and accurate, also fair to the consumer.

This system will help the retailer and the shoe trade generally out of the rut of the fixed price system—will make it easier to adjust prices in accordance with the rising and falling market of the future—will do away with the unscientific, bungling plan of retailing all kinds of shoes and leathers, regardless of their cost, at one price.

Your courage to put this system in effect will change your empty money drawer to one with a legitimate profit, and it will soon be proven that the customer is just as ready to pay $4.25, $5.30 or $6.40, as he is any other price, so long as it is fair and just.

Damp Proof and Soft Toe Shoes.

A new idea in women's footwear is to have the whole shoe damp proof. This is done by the cravennetting process, and the boot or shoe is then as good as impervious to bad weather, and for ordinary rainy weather rubbers may be dispensed with. The process can be applied to patent leather shoes and fabric quartered boots.

Still another arrival is the soft toe shoe. These shoes are made without any box or tips in the toes. The toes of such shoes are as soft as those of slippers. They are made over walking lasts, have low heels and are intended for street.

Shoe Sales Not Checked. Higher Prices Still in the Air.

New York, New England and Pennsylvania manufacturers of footwear, as well as those of the South and West, are working on a very satisfactory volume of orders for next spring delivery. Road men will be out until December, and besides future business booked, are also sending in numerous duplicate contracts for seasonable merchandise, on which immediate shipment is requested, indicating more confidence on the part of retailers than for a long time. The styles for fall and winter are about established in staple lines, representing, as they do, new patterns and lines which show a decided improvement in appearance, especially in men's shoes—neater, trimmer, with less elaborate "scallops."

The short vamp and medium high toe has never ceased to be the best seller in the West, particularly in the smaller towns of the central section. Merchants carrying shoe stocks in these communities say it is impossible for them to interest their customers in the long vamp and recede toe shoes, which are so popular in the Eastern trade. Prices tend strongly upward, in keeping with the statement issued recently

Trouble in the Rennet Bottle

Unless a man knows how to make Rennet, every bottle he turns out stores up a world of trouble for the retail grocer.

Nothing is more delicate than Rennet, nothing harder to make or to keep.

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet, to begin with, is as clean as we would want Rennet to be. It is so clean that we guarantee it against spoilage. And it is probably the quickest Rennet made—it will coagulate milk in five minutes.

Surely a grocer should be willing to handle such a superfine article on a small profit—but Shinn's Rennet pays 100%.

The Wholesome Baking Powder

Not only is Rumford Baking Powder the most profitable for you to sell, but it is also the most satisfactory to your customers, which means you can sell it faster than any other. Your customers will appreciate its Purity, Wholesomeness and Great Leavening Power. A strong selling point to which you should call attention is, that Rumford does not leave any bitter or "baking powder" taste in the food. Every can of Rumford you sell will sell other cans for you.

by the manufacturers, which says: "The cost of shoes to the manufacturer, to the wholesaler and to the retailer must be increased, and the scarcity of leather and increased cost of findings will ultimately make itself felt to the consumer."

Dealers are cautioned against carrying unnecessarily heavy stocks, as this would be a detriment to the market. Still, with all this bullish talk, retail prices for shoes are about normal in the staple lines, a better price possibly being tagged to the new patterns and the novelties. In women's wear there is no anxiety to mark up prices a great deal, excepting in the higher grades, as this would have a marked tendency to check buying, a fact of which the merchant is too well aware.

Hardware Tools Specialties

A Progressive Hardware Wholesaler Tells of Increased Business and Bright Future.

Returning from his annual trip to the Pacific coast and the intermediate territory, and also going across the line into the principal Canadian cities, calling upon the jobbers and wholesalers alone, J. S. Bonbright, vice-president of the Supplee-Biddle Hardware Co., came in contact with business conditions at many points and with the most prominent men in the trade. In speaking of his "swing around the circle," which covered a number of months, Mr. Bonbright said to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" the other day: "I am convinced the outlook for an excellent business for the next and succeeding seasons is particularly bright. I based this impression, of course, on the increased sales in the special product in my jurisdiction, fully 50 per cent. and over that of last year. I did not get into the South, but from what I have ascertained since coming home, the situation is improving. We have received no cancellations of orders, and, like houses in other lines, in the matter of settlements, we are inclined not only to be lenient, but helpful as far as lies in our power. The South has been deprived by the European war of a market for their chief staple—cotton—and the movement to aid in bridging over the commercial default is general and sincere and hearty. That is the way we feel about it, and our company has always sold a lot of hardware to Southern merchants, dating from before the Civil War to the present time.

"In the West, where the crops of all kinds are abundant, the purchasing power of the merchant and farmers—in fact, of the entire community—has been increased in a marked degree. Prosperity is in evidence on every side, and with the movement of the surplus crops to the seaboard and abroad to meet the demand of the warring nations in need of foodstuffs, will mean eventually greatly augmented business in every line. It must be admitted that at first a period of depression set in, due entirely to the peculiar conditions incident to the European conflict; but this is now passing away, and from now on American made goods will command the attention of the world and lead to an era of unprecedented prosperity. We shall have some new lines ready for next season in my department. The 'Rainmaker' has proven a great success, both here and in England."

"Made in America" Hardware Exhibition This Week.

An exhibition, the first of its kind, of hardware, house furnishing goods and kindred lines, restricted to local wholesalers, jobbers and manufacturers, will be held this week, from to-day (Monday) until Saturday next, on the first, or exhibit hall, of the Parkway Building, Broad and Cherry streets, under the auspices of the Philadelphia Hardware Association. This organization has a membership of over 500, two-thirds of which are dealers and the remainder workers in the trade. The association emphasizes the fact that it is not a buying syndicate in any sense.

The Exhibit Committee includes the following well-known people: F. C. Goodwin (chairman); T. C. Wimer, of Dunn & Eldridge (secretary); Harry Wilkinson (treasurer); James Lamont, J. G. Esmond, T. B. Hendrickson, H. O. Stansbury, Robert Sheppard, Aaron I. Sanson, Jr., L. C. Glading, Grant Wyllie, Chas. W. Donahue, H. B. Caldwell, Harry E. Good, Geo. H. Hamblin, W. Sommer. The committee has been working indefatigably during the summer to make the exhibition a success and their efforts have been amply rewarded by a generous support on the part of the distributing and manufacturing trades, the space at their disposal being wholly engaged.

The list of exhibitors follow: Lamson & Goodnow Mfg. Co., Edw. C. Pole, T. B. & H. S. Hendrickson, Dunn & Eldridge Co., Wm. Sommer Co., Supplee-Biddle Hardware Co., Germantown Tool Works, Simmons Hardware Co., Seltzer-Klahr Hardware Co., E. K. Tryon Co., Henry Disston & Sons, Inc.; John Lucas & Co., Inc.; Artman, Treichler Co., Germantown Paint and Varnish Co., C. M. Ghriskey's Sons, The Frank A. Rolling Co., Inc.; Hoods Bros., W. A. Sachs, McCaffery File Works, Meriden Cutlery Co., Henry F. Michell Co., Rocke Cement Co., Lancaster Lock Co., DeWitt Wire Cloth Co., Welsbach Co., U. S. Slicing Machine Co., Wizard Products Co., O-So-Easy Co., Geo. C. M. Fuller & Co., Scott Paper Co., E. C. Atkins & Co., Inc.; Hawks-Jackson Co.

In connection with the exhibition, the association will furnish each exhibitor blank cards enabling the consumer or visiting public to purchase any article that is shown at the retail price, and the order will be turned over to the dealer nearest to the buyer. In this way the retailers, jobbers and manufacturers will be mutually benefited and new trade developed. It is also proposed that the new slogan, "Made in America," in connection with domestic merchandise, will be kept to the front and enthusiastically boosted and proclaimed throughout the exhibition. Geo. D. Porter, Director of Public Safety, representing the Mayor of Philadelphia, will open the exhibition.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Who Knows the Norene Cigar Co.?

Carlisle, Pa., October 1, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you give me any information relative to the reliability of the Norene Cigar Co., located at 501 Fifth avenue, New York; whether it is still there and doing business and if it is a firm a man would want to do business with.

Yours truly,
W. J. NOAKER.

We can learn nothing about the Norene Cigar Co., though we went into all the usual and some of the unusual channels to get information. The concern is not listed in the mercantile agency rating books. Under the circumstances, we advise going very slow.

The Importance of Louisiana White Sugar.

New Orleans, La., October 5, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Nearly half of the 1914 Louisiana sugar crop will be made into high-grade sugars for direct consumption, and the proportion of high-grade sugars in the 1915 crop will be very much more than one-half.

With part of the European sugar crop destroyed and the saved remainder unable to move for export, the question of where to get sugars in 1915 becomes a mighty troublesome problem. Because of this unique sugar situation, Louisiana white sugars are likely to become extremely attractive.

Yours truly,
FRANCIS WILLIAMS.

Store Wanted.

Limerick, Pa., October 5, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I would like to have you inform me of several country grocery stores which might be for sale or rent.

What I am looking for is a store located in a small country town where there is no competition.

Please inform me at once if you have a store of such description in mind, as I am desirous of opening up a business of such nature. I have had twelve years' experience in the general store business and would be capable of taking charge of a place.

Yours truly,

Helping the Early Christmas Shopping Idea.

Pennsylvania General Merchant's Cleveland
Talk to Customers on This Subject as Early as September 30th Last Worthy of Adaptation by Other Merchants.

We reproduce below a little talk by a general merchant to his customers about doing Christmas shopping early, which is good enough to be reproduced by retailers everywhere. To be sure spreading the Christmas shopping over a period several months before Christmas night subtracts some of the holiday romance from it, but it would enormously relieve the merchant. The movement is growing, especially in the large cities, and the smaller retailers should do all they can to help it along.

The following appeared in the store paper of Boyd Wees' general store at Elkins, W. Va., issued of September 30, 1914:—

BUYING CHRISTMAS GOODS IS OUR NEXT BIG JOB

Good morning! Have you bought your Christmas presents yet?

No? Well, we don't blame you. This is very early in the game to be buying Christmas presents—that is, early for you. The fact is, however, so far as we are concerned, Christmas buying is assuming the proportions of a very important matter. What November and December are to you in the way of Christmas buying, August and September are to us. You always find it to your advantage to do your Christmas buying early and we trust you will remember it this year and do the same. You find that the Christmas assortments are more complete, that you can do your shopping with a smaller expenditure of time and energy than is the case if you wait until late. It always is better to buy Christmas goods this way than to wait until the last moment and rush and scramble and push among the crowd of last minute shoppers and take anything and everything just so you get something.

Exactly the same thing applies to us and to our Christmas buying. We have found by experience that when we go to market in August or September we can buy our Christmas stock more leisurely, can be more sure of getting what we want and take enough time to examine the goods carefully and find out exactly what we do want and what is best to sell in this town.

For this reason we say that Christmas shopping is very much the order of the day around this store right now. You soon will be seeing the tangible evidence of this fact as we expect to have our Christmas line on display very early this year.

We can safely promise the readers of this Store Paper that they will be reminded many times within the next few weeks that Christmas is coming. We are, as it were, going to act as your buying representatives at the source of supply. We have studied your needs, and believe you are going to be pleased when you come to our store to buy gifts.

Milk—A profitable staple of larger sales volume than sugar

Do you realize that the average family spends more for milk than for sugar. Everyone of your customers spends $3.00 per month for milk—some spend much more—this trade goes to the milk peddler and he makes money on it, too. You have to tie up money in a sugar stock to supply your customers and you often lose money doing it.

This milk business, and the profit that goes with it, should belong to you.

CARNATION MILK

will help you switch your customers from raw milk to evaporated—for cooking and baking. Our advertising is interesting and educating housewives in the use of evaporated milk. It is sending to the grocer's cash drawer some of the money usually paid to the milk peddler.

When a woman comes to you for evaporated milk make sure that she will be pleased and she will return and continue to buy evaporated milk from you—Give her CARNATION MILK—she will like it—is clean, sweet and pure—always ready for use. Carnation Milk will prove that evaporated milk is superior to raw milk for cooking. And that will be an important step in starting the usual $3.00 per month milk money into your cash drawer. So push Carnation Milk. Your jobber carries it.

Piggy Preachers.

Gee, but ain't a mean preacher the meanest mean thing you ever saw?

And don't you get a straight sight of the mean side of some of 'em when you're running a retail business?

It seems as if a preacher ought to be so extra big-hearted, and generous, that when he's mean and piddling he looks meaner than a carpenter or a barber would be, doing the same things.

A customer of mine was ripping it into a certain preacher last week. Not to his face, lawsy me, no, though that's where he should have said it. Maybe it would have done some good then.

"He's the biggest pig I know of!" he said. "I hate to see him come in, he's such a pig. He eats as much stuff anyway as a whole family ought to, and he never comes in here but what his darned fingers are in everything till he goes out."

"Well, you ain't forced to stand it, are you?" I said. "Why don't you tell him to keep his blamed hands to himself?"

"I will sometime," he said, brave as a little red lion when there ain't anything to fight. "I don't like to make a fuss. My wife thinks he's the greatest thing that ever lived, anyway."

"As a free eats stuffer, maybe he is," I said, "though most of the preachers have tape worms, seems to me."

That reminds me of another case with a preacher in it that a customer told me about last summer. In that case, though, the preacher didn't get away with it.

This customer of mine has a store in Cincinnati—way out in the suburbs. There's a preacher around the corner that used to run in to buy stuff a good bit, but he was never man enough to pay the price for anything. He would always work his high-necked coat for a discount. I remember being in there one day when he worked the trick and that time he did get away with it. I sized him up right away as one of the oily ones and when he went out I said to myself, "Well, by George, I'd paddle you all right if I had you where I wanted you."

That day he had bought quite a load of stuff, and asked how much it was. The boss told him.

"Must have a discount," he said, turning around and winking at me. I hate that kind of people. "All the poor preachers get a discount. Helps the church and helps us."

Well, it takes a brave chap to stand up before a gall like that and my customer fell down. He let him have 10 per cent. off—just picked it out of the money drawer and gave it to him.

"By gravy!" I said when the preacher had gone, "I believe I'd have seen him dead before I handed him that 10 per cent.!"

"Some day I'll hand him something," said the boss, "but to-day I wasn't strong enough. He'll get it."

He did, too. My customer told me about it a couple of months after that. It seemed the preacher came in one day with his mouth full of oil and struck for the discount. The boss had been up the night before with the hives or something, and he was real hungry for human flesh. When the preacher blew his horn for a little discount the bell rung and all came out. The boss told me about it.

"Mr. So and so," he said, "I've given you a discount on a good deal of the stuff you've bought here, but I'm not going to do any more. Why should I? Your salary is $2,000 a year and your house. I only netted $1,800 out of this business last year—you're better able to pay what other people pay than I am to allow you a discount."

"Very well, if that's the way you feel about it, brother," said the preacher, "I can go elsewhere now other stores that are glad to allow it to me."

"All right, you'll have to go there then," said the boss, real sharp this time. He had held himself down at first. He knew a real good place where he would have liked to see the preacher go, but he didn't tell him.

"I suppose it's too much to expect a man who never goes to church and gives nothing to the church, to favor its clergymen even in this small way," said the preacher.

Then's when the hives got in the work.

"I don't call that giving to the church," the boss said, "giving you something off on the stuff you put in your own stomach. I appreciate your trade, and am always glad to sell you goods, but you will have to be at the prices other people pay after this."

The preacher's smile came off and he imitated a clam till he went out. Always before that he could talk to the pickles in the jar if he couldn't get anybody else to talk to. Served him right, served him good and right. I know some preachers that are all the good. They can have anything I've got. But I know a lot of others that are regular all-day drinkers—they expect every man who sells 'em goods to give 'em the best of everything and charge no less than anybody else. Just because they work for a church! George, sometimes I think they ought to pay more than other people.

Another customer of mine said a funny thing to me the other day at this very point.

"I sell all sorts of people," he said, "and of all the customers we've got, the best fellows to sell to are a couple of saloonkeepers. They're more free-handed and they never question your price." "Good Lord!" I said, "if they're the best who's the worst?"

"A Baptist preacher," he said, "he's the meanest white man on earth, I think."

Shows I ain't alone in feeling that way about it, don't it?

NOTHING has a wider sale than milk; some people like one cereal, some prefer another, but all buy milk. Even the woman who bakes her own bread and cakes must buy milk. All your customers are buying milk every day. Make up your mind that you are going to sell it to them and secure the profit on this great volume of sales; you can do it if you'll push the sale of Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk, because they are used in as many ways as raw milk and their natural flavor and rich creaminess will please your customers. Borden's Brands, both sweetened and unsweetened, are made by the most modern processes, and guaranteed absolutely pure. When you get your customers using Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk, they will also buy Borden's St. Charles and Silver Cow brands of Evaporated. Send us the names of your best customers and we will mail each a Recipe Book, showing dozens of delicious dishes that can be made with Borden's Milks. This is sure to bring you increased sales.

CCLXXX.—Holding Customers to Their Orders.

Of course an ordinary business man can't think of everything when he makes a contract, but one of the things he should think of—because it may vitally affect the enforcement of the contract either for or against him—is whether a custom of the trade exists as to the matter about which he is contracting. If there is, the law may make it a part of the contract whether it is specifically mentioned in it or not.

Another thing he should think of is whether a previous method of dealing with the other party to that contract has put it out of his power to enforce it. I will explain what I mean in both cases.

Read this letter:—

Cleveland, Ohio, October 1, 1914.
Elton J. Buckley, Esq.

Dear Sir:—We are jobbers in the lines named on the above letterhead, and read with interest your recent article on cancelling orders. We have a great deal of trouble with our customers cancelling orders. They give them to our salesmen, who send them in to us, but often before the salesman's mail reaches us we receive a cancellation notice from the customer, ordering us not to ship the goods. About two months ago we had a particularly flagrant case of this, and we resolved to make an example of the customer. We refused to accept his cancellation and shipped the goods. He turned them down, and they are now in the keeping of the railroad company. We at once entered suit, and now our attorney writes us that the customer has filed some sort of legal paper claiming that it was a regular custom of the trade for retail dealers to cancel orders after giving them, and that both parties knew that when the order was given, and therefore the law is that it was given subject to that custom of the trade, and our customer had a right to cancel the order whether the contract said so or not. We have never heard of any such law and would like to ask you if there is anything in his position? Please omit names.

Respectfully,
J. & R.

A custom of the trade may become a very important part of a contract, though neither party mentions it when the contract is made, and the contract itself is silent. I will explain in a moment why I don't think there is anything in the defense this retailer is making. For the present let me say a word or two about customs of the trade in general, in connection with business contracts. Here are a few of the principal ways in which a custom of the trade, even when not mentioned, may figure in enforcing a contract:—

1.—In determining how much authority an agent would have under a contract, the custom of the particular trade as to the extent of an agent's powers would be consulted.

2.—In fixing a railroad's responsibility for careless storing and carrying of goods, the customary way of doing such things would be the standard.

3.—Custom of the trade, in construing certain words in a contract, is always used as evidence of what those words should mean. A few cases where this rule has been invoked are in construing the following words in a contract: "Across country," "bag of oats," "cargo," "carload," "cash basis," "immediate delivery," "merchantable," "order," "pound," "spoiled lumber." The point always is that the words should be construed the way the trade have become accustomed to construe them when the contract itself contains no explanation.

4.—The custom of the trade is often used to supply matter as to which the contract is silent. Such as to fix the proper method of weighing or measuring, or the place where a thing is to be done, or the time, all of which may have been omitted. If there is a custom to do such things in a certain way, or at a certain place, or time, then that custom will be read into the contract.

5.—Sometimes a custom of the trade actually adds provisions to the contract which were not in it originally. In some cases, for instance, sales contracts have been interpreted to mean that the sales were to be made by sample. The agreement said nothing about that, but it was a custom of the trade to sell such goods by sample.

So in many other cases a custom of the trade is invoked to round out or make clear a contract, and for that reason it often becomes a part of it. But a custom of the trade can never contradict a contract, however, and that is why I don't think there is anything in the defense offered by this correspondent's customer. All the cases agree that where a contract is clear, unequivocal and complete, a party to it cannot be heard to say that there is a custom of the trade which made it no contract at all.

That is precisely the position which the defendant in the correspondent's case is taking. "It is true that I gave a definite, positive order for goods, but there is a custom of the trade that allows me to set it aside at will." In other words, to make it no contract.

Not a case on record will sustain such an argument as that. It may perhaps be sustained, however, under another principle of law, i. e., that is of estoppel or waiver. I will explain that for the purpose of giving general information, and the correspondent can apply it to his own case.

A jobber may have so dealt with his customer as to justify the latter in cancelling his orders. For instance, if a jobber has accepted cancellation after cancellation, allowing the customer time and again to revoke his orders at will, then he has established what the law calls a "course of dealing," which will enable the customer to put up the defense which has been put up in this Ohio case only in a different way. If a jobber after going along in this loose way for a time suddenly and without warning tried to enforce an order, he would probably fail for the court would say "you led your customer to believe, by an established course of dealing, that you would allow him to cancel if he wished to." Thus a seller can put himself, by loose dealing, in a position where he actually cannot enforce a contract or order against the customer's will. It is not at all, however, on account of any custom of the trade but purely because of previous dealings between those particular parties.

The only way of escape for the jobber in such a case is for him to first notify the customer whose cancellations he has been accepting that henceforth he will decline to accept orders subject to cancellation. After that he can hold customers to their orders and there will be no defense.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Pottstown association has added 44 new members to membership roll since the Philadelphia convention.

The Johnstown association held a big meeting on October 1st at Sanner's restaurant, where luncheon was served. Covers were laid for 125 and every seat was filled. This is a new organization but a very active one and numbers many members. The association is active on credit ratings and collections, but conserves the interests of the merchants at every point. Since its organization it has been successful in arrang-with the wholesale meat dealers not to sell any goods at retail and is now arranging to stop retailing by wholesale grocers and produce dealers. District Attorney Greer, Organizer Smedley and Professor Bender delivered addresses. C. L. Ferguson and Secretary McGarry also spoke. Secretary McGarry reported on file the credit ratings of 13,831 customers. An average of 17 credit formations are given daily and they have on file 314 claims for collection. The meeting passed strong resolutions for the repeal of the mercantile tax law and for the passage of the garnishee law. The Pennsylvania Plan was strongly endorsed.

During the past week Mr. Smedley spoke at Pottstown, Frankford and Pittston.

Mr. Smedley has been invited to address the merchants of Lancaster early in November.

Prominent merchants of York are interested in the organization of a merchants' association to take care of mercantile matters exclusively. The old association was merged into the Chamber of Commerce some time ago. This body takes care of civic matters only. Mr. Smedley has promised to assist when called upon.

Next week Mr. Smedley will speak at Easton October 12th, Pen Argyl October 13th, Allentown October 14th, Coatesville October 15th.

W. A. Kessler, a prominent member of the association at Homestead, has been appointed Postmaster. He is busy receiving the congratulations of his many friends.

The Chambersburg association has been inactive for some time, but at a recent meeting it was decided to go ahead at full steam, and the organizer has been requested to help.

I. G. Baird has been elected secretary of the Waynesboro association. An effort is being made to make the association a real vital force in the community.

Merchants of Smithfield, Pa., are talking organization.

Don't Waste Time Putting Sugar in Bags

It's a foolish waste of time for a grocer to buy sugar in a barrel, open the barrel, scoop out the sugar, weigh it (giving a little overweight every now and then), fold the bags, tie the bags, pay for the bags and the twine, when he can buy a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, slit it open in five seconds with a pocketknife, lift out the CARTONS and sell them! That's the beauty of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR—there's nothing to do but SELL it; no work, no bother, no loss of time, no loss from overweight, no expense for bags or twine.

Franklin Carton Sugar Will Please Your Customers

Women appreciate the clean, white purity of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR AS SOON AS THEY SEE IT! They KNOW it's better sugar than they can buy any other way. They like the CARTON because it doesn't burst, fall over, spill or tear. They like it because they WANT CLEAN sugar. Once you start your customers buying FRANKLIN SUGAR in CARTONS, they'll always want to buy it and you'll want to sell it to them. FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is the right proposition for both the grocer and his customers.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Try FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR this time. It's cleaner and better than the sugar we have to buy in a barrel, and the sanitary CARTON keeps it clean and dry, and won't burst or tear like a bag."

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Seattle, Wash.

The Seattle (Wash.) Retail Grocers' Association is asking its members to sign the following remarkable pledge:—

We, the undersigned, retail grocers in the city of Seattle, King County, Wash., do hereby severally agree, each with the other, that we will not become members of, or subscribers to, any firm, corporation or individual using, selling or distributing certificates providing for the giving of rebates, commissions or discounts of any kind.

Greek Currant and Fig Crop Prospect.

Until August 22d indications were that the Greek currant crop for this year, ending September 1st, would be about 10 per cent. larger than that of last year and of a fair quality. Owing to the European war, many sailings from Greece have been canceled and most of the principal foreign markets have been closed, so there is no demand for currants, which has caused a panic among producers. The Greek Government has already taken some measures to encourage and protect the producers, as well as the exporters of currants. The most important are the following:—

(1). The Government will issue war insurance policies (not including usual marine insurance) by an extra retention of 15 per cent. to cover the risk. Thus the existing retention of 35 per cent. will be increased to 50 per cent. The profits that may be realized by the Government at the end of the crisis from this extra retention of 15 per cent. will be returned to the producers or used for their benefit in some indirect way.

(2) The producer can draw 45 drachmas from the National Bank of Greece on account of the value of every 1,000 Venetian pounds that he would deposit with the Privileged Society in order to use said sum of 45 drachmas for his immediate needs.

(3) The National Bank of Greece will cash the bills of lading by paying 80 per cent. on their face value, the balance of 20 per cent. to be paid later.

The exporters, though, are not very optimistic as to the results of the protective measures of the Government, chiefly because they cannot draw the entire value of the bill of lading. The result is that neither demands nor offers for currants have yet been noticeable in the Kalamata market. Conditions for figs are worse than those for currants, as the principal fig importing markets of Austria and Russia are closed on account of the war. At present no other market is open for figs except that of the United States.

Plainfield, N. J., Sept. 15, 1914.
Editor Science of Advertising.

Dear Sir:—As per your request I beg to enclose you herewith two circulars that I have used recently, one for Bound Brook and the other for Plainfield that I had on Dollar Day, which was a great success.

With best wishes, I remain,
Yours truly,
SOLOMON MANN.

I am reproducing the circular which this correspondent refers to—the Dollar Day Special circular. It was 10 x 11, which was nearly square—an unusual shape, but a very good one. You can arrange a circular of that shape very well, and it makes a good appearance. Here is the reproduction, much reduced:—

now appears at the very bottom of the sheet, beginning "Please note." That in my judgment properly belongs in an introduction. The name and address should have gone at the bottom. If there was any special reason for getting the name in the top, I should have worked it in the head, something like this: "Sol. Mann's Big Dollar Day Specials." The heading to a circular like this ought to have consisted of a big black sentence that would have struck the reader between the eyes and conveyed its meaning at a single glance. You can easily see by looking at this head that you have to practically read it through before you get it. "Eight Big Specials for Dollar Day" could have been read by anybody in a flash.

all the articles quoted. In No. 8, for instance, she might want the tea and the lard and the jars, but have no use for the condensed milk, and so on. My experience is that this is an objectionable combination advertising which largely destroys its effectiveness—unless you can make the combinations elastic and allow the buyer to make her own combinations from among the different groups. Usually this can be done, and I have found that it always pays to do it if in any way possible.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

New Cure Proposed for Troubles Over Sale of Cold Storage Food

Uniform Cold Storage Food Law, to Be Adopted by All the States, Will Be Adopted by Convention of Uniform State Law Commissioners and Then Introduced Into the Different States.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

October 15, 1914.

In order to remedy the widespread dissatisfaction which is expressed everywhere because of the wide differences between the laws of the various States regarding cold storage food products, a uniform cold storage bill will be offered to the convention of the National Commissioners of Uniform State Laws, which is now in session here. It is believed that in some form the bill will be adopted by the convention, whereupon the members thereof will endeavor to have it introduced into the different State Legislatures and passed. If they can accomplish that, they will solve most of the problems which have risen out of the cold storing of food and its sale.

The bill is considered of sufficient importance to reproduce in full:—

Section 1. For the purposes of this act, "cold storage" shall mean the storage of articles of food at or below a temperature of 45 degrees Fahrenheit in a cold storage warehouse: "Cold Storage Warehouse" shall mean a place artificially cooled to be below a temperature above zero or 45 degrees Fahrenheit, in which articles of food intended for sale are placed and held: "article of food" shall mean fresh meat and fresh meat products, fresh food fish, game, poultry, eggs and butter.

Sec. 2. No person, firm or corporation shall maintain or operate a cold storage warehouse without a license so to do issued by the State Food Commissioner. Any person, firm or corporation desiring such a license shall make written application to the State Food Commissioner for that purpose, stating the location of the warehouse. The State Food Commissioner thereupon shall cause an examination to be made of the sanitary and other conditions of said warehouse, and, if found by him to be in a proper sanitary condition and otherwise properly equipped for its intended use, he shall issue a license authorizing the applicant to operate the same as a cold storage warehouse during one year. The license shall be issued upon payment by the applicant of a license fee of _____ to the treasurer of the State.

Sec. 3. In case any cold storage warehouse, or any part thereof, shall at any time be deemed by the State

Food Commissioner to be in an unsanitary condition, he shall notify the licensee of such condition, and upon the failure of the licensee to put such cold storage warehouse in a sanitary condition within a time to be designated by the State Food Commissioner, he shall revoke such license.

Sec. 4. Every such licensee shall keep accurate records of the articles of food received in and of the articles of food withdrawn from his cold storage warehouse, and the State Food Commissioner shall have free access to such records at any time. Every such licensee shall submit a monthly report to the State Food Commissioner, setting forth in itemized particulars the quantities and kinds of articles of food remaining in his cold storage warehouse. Such monthly reports shall be filed on or before the 5th of each month, and the reports so rendered shall show the conditions existing on the last day of the preceding month reported and a summary of such reports shall be prepared by the State Food Commissioner and shall be open to public inspection on or before the tenth day of each month.

Sec. 5. The State Food Commissioner shall inspect and supervise all cold storage warehouses and make such inspection of articles of food therein as he may deem necessary to secure the proper enforcement of this act, and he shall have access to all cold storage warehouses at all reasonable times. The State Food Commissioner may appoint such persons as he deems qualified to make any inspection under this act.

Sec. 6. No article of food intended for human consumption shall be placed, received or knowingly kept in any cold storage if diseased, tainted, otherwise unfit for human consumption, or in such condition that it will not keep in a wholesome condition for human consumption. No article of food, if intended for sale for use other than for human consumption, shall be placed, received or kept in any cold storage warehouse unless previously marked, in accordance with forms to be prescribed by the State Food Commissioner, in such a way as to indicate plainly the fact that such article of food is not to be sold or used for human food.

Sec. 7. No person, firm or corporation shall place or store in any cold storage warehouse in this State articles of food unless the same shall be plainly marked, stamped or tagged, either upon the container in which they are packed, or upon the article of food itself, with the date when placed therein; and no person, firm or corporation shall remove such article of food from any cold storage warehouse unless the same shall be plainly marked, stamped or tagged, either on the container in which it is enclosed or upon the article of food itself, with the date of such removal. All articles of food in any cold storage warehouse at the time this act goes into effect shall, before being removed therefrom, be plainly marked, stamped or tagged with the date when this act goes into effect and the date of removal therefrom.

Sec. 8. No person, firm or corporation shall hereafter keep or permit to remain in any cold storage warehouse any article of food which has been held in cold storage, either within or without the State, for a longer aggregate period than twelve months, except with the consent of the State Food Commissioner, as hereafter provided. The State Food Commissioner shall, upon application during the twelve month, extend the period of storage beyond twelve months for any particular article of food, provided the same is found upon examination to be in proper condition for further cold storage. The length of time for which such further storage is allowed shall be specified in the order granting the permission. A report on each case in which such extension of storage may be permitted, including information relating to the reason for the action of the State Food Commissioner, the kinds and amounts of the articles of food for which the storage period was extended, and the length of time for which this continuance was granted, shall be filed, open to public inspection in the office of the State Food Commissioner, and shall be included in his annual report. Such extension shall be not more than 60 days; a second extension of not more than 60 days may be granted upon a re-examination, but the entire extended period shall not be more than 120 days in all.

Sec. 9. It shall be unlawful to sell, or to offer for sale, any article of food which has been held in cold storage either within or without the State for a period of 30 days or over, without notifying persons purchasing or intending to purchase the same, that it has been so held by the display of a placard plainly and conspicuously marked "Cold Storage Goods" on the bulk mass or articles of food; and it shall be unlawful to represent or advertise as fresh any article of food which has been held in cold storage for a period of 30 days or over.

Sec. 10. It shall be unlawful to return to any cold storage warehouse any article of food which has been once released from storage and placed on the market for sale to consumers. It shall be unlawful to transfer any article of food from one cold storage warehouse to another if such transfer is made for the purpose of avoiding any provision of this act, and such transfer shall be unlawful unless all prior stampings, markings and taggings upon such article shall remain thereon.

Sec. 11. The State Food Commissioner may make all necessary rules and regulations to carry into effect this act. Such rules and regulations shall be filed in the Commissioner's office and shall be published in such newspapers as publish the laws of the State, and shall not take effect until 30 days after such filing and publication.

Sec. 12. Any person, firm or corporation violating any provision of this act shall upon conviction be punished for the first offense by a fine not exceeding $_____, and for the second or any subsequent offense by a fine not exceeding $_____, or by imprisonment of not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 13. All acts or parts of acts conflicting with this act are hereby repealed.

Scheme to Tax Mail Order Houses One Per Cent. on Their Business.

Latest Plan to Cripple the Big Concerns is Introduced in Congress. To Be Distributed Among the States.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

October 16, 1914.

A bill has been introduced in the House by one of the Southern members which I am told is expected to destroy the nefarious mail-order scheme root and branch. It taxes all concerns who are doing an interstate mail-order business 1 per cent. upon their total cash business. The text of the important sections of the bill is as follows:—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all persons, firms or corporations in the United States which are now conducting or which may hereafter conduct, a mail order business interstate for the purpose of selling goods, wares and merchandise direct to the consumer shall pay a tax of 1 per centum upon the total cash value of all goods, ware and merchandise sold within any State.

Sec. 2. That every person, firm or corporation conducting a mail order business as defined in Section 1 of this act shall keep in proper books, to be provided by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, an accurate and complete account of all goods, wares and merchandise of every character and description so sold, together with the actual selling price of the same.

Sec. 3. That on the 31st day of December, after the passage of this act, and on the 31st day of December of each year thereafter, every person, firm or corporation engaged in such business shall render a full and complete statement to the Secretary of the Treasury, upon blanks to be furnished by him, of the total cash value of all goods, wares and merchandise sold during the year in the various States of the United States.

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine the amount of the tax to be paid by each person, firm or corporation (at the rate of 1 per centum upon the total cash value of all goods, wares and merchandise sold within any State) engaged in such mail order business, and shall give notice of the amount of said tax due and payable, pursuant to the terms of this act in such manner as in his judgment is most practicable.

Another section provides that the tax so collected shall be distributed among the different States, in proportion to the amount of business done in each.

Nobody seems to be paying much attention to the bill.

Give Your Jobber a Square Deal and Other People Will Give You One

Little talks between wholesalers and retailers on the ethics of fair business—what is square and what is tricky?—Doing unto the jobber as you would have him and other people do unto you.

No. 5

A good thing for every retail grocer to say to himself, when he buys goods, is this: "I have got to resell these goods to get my money back. I can't send them back—nobody can be fairly asked to take them off my hands. Let me be very sure then that I am buying only what I can reasonably expect to take care of."

Sometimes a specialty salesman sells a retailer—to be shipped through a jobber—goods which don't move as quickly as they expected. Retailers occasionally argue that the jobber through whom they were shipped should take them back. This doesn't seem quite fair—the manufacturer won't take them back from the jobber, and since the jobber only ordered to take care of the retailer's order, it doesn't seem quite fair to penalize him for the retailer's mistake.

Think this over, and remember the golden rule.

The Dealer's Right to Advance With the Market, and Something About Business Righteousness

California Contributor Thinks That If a Retailer Is in Business to Efficiently Serve His Customers He Should Not Unduly Advance Prices to Them.

Under normal conditions competition regulates prices. And when competition fails to regulate prices then the government should regulate them as it does in the case of railroad and express companies. But under recent abnormal conditions the grocer was confronted with the question of not how much can I get, but how much shall I take? If the editor had been the highest authority in the world on business ethics he would have settled the question by his absolute decision, "take no more than you would under normal market conditions." Philosophers have argued over such questions as this for two thousand years and they still remain unsettled.

Is it right to profit by secret information of market conditions? Is it right to lie to save life? Is it right to practice coyness in courtship (that is for a woman to pretend she does not love when she does)? Is it right to give your customer an education on prices and merchandise that may lead him to buy from your competitor?

These questions have been ably defended on both sides by theologues and philosophers. And if the editor can render any absolute decisions or throw any new light upon them I think he will stand a good chance of being called to a chair of business ethics in one of our universities.

After reading about half a dozen authorities on ethics I can only offer one or two illustrations. If I am freezing I would be justified in lighting a fire with dollar bills if I had nothing else. This may happen once in a life time. If the flour market was like the egg market in March and I had no other way to recoup myself from a possible decline, then self-protection would compel me to advance the price. If a grocer is in business for speculation, when he ought to be on the board of trade, then he is justified in advancing his prices on every opportunity. But if he is in business to efficiently serve his customers with the necessities of life and to see that he gets a reasonable and living compensation for doing so, then he should not advance prices to an abnormal profit simply because he can do so.

Justice would allow us to take all the customer will pay and to leave much to the knowledge of the customer. But we should get beyond strict justice and aspire to liberality and sublimity in business conduct. Liberality and sublimity of conduct would require us to take no more from the customer than we would be willing to pay provided we were the customer and to give the customer that business education that will enable him to purchase to advantage, though he may go to a competitor to do so. No would the liberal and sublime idea allow us to discharge a clerk unless if we were in his place we would be willing to resign.

As the customer becomes better educated in regard to business expenses we will let him know our profits, as is now often done in country stores. I would not advertise a business under the name of the golden rule or promise the public to conduct it as the Master would do. It savors of an ostentation contrary to the spirit of real religion. Once we get the Christian spirit into our hearts we will, according to the beatitude, be successful mourners of our deficiencies and delinquencies of character and conduct that many times we will feel like asking to have our names stricken from the church register rather than advertising our piety to the public.

51—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because selling them is an endless chain that brings profit climbing into your store hand over hand.

¶ All good products get mouth-to-mouth advertising, but nationally advertised products get the most of all. A woman will see something advertised in her favorite magazine. Thousands of times, even before she has tried it, she will mention it to her friends when the subject comes up, "I saw so-and-so advertised in McClure's Magazine this month. It looks real good; I'm going to try it."

¶ Two sales instead of one may come from that, and so it goes, not counting at all the mouth-to-mouth advertising that always follows an actual sale of a nationally advertised product, to a woman who finds it suits her better than anything else.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

Mayor's Food Committee Tells Public How to Buy Vegetables. Business Men Discuss Using War as a Means to Increase Our Business. Canned Lobster in Record Condition. Apple Day Next Tuesday. Municipal Markets Appear Successful.

New York, Oct. 16, 1914.

The latest suggestion of the Mayor's Food Supply Committee to the general public tells them how to buy vegetables. The substance of the circular is as follows:—

In buying vegetables select them yourself and see that they are fresh. This is all-important. There are tricks in all trades, including the vegetable trade.

You will find you will get more potatoes if you will buy them by weight and not by measure.

Never buy sprouting potatoes. Serious illness has been known to follow their use.

In buying potatoes ask your dealer to cut one in half. Take the two halves and put them together; if they are juicy enough to stick together you have a good potato.

In buying cabbage, be sure you get a hard, heavy head, with crisp white leaves and with the stalk cut close to the head. Many a large head of cabbage looks heavy, but in taking it in your hand you will find it is very light. A light-weight head of cabbage should only be bought at a reduced price.

In buying beets choose those with dirty roots and fresh, green leaves. This shows they have not been soaked to freshen them.

In buying winter squash choose one that has no soft spots. Choose a medium size one; the larger ones are very seedy.

In buying cauliflower choose a firm, white head with green leaves.

In buying onions be sure they are firm and hard.

In buying celery choose a bunch with white crisp leaves. Use the outside pieces for soup and the inside pieces for the table.

At the luncheon of the members' council of the Merchants' Association of New York, held on Tuesday last, the subject of several speeches was the increase in the trade for American goods which might come from the war. It was the consensus of opinion that foreign markets are not to be won in a day, nor by sporadic activity. The first requisite for success is a thorough and complete understanding of the conditions and needs which must be met and the difficulties to be overcome. Our National banks, under the Federal reserve act, have started and must extend further the work of supplying adequate American banking facilities to finance our trade with Latin-America, and the American dollar must be made the basis of our international exchange in those markets, and New York must be made more and more the money market for South America. Reciprocal trade with Latin-American countries, by buying and exchanging their products for our American dollars and merchandise, will afford a new and permanent basis for remarkable expansion of our commerce with those peoples. Many prominent men, some of them representatives of the United States Government, were present.

According to information which reached here during the week, canned lobsters have been selling in Canada this season at the highest price ever known. The supply of the fresh article has been diminishing for years, but the demand for the product has increased. The cost of production is greater, for as it becomes more of a luxury the items included in the operation have necessarily called for all improvements in the quality and style of the accessories and packing. While there are about seven hundred factories in operation uniform improvement is hardly possible, but the average shows an improvement in this respect.

Some preparations, although not very extensive, are being made for National Apple Day, which is to be held next Tuesday, October 20th. Mr. J. H. Steinhardt, who is chairman of the Publicity Committee of the International Apple Shippers' Association and other organizations which are working with it, believes that the work he has done will result in a general push being given to apples next Tuesday. This is the second year of "National Apple Day." It was also celebrated a year ago, but did not amount to much. This year's crop of apples is the largest in the history of the country and will amount to about 70,000,000 barrels. The situation is made more critical by the interference which the war has made with the foreign demand.

There is reason for the statement that in spite of the opposition of the retail trade the four public markets which have been in operation for six weeks, under the supervision of the Municipal Government, have been successful. It is said that at three markets on a busy Saturday there are about 75,000 buyers, many of whom come to the markets in their automobiles. Some letters have been given the Borough President from the consumers, who claim that they have saved considerable money by patronizing these markets. One letter, which the Borough President gives out, came from a woman who claimed that she had cut down her living expenses over 57 per cent. and she cites a sample supper consisting of fish, potatoes, peas, apple sauce, romaine salad and grapes, which she said she bought at the market for 45 cents, which would have cost her double had she gone to the regular store.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet, but fairly steady; spot stocks small and holders fairly confident.—Coffee weak and depressed. Not much business being done.—Refined sugar off one-quarter cent. Market now 6 to 6.25 for granulated.—Canned tomatoes weak and declined. Standard goods offered as low as 65 cents f. o. b. in large lots; offerings of No. 2 at 45 cents in the same way. Other canned goods unchanged.—Currants weak; demand light. Other dried fruits unchanged, with prices easy rather than firm.—Wheat easier on account of lack of confidence in the market and in spite of heavy export business.—Flour in small demand at about unchanged prices.

adoption the following resolution condemning the hostile attitude of the National Retail Grocers' Association toward prohibition was adopted:—

Be it Resolved, by the Kansas Retailers' Association, assembled at Salina, Kan., First, that we are not in accord with the action of the National Association of Retail Grocers in adopting a resolution against the nation-wide prohibition bill now before the Congress of this country; that we, the members of the Kansas Retailers' Association heartily indorse the said bill, both from a moral and financial standpoint, as being in harmony with the laws of our State and the moral awakening of the nation.

Second, that realizing the fact that the European war has produced a crisis in our National financial affairs owing to the decrease of the tariff receipts from importations, we indorse the proposed special tax on beer, whisky and other beverages and luxuries, chewing gum, patent medicines, etc., but protest against any such tax on coffee, tea, gasoline and similar staple necessities.

St. Louis, Mo.

The St. Louis (Mo.) Retail Grocers' Association has gone on record as not in sympathy with woman's suffrage. The subject came up through a request from the Equal Suffrage League for an opportunity to appear before the members to outline the purpose of the organization so that the members might understand what woman's suffrage is.

J. D. Lukenbill favored an invitation to the league and wanted the session made an open affair so that the wives of the grocers could attend. He said further that he was interested in finding out what the claims of the women were for equal suffrage rights.

Lukenbill, however, was alone in this invitation, as all of the other members felt that an invitation would mean an endorsement of the aims of the league, particularly as one of their objects is prohibition. The question was disposed of by tabling the motion.

The Brenard Manufacturing Co's Piano Scheme.

Tunkhannock, Pa., October 10, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you give me any information in regard to the Brenard Mfg. Co., of Iowa City, Iowa, or as to the results of their scheme to increase business? Saw their advertisement in the "Merchants' Trade Journal" and have taken up the proposition with them, but have not yet decided to sign up for the plan. Any information you can give me will be appreciated.

Yours truly, MILES W. BLISS.

Several months ago the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" devoted considerable space to the Brenard Mfg. Co. and its piano scheme of "increasing" business. The scheme was turned thoroughly inside out and subscribers were advised not to patronize it.

WITH THE EDITOR

The fight in Kansas over the pure shoe law is done. The court has held the law constitutional, and we assume this ends it. No valid reason was urged against the law; no valid reason can never be urged against a law that merely aims to inform consumers fully as to what they are buying. The Kansas pure shoe law provides that when any substitute for leather is put into a shoe, that fact must be disclosed on the label. All sorts of cheap substitutes for leather are put into shoes, notably paper, fibre board and other things, most of which are used to cut down the cost of the shoe and not improve it. Shoe men say it is almost unbelievable what a good looking shoe can be produced at ridiculously small cost. Of course it is all looks—a few days' wear and the poor fake is all to pieces.

The Kansas shoe men opposed the law because they said that a shoe with leather substitutes in it, up to a certain point, was just as good as an all leather shoe. But using the answer that was given when the same argument was used in connection with food laws, it is up to the buyer of the shoe to say that. It is just possible that a consumer might prefer an all leather shoe. Certainly it is not up to the manufacturer to tell him what he would rather have. Precisely the same obligation rests upon the shoe manufacturer or any manufacturer to disclose the real character of his product, that rests upon the jelly manufacturer. Every possible argument that applies to one applies to the other.

The Kansas Retail Grocers' Association, in convention a few days ago, very sharply scored the National Retail Grocers' Association for passing its resolution condemning the pending efforts to pass a National prohibition law. It will be remembered that the National Association, to grind somebody's axe, and probably without half understanding what it was doing, passed a resolution condemning the prohibition idea, and particularly the bill now pending in Congress prohibiting the importation, manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors within the United States. It was a stupid thing to do, and particularly short-sighted. The wise man looks ahead and trims his sails accordingly. Prohibition is coming. The Kansas association condemns the National association and endorses the prohibition bill "both from a moral and financial standpoint as being in harmony with the laws of our State and the moral awakening of the nation."

It is a shame that the National Retail Grocers' Association, composed of a class of merchants who lose more from rum than any other class, should pull back on this movement. Of course its pulling back will make no difference. It will not retard the coming of the millenium one second, but it looks as if it was hopelessly out of touch with the real needs of the retail grocer.

The war and the tightening money market are causing all sorts of changes in business methods, among them a very interesting plan which some of the chain stores are using at the present time. Whether they deliberately adopted it for the purpose of enabling themselves to do business more on credit and less on capital, is not known, but that is what it comes to.

All the chain stores sell for cash only, and all discount their bills in ten days. When conditions are normal they will buy by the carload and keep stock ahead all the time.

To-day some of the chain stores are pursuing an entirely different course, and one that must produce a marked effect upon their internal conditions. They are buying enough of some things to last them three days, five days, a week. When the supply is gone, the money to pay for it—at the end of ten days—is in hands, for the goods have been sold for cash. Thus they are able to do business almost purely on credit, for the goods which they obtain on credit bring in enough money to pay for themselves, and moreover bring it in before it is needed even to discount the bill. The difference between the price of the average article in carload lots, and in lots of fifty to one hundred cases, is very slight, especially when the markets are depressed, as they are now.

Credit is really a wonderful convenience. The other day a friend of the writer, who is in the retail jewelry business, showed us some Christmas goods which had just arrived. They were sold on four months' time, so that they will have been resold and the money collected by the time they must be paid for. All on credit.

The merchant who could buy all his goods that way could do business on almost no investment whatever.

A great many business men, particularly large business men, immediately become dissatisfied with business if the large orders fall off. They feel satisfied only when they are selling their customers big lots—lots far in advance of their needs.

One such business man was loudly complaining during the week because he had not been able to sell anybody a carload of anything for a long time. Before he was through he had worried himself into a blue funk. Everybody was pulling in his horns, nobody was buying anything he didn't have to have, and things were going to the dogs generally.

When this man's partner had stood the clamor as long as he could, he led him to the firm's books, from which he demonstrated to the complainant that the last three months of this year showed eight thousand dollars more business than the same three months of 1913, and that up to the thirteenth day of the present month, business was $900 better than the whole month of October, 1913. All in small orders; there was hardly a carload lot on the books for this period. The book-keeping spread over twice as many pages as it formerly spread over, but the business was there. And most of it was done at a better price than when done in carload lots.

The writer has always contended that the small and steady buying, nobody loading up, nobody speculating, but everybody buying for immediate wants and a very little ahead, was the best kind of business both for buyer and seller. It shows practically the same results at the end of the year, with nobody overloaded and nobody stung and sore.

In another column is reported the latest attack upon the mail-order (houses—a bill introduced in Congress to tax them 1 per cent on their gross business. Every mail-order house must report to the Government the amount of business it does in the various States, and in proportion to these amounts the tax will be distributed among the States.

If the scheme is expected to cripple the mail-order houses, it will fail, for they will hardly feel it. The mail-order houses are making enormous sums of money and they can drop a little 1 per cent. from their profits without knowing it is gone.

If it is a revenue scheme, it will raise some revenue, but what of it? Of course it is a very fair thing to force the mail-order houses to pay their share of taxes in the States where they sell goods, especially if the payment of such tax by the mail-order houses would cause a corresponding reduction in the tax the people in the State would pay, but we would never expect that. The tax that the mail-order houses paid would simply go into the general maw, and nobody would get any benefit out of it.

We Have Been Quoting Wrong Prices on Arbuckle's Coffee But It Was Arbuckle Bros.' Fault.

We have been told that the prices we have been quoting on Arbuckles coffee in our regular price-list have been so inaccurate as to be ridiculous. If that is true, and it seems to be, then Aruckle Bros. are responsible for it. They and all other proprietors of package goods quoted in our price-list were long ago told and are being constantly told that we expect them to notify us of price changes just as they notify the rest of the trade. Aruckle Bros. forgot to do that, and the prices on their coffee have therefore been taking care of themselves.

They say they will be certain to do it from now on.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The Pottstown association, one of the latest additions to the State association, is determined to be one of the best in the State. They had a large delegation of their members present at the State convention and they returned home fired with an ambition to largely increase the membership. To this end a membership campaign was instituted under the direction of Chairman Bertolet. Fifteen teams consisting of two men each were appointed and each team was given a certain number of merchants to call on. The campaign lasted seven days and at the conclusion of the canvass the membership had been increased by the addition of eighty-one new names. The total membership is now one hundred and seventy-one. To celebrate this achievement and to welcome the new members a supper was given at the Merchants' Hotel on October 6th. The tables fairly groaned with good things and the attendance was such as to fill every seat. Mr. Daniel H. Bertolet acted as toastmaster and speeches were made by President J. Allen Brandt and William Smedley. Charles M. Wessels entertained with some humorous stories. The Business Men's Quartette rendered some fine selections. The affair was a most enjoyable one and the guests all pledged themselves to more aggressive association work..

The Frankford Grocers' Association held a fall rally on October 7th. The attendance numbered over 250 and filled the hall to capacity. There was a splendid programme of entertainment after which Organizer Smedley made a short address. Other speakers were J. A. Edgar, C. G. Lucas, R. L. Buzby, Vice-President Coyle and James F. Curran. The Frankford association is growing rapidly, new members being admitted at each meeting.

The town of Kingston is ready for organization. E. T. Messick, of Pittston, has the matter in charge.

Mr. Smedley will during the next two weeks visit the following associations: New Castle, October 19th; Farrell, October 20th; Sharon, October 22d; New Brighton, October 23d; Brownsville, October 26th; Verona and Oakmont, October 28th.

Organizer Smedley addressed the Pittston Merchants' Association on October 8th. The attendance was good and much interest was manifested. Pittston is one of the best organized towns in the State and its membership represents one hundred per cent. of the merchants. Through its influence credit is guarded. The county has free bridges and it has recently secured an appropriation for better roads for the county. Pittston "does things." Secretary Messick is a live wire and has the loyal support of the officers and members.

The Pottsville Merchants' Association is arranging for a big Halloween celebration. Everything Pottsville undertakes is a success.

This Man Wants to Better Himself.

—, Pa., October 15, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am a manager of a chain store and at present am not making much of a salary, and when there is two to keep I just have enough to exist on, not wages that a person could live on. As you know, a manager of a cut price store does not earn much money these days. Is there any information you could give me in regards to the grocery business in any other section of the country where I might better conditions?

Yours truly, * * *

If you are a competent man, and feel yourself qualified to fill a better position than you have, we should advertise until we got it. Decide where you want to locate and then advertise in the want columns of the papers that circulate there. You will probably find your best chances in moderate sized cities and towns.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

There is no special change in the tea market. The demand is still fair, but the market continues rather easy and to some extent in buyer's favor. Buyers are fairly stocked with tea and are not eager to buy. Therefore sellers who sell more than the everyday wants must exhibit some pressure.

Coffee.

The coffee market is unchanged for the week, but shows no improvement over a week ago. As to Rio and Santos coffees, the market is still weak and sick, although financial news from Brazil was a little better. In this country, however, nobody has confidence in the market, they don't know what it is going to do, and they are buying only the barest needs. Practically all grades of Rio and Santos are in buyer's favor. Mild coffees are also unchanged and quiet, the tendency being easy. Java is unchanged and fairly steady. Mocha shows further declines. The large way market is 6 cents per pound below the highest war price.

Sugar.

Sugar is off again. Raws show almost $\frac{1}{2}$ cent decline, and refined is off $\frac{1}{4}$ cent. The price of granulated now rules at 6 to $6\frac{1}{4}$ cents, with probability of still lower prices sooner or later. The demand has improved somewhat at the lower prices.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged during the week. Compound syrup is fairly active at unchanged prices. The better grades of sugar syrup have not followed the decline in sugar, because they are scarce, but ordinary grades are much cheaper. Molasses is also somewhat lower, demand light.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes have gone completely to pieces, and sales have been made both in Philadelphia and New York during the week at $67\frac{1}{2}$ cents, f. o. b. factory. If the packers are telling the truth, this is below the cost of production, and it comes from the fact that so many packers are pressing to sell. Demand is fair at the decline. Corn and peas are unchanged from a week ago, demand fair. Apples show no established change, but the market is easier and there are rumors of low offerings. California canned goods are unchanged and quiet. Small staple canned goods are unchanged at ruling prices.

Fish.

The mackerel situation is rather uncertain. The combination and independents are now said to be doing business together. It is said that some of the American independent concerns, who have been offering Norway mackerel much cheaper than the combination, have been bought over by the latter and are now being allowed to buy fish from the combination at a price sufficiently below the regular market to enable them to resell at a profit. This probably puts an end to at least a part of the competition in Norway mackerel, and adds to the combination's strength. The demand for mackerel is only fair; the only grade which is figuring to any extent is Norways. Cod, hake and had-dock are unchanged and quiet, prices steady to firm. Salmon unchanged from the opening, and in quiet demand. Imported sardines show no improvement as to supply, and are still scarce and high. Domestic sardines, on the contrary, are weaker, as the catch improves. The price shows no quotable change, however, from last week.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are somewhat weaker and the outlook is not particularly encouraging for holders. The consumptive demand is quiet. Peaches, apricots, raisins, currants and other dried fruits are unchanged on last week's basis.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans have shown considerable fluctuation during the week. The market in a large way got as low as $2.25, but later reacted on news of short crop in both Michigan and New York, and advanced about 15 cents per bushel. Marrows are unchanged, but with a weaker undertone. California limas are somewhat lower than a week ago; demand light. Green and Scotch peas somewhat weaker; demand light.

Butter.

The receipts of strictly fancy butter are light. The consumptive demand is good. The market is 1 cent higher than it was a week ago. Under grade butter is also 1 cent higher in sympathy with the finest goods, with an increased consumptive demand. The quality and make are about normal for the season and the market is in a healthy condition on the present basis of quotations. If there is any change in the near future, it will be for a slight advance.

Eggs.

The receipts of new-laid eggs are very light. The market is firm at from 1 to 2 cents per dozen over a week ago. There are considerable eggs arriving that are not strictly fancy and have to be sold at relatively lower prices, according to quality. Storage eggs are steady at prices ranging about 5 cents below the price of the fresh, and the market is in a healthy condition on all eggs. If any change occurs in the near future on storage eggs, it will likely be a slight advance.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at the recent decline. The stocks are a little larger than they were a year ago, owing to considerable Wisconsin cheese being sent to the East. It is reported that the English Government has taken considerable cheese off the market the past few days, which has stimulated the market to some extent, and the market is firm at this time and likely to advance.

Provisions.

Everything in the provision line is steady at unchanged prices, with only a moderate consumptive demand. Everything in the smoked meat line is about $\frac{1}{4}$ cent lower. Pure and compound lard are unchanged. Canned meats, dried beef and barreled pork are unchanged. No change is expected in anything, excepting smoked meats, which are likely to have a further decline of about $\frac{1}{4}$ cent per pound.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

There continues to be a good demand for evaporated apples for prompt shipment. Speculators are not doing anything for later months, but the evaporators are turning out the goods so slowly that the normal demand is keeping them cleaned up.

Prime quality, in small lots, is moving at $5\frac{1}{4}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ cents in 50-pound boxes, with cartons $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound higher. Choice quality, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound over these prices.

Raspberries are quiet, and prices are somewhat in buyer's favor. Shippers are asking $20\frac{3}{4}$ to 21 cents, f. o. b., in barrels, but these prices might be shaded a little for round lots.

Holland Herrings.—Since our last report most of the fishermen have returned empty handed on account of heavy damage done to the Dutch fishing fleet by exceptionally heavy storms. For practically a whole week a terrible storm was raging all along the Dutch coast. Stocks of herrings in Holland are practically exhausted, the fishing up to date amounting to only 203,412 barrels, against a quantity of 367,890 barrels caught up to the same time last season. Naturally, prices are very high. Small shipments are arriving here, which are held at very high prices, and on account of the high asking prices, the trade is buying only from hand to mouth.

Shipments from Scotland are coming in a fairly regular way, Scottish herrings are selling nicely at unchanged prices. There is an exceptionally heavy demand for Norway herrings and prices for this commodity are therefore advancing.

Norway reports very poor fishing of sardines, and prices have therefore advanced during the week for first and second grade fish. Steamers from Norway are arriving here regularly with heavy cargoes, but the demand continues good, and in spite of the heavy arrivals, all Norwegian goods are finding ready sale, and prices are holding firm. French sardines, naturally, are very scarce and high, because no new supplies can be had. The same may be said of sprats; in fact, the stocks of sprats are gradually being exhausted, and no new supplies may be looked for from France before the new fishing starts next winter, and from Belgium, where we receive our principal supply of sprats, absolutely nothing may be expected.

While writing this report the European mail has come in, and with it a report from our agent in Holland, reporting that some shipments of Holland herrings have arrived, thus relieving the situation a little. The agent also reports that the weather has improved, and there is a possibility of getting further supplies of Holland herrings. The only trouble is that fishermen may be hindered from pursuing their occupation by a new regulation issued by the English government allowing fishermen to operate only in a very small part of the North Sea, otherwise if found outside the area designated by the English government, they will be considered mine layers and confiscated or blown up. Naturally, this is frightening a great many of the fishermen from going out for herrings.

Rice.

The movement during the past week has slowed down in all lines of merchandise pertaining to the grocery line, though taken altogether, the situation continues to work more and more towards a settled basis. The demand for export still continues disappointing, but there are indications of enlarged inquiry about to take place which is giving encouragement to operators. However, with the larger trade conservatism still prevails, and there is no apparent inclination to expand their purchases beyond actual or immediate requirements.

Prices still hold on the lower plan with slow movement, as the planters refuse to make any concession to the mill below the fixed minimum, which naturally keeps the deadlock as strong as ever, with many mills closing down, and it is not expected that any special business can be done until the trade begins to see that rice has a certain value that is always worth while.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report very slow movement and general trade unsatisfactory, with but little chance for improvement so long as the cotton situation continues so depressing. At New Orleans there is but little or no demand, which condition is likely to hold prices until the planters and millers arrive at some agreement as to prices of rough, which will enable the miller to turn a modicum of profit in the handling.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, the planters are still in control of the situation and absolutely refuse to make any concession below the fixed minimum laid down by the planters' associations, the result of which is that the rough market is at a standstill.

Standard Canned Goods.

It would be a lively stretch of the imagination to call last week active in the canned goods market here. The orders were numerous enough, 'tis true, but they were small in size as compared with the usual big business done in the month of October, especially in tomatoes, corn, string beans, spinach, apples and pears, and also cove oysters. These goods have lost none of their popularity with the trade, and, probably, the consumption of them is as large as usual, but the prevailing conditions in the merchandise markets, and more especially in the money market, cause a conservative feeling among all classes of buyers that is running the limit. These smaller orders, however, wear away the stocks in the primary markets gradually but surely, and by and by the pendulum will commence to swing the other way. Keep in mind the axiom that "goods well bought are half sold."

The lack of big orders for tomatoes has caused a lower range of prices, and those canners who have not the facilities for carrying the goods are not selling sufficient to place themselves in position to care for their remaining stock during the winter months, until there is a reaction in the market prices which they believe is inevitable. Some of the Baltimore canners, with long purses, were buyers of tomatoes at the prevailing prices, to put away for a rainy day, having been unable back their usual quantity this season, and they are wise in their generation. The other lines of vegetables were conspicuous this week by their dullness. Orders for straight carlots of any of them were not at all numerous, nor was there any increase in the orders for pool carloads. There was, however, the usual run of small assorted orders every day, and not an article in the list was totally friendless. Therein lies the redeeming feature in the situation, for it indicates that the jobbers are not carrying this season the large stocks that they usually carry in the fall months, which means that they will necessarily be constant buyers during the winter and spring. Constant dripping wears away the stone, likewise the stocks of canned goods.

It is reported that the crop of pears will be about 50 per cent. of last year's crop in this section, and that the same conditions prevail in other States. Perhaps 50 per cent. may be enough to go around this year, but at all events, a large number of the jobbers think they had better own a few cases to make sure of having some when they are needed, and that feeling has caused some activity in pears this week. Look after them next week. Some say the apple crop is short and some say it isn't. Anyway, there are enough in sight now to prevent any real scarcity, judging by the small demand for the new pack. The orders for small lots of peaches were again numerous this week, and they were scattered nearly everywhere. The quality of this season's crop averages up pretty well. Next to nothing doing in the other kinds of fruits, but the prices hold firmly because of the light stocks.

Cove oysters are dull and prices unchanged.

Spices.

The market is more active, with a fair demand from the grinding trade. Prices are generally steady, with a firmer undertone in many grades. We predict a steady market for the next 30 to 60 days, if not even longer, and higher prices may prevail at any time, depending very much on conditions abroad.

Peppers.—The pepper market is steady and some little firmer. Holland is not offering any pepper at present no doubt obtaining more favorable prices on sales to Germany. Stocks here of all grades have decreased of late and are now very small.

Red Peppers.—Very much scarcer and firmer. There is little prospect of any replenishment of stocks until '15.

Cloves.—Scarce on spot and nearby, prices being steady. Demand is apparently on the increase.

Pimento (Allspice).—At fair spot demand at prices generally unchanged. The crop is reported small and the quality poor.

Mace.—Rather quiet and unchanged in price.

Nutmegs.—Unquestionably firmer, though without change in price. Stocks in Holland are held at high figures.

Gingers.—All grades remain low and in only moderate demand. Present prices we consider safe.

Paprikas.—Demand is on the increase, due to season. Prices hold generally steady and likely to go higher.

Tapiocas.—Fairly steady and in good trade demand. Prices unchanged.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—The trading during the past week has shown much activity and has covered a large range of articles. The demand should be normal for all articles in the line, which should have a tendency to keep prices generally steady, and in many grades sharp advances are probable, especially so should the war last throughout the winter.

Lower Figures in Unbranded Underwear Coming.

Buying of underwear on the part of general retailers is seemingly overlooked by the reported pressure of shipments abroad. The domestic trade, however, while not as active as was looked for—due to the lingering of warm weather—is improving, many inquiries being received by jobbers from small town merchants. Stocks are low in the hands of secondary distributors, and this is also true, to a great extent, of dealers. Jobbers are trying to market their higher priced cotton underwear in stock, appreciating that prices on new orders this season have already been marked down; and the new prices for next season, from present indications, will be on a lower level because of the situation in raw material.

One leading line of balbriggan underwear has already announced a change in price, showing a reduction of 5 cents a dozen in the primary market. This line has been held at $1.80 a dozen, and is now $1.75. The feeling in the wholesale trade is that the start has been made and similar changes along the entire line are apt to follow. One new line has a balbriggan shirt out for $1.65 a dozen. These figures apply to orphan brands, or goods known to jobbers and wholesalers only, or selling under their names. The Nationally advertised marks and firm names are selling their underwear at standard prices and are not affected in the slightest by the vagaries of the primary markets. Their merchandise is in demand and is retailed at established prices, which are not disturbed.

Hosiery Being Bought Cautiously. Prices in Some Lines Firm.

Particularly in staple cotton lines the sales in hosiery are proceeding along conservative lines. On important lines—that is, those which are known to merchants and the public—orders are being received that are surprising. The general impression is that storekeepers are buying only as goods are actually needed, or the weather calls for. The latter is in great measure responsible for the backward buying. Prices have not varied, and it is believed that if cuts were allowed merchandise would not move more quickly. Interior merchants are not receiving liberal credits at the banks, paper being carefully inspected before accommodation is extended. This also affects buying materially.

Prices on low end goods are a trifle weak, but 15 and 25-cent lines are being firmly held. As stated, firmness is due more to a realization that lower prices will not induce increased trade, and to the scarcity of proper dyestuffs than to any intrinsic strength. It is believed that when the cotton market is readjusted hosiery can doubtless be sold at lower figures. Retailers who operate in a large way still have hopes of receiving German made hosiery via Rotterdam, so they can cut prices to the consumer and bear the market generally on "Made in America" goods. This slogan is to them like the traditional red rag to a bull, and not a few of the kind are bucking this idea wherever possible with discouraging opinions or lower figures on foreign goods, when obtainable.

No Scarcity of Linens Anticipated.

Every possible effort is being made to bring in all the linens from Scotland and Ireland that can be secured. Already a quantity has been obtained which might have been shipped to other countries. Linen merchants do not believe there will be any scarcity this year. As yet they have not been able to get prices to a level which is more favorable to the general retailer; still they think manufacturers will begin to see before long that this country will not take linens at any price offered. It is believed this will have a tendency to grant concessions to first hand distributors, and through them to the wholesalers and jobbers to the merchant.

Conditions in Knit Wear. Sweaters in Steady Call.

While the buying of knit wear, especially sweaters, or cardigan jackets, as they are called in British parlance, have been in no large quantities on the part of merchants, the demand is now better than for some time. This is partly owing to cooler weather and the inquiries from abroad. Should the latter develop to the proportions reports say they will, prices are bound to harden in the domestic market. The effect of lower yarns is being felt in knit goods centers, and concessions are being made on garments in order to secure orders. At any rate, recent events have served to inject more spirit into the sweater market, and storekeepers who are not covered for the fall and winter would do well to "step lively" toward placing their orders.

Cost of Cotton Fabrics Crumbling. White Goods in Demand.

Fine and fancy cottons are moving into the stocks of retail merchants steadily. Buying is of the hand-to-mouth kind, however. Gray cloths are holding up well. The plain wide goods are sold ahead for the next two months, and on narrow widths the mills are firm in their asking prices. Fancy lines are being held as high as at the opening of the season. The best sellers are printed and white cottons. There is a moderate inquiry for repeat orders of fancy yarn dye specialties. Zephyrs of the better grades are being bought well in some sections.

Fully 25 per cent. more white goods, of plain and fancy description, are being bought over a year ago, as well as of printed fabrics. The carrying of light stocks of nearly everything is reported from every part of the country. Quilts are being shown for spring, 1915, and very low prices are being quoted by first hands as compared to last season. The finer grades are not much called for. Towels for spring delivery were reduced about 3 cents per pound. Turkish toweling is in plentiful supply, with the best demand for well-made unions. On drills, twills and sateens prices are 4 cents a pound lower than three months ago. Brown goods are declining, and some lines of bleached cottons will be revised downward this week. Wide sheetings are steady. Briefly, domestic prices for cotton goods of every description are slowly crumbling.

Laces, Novelty Neckwear, Ribbons Seasonable Sellers.

Marshall, Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say: "In spite of unseasonable weather, which has had a depressing effect upon retail trade throughout the country, some lines have shown considerable strength during the past week. Lace business is good, exceeding that of a year ago. The newest demands of fashion are for chantilly laces. These French creations out of the market of Calais are daily increasing in popularity. There is also a noticeable demand for any kind of delicate net laces which can be made into plaitings or flutings. Soft drapery effects in laces that can be made into military neck pieces, military sleeves and cuffs we anticipate will be a big item for popular wear.

"Novelty neckwear, such as ruffles, ruffs and collarettes, is a good selling merchandise at present. Ribbons of all kinds are in favor, the tendency being to darker and more sombre shades, with an increasing demand for all classes of blacks. Linens are prominent on current orders. Some shipments of linens are being received from Scotland and Ireland, but it is doubtful how long they will continue, owing to the difficulty manufacturers are having in securing flax yarns. Other items for which there is good sale are handkerchiefs, white goods, threads, crochet and embroidery cottons and dress goods."

Over-Buying by General Merchants Frequent Orders Rather Than Big Bills.

Advice as to buying by the general merchant is never amiss, for it means

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Here's to the Customer, May She Be Always Right—but Right or Wrong—the Customer.

Occasionally a customer is wrong, and that's the time she is to be handled right, yet oftener she is right, and to straighten out her side satisfactorily in either case often rests with the clerk, in the smaller stores especially.

My advice is keep off the offensive, because once you begin showing a customer where she is wrong or hint at anything unreasonable on her part, you're playing with fire.

In the grocery business the cost of making good on anything returned is a trifle, but the cost of losing that customer on account of quibbling over that trifle may be hundreds of dollars of business a year.

Be a Cheerful Loser.—A can of salmon was returned opened, the complaint being that it didn't look right. It did look good and the clerk insisted on it. The customer was worth from $5 to $6 a week. Out she went and out she stayed for nearly two years, or till after this particular clerk resigned. To make the situation worse, she was a terror when crossed, which meant that "that rotten salmon" bought at So-and-

So's, went the rounds of her circle many and many a time.

The other day a can of peas was returned, the complaint being sourness. It happened that the peas were strictly O. K. Said the manager: "I thank you very much for returning this can of peas. I am sorry you had the annoyance of doing so. I will investigate the matter later. In the meantime, here is another can to make good."

Now, then, you will say why should we stand for what to us is an imposition? Why should we not act independently and stand up for our rights?

In the first place neither case was a case of imposition. One woman had a temporary distorted vision and the other had a touch of dyspepsia that forenoon.

They were both honest.

In the second place, standing up for your rights is good enough and proper enough in matters personal, but it is a mighty unprofitable position to take in business, especially when the issue is 15 cents.

You notice the man who handled the pea trouble thanked her for returning them; he displayed such generosity of spirit that he put her at ease right away. Take a tip from him.

increased business and a steadier and more substantial business. In dry goods, notions and allied lines a dealer is not infrequently led to over-buy for various reasons, and at the present time judgment and caution should be exercised. Statistics prove that over 30 per cent. of the failures among retailers last year were due to over-buying. More small merchants fail because of incompetency than lack of capital, observers are authority for. Incompetency in retailing covers a multitude of sins, but the worst is generally conceded to be that of over-buying.

Months before the selling season starts many injudicious merchants are persuaded by the smooth, experienced house or road salesman into believing that his particular line of dry goods, gloves, laces, notions, ribbons, etc., is going to sell like "hot cakes." Either or both name certain stores in nearby towns to the merchant which placed good or even big orders for their merchandise, and add that there is doubt about future orders being filled; that on account of the European war goods in certain lines are scarce, will surely be higher, thus persuading the dealer into over-buying. An expert in his sphere, who has had no end of personal experience along these lines, describing this basic fault in merchants, especially those from the small towns, possibly readers of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," if the writer may so mention them, says:—

I have known unscrupulous manufacturers and jobbers to overload retailers with small capital to the extent of jeopardizing their credit with other houses, thus practically placing these retailers in their clutches. When the traveling salesman from one of these houses calls, the retailer feels obligated to give him an order, whether he needs the goods or not, fearing if he doesn't the house may demand a settlement which he could not make. Hence, the retailer continues to over-buy, paying the long price, too, because he is not in a position to dictate terms.

Frequently 50 per cent. of the styles in wearing apparel and novelties change in color, cut or shape before the retail selling season is fully opened. By this time the manufacturer has sprung something new, hence the retailer, in order to keep his stock up to date and hold the trade, is forced to heavily reorder and is also compelled to sacrifice the greater part of his earlier purchases at a heavy loss, in order to secure the money necessary for the second purchase. If the retailer of changeable styles in fabrics or other goods would take his previous year's business as a basis when buying for the season and order no more than one-third of his needs, then later on as styles change, buy as his sales require, he will find at the end of the season that he has operated at a profit.

Every stock should be turned at retail from three to twelve times a year (according to the stability of the merchandise). In specifying retail price, it means if the merchant has an average stock through the season of $10,000 at retail selling price, then he should do, if his stock calls for a four time a year turn a $40,000 business. The large, successful retailer figures how often he can turn his stock and buys carefully as sales require. This has put him where he is to-day, while the reverse has kept down the small retailer. I once heard a successful merchant say in giving instructions to his buyers: "I much prefer to see ten invoices of $100 each come in than one of $500."

Even when the injudicious retailers discover they have bought unwisely, they are slow or sometimes lack the nerve to take what sooner or later must become a necessary loss. They are "hangers-on" of out-of-date styles or poor sellers, hoping eventually to get the original sale price, while the successful retailers, big and small, act quickly in turning stock, thereby getting the cash with which to purchase what the trade is demanding.

No storekeeper should be above considering the wisdom and practicability of the foregoing remarks. They deal with the weakness of far too many general merchants, hence their application.

Brief Mention in Novelties and Novelties.

The President Suspender Co. is the new name of the C. A. Edgarton Mfg. Co., Shirley, Mass. There is no change in the ownership, or in the personnel of the organization, only a change in the company title. The company have notified the trade to this effect.

Mention has been made in this journal of the sharp advance in notions made abroad. It is stated that snap garment fasteners have been increased 100 per cent. in price. Goods are not being received, but the domestic goods are being used, though it is claimed their producing facilities are not equal to the demand. Rick rack braids have doubled in price, with the staple braids following suit.

Merchants are looking after notion novelties for the holidays, and as goods in this line are getting scarcer on account of the European trouble, the domestic makers are bringing out a number of things in this class of merchandise, for which a great demand will follow.

Foulard Silk Returning to Favor. An Interesting Exposition Now On.

Foulards are mentioned as having a better chance as a favorite silk for next spring than they have had for several seasons. As it stands, just what weaves will be preferred is an uncertain quantity at the present time. This is accepted by the selling trade as an explanation why retailers are backward not only in placing orders, but in considering them at all. Buyers are looking for low prices and getting them in a great many instances. Prices on crepes in particular are understood to be easy when comparison is made with quotations of a year ago. One line which was held at $1 a yard is now offered at 77½ cents.

Importers are securing goods from abroad in a liberal way, and some buyers in the primary market state that they have no difficulty in getting deliveries in full on all foreign deliveries, depending on the location of the manufacturers, who are working irregularly, whether in Switzerland or Southern France. Domestic producers, however, are gaining more attention than ever.

National Selling Service

National Biscuit Company advertising renders a high-class selling service. It promotes repeat business for every grocer that carries National Biscuit Company goods.

Back of National Biscuit Company advertising is National Biscuit Company quality. A full line of National Biscuit Company products in the famous In-er-seal Trade Mark packages means business expansion and steady sales.

National Biscuit Company products are continuously growing in popular favor with the women of the country who have proved National Biscuit quality and service for themselves.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

This is again demonstrated by the National Silk Style Show of the Paterson (N. J.) Industrial Exposition, which will continue, in that widely known and leading silk manufacturing center in this country, until October 24th. Every large concern in that city has donated silks of various kinds for use at the exposition, about 30 of them. A special feature is the style show at which 35 gowns are shown by models. Visitors from the trade declare the products are in nearly all instances superior to foreign goods. The exposition is also in furtherance of the "Made in America" idea, which is being advocated by the leading silk factors, traders and retailers throughout the country, and is there-

Expert Plan for Pushing Paints.

The planning of an advertising campaign, in a national way, is an undertaking of no small moment. Ingenuity and skill and practical experience are called into play and the reasons why certain things are done, that ordinarily seem inexplicable to the uninitiated, and other lines of publicity adopted, equally a mystery to a great many, are clearly set forth in an article written by William B. Powell, of the Sherwin-Williams Co., which appeared in a recent issue of "Printers' Ink," in part as follows:—

In making up our advertising proposition for 1914-15, we decided to go after the business brought in by our leaders in a systematic way. We would decide what was the best month of the year to get business on a certain product—then we would bend every effort to push that product during the month. Of course we would keep in mind our other lines and work them in wherever we had a chance. We merely applied the principle that concentration is efficiency.

The first thing we did was to work with the sales manager on what leaders to advertise and when to advertise them. We finally decided to make September "SWP Month" as that is the time people are planning their fall outside painting. October will be "Varnish Month"—November "Flat-Tone Month" as that is a good time to get people to decorate their rooms for winter. February will be another varnish month—March "Old Dutch Enamel Month," April will be a "Brighten Up Month," tying up with the annual "Brighten Up, Clean Up" movement all over the country. We will feature SWP again in April as we find many people do not do their spring outside painting until that time.

The salesmen are most enthusiastic over this new monthly idea, as they see in it a way to boost the sales of those leaders who are lagging behind and those who do not require any special help will be boosted more than ever. The sales department is also given freer rein in regulating its sales.

Successful Hardware Exhibition. Attendance Large, Sales Numerous.

As an exhibition of hardware and allied lines that held all last week, in the Parkway Building, under the auspices of the Philadelphia Hardware Association, was a decided success. It was the first of its kind, and the association proposes to make it a permanent trade event. The attendance of the trade and the public exceeded the most sanguine expectations, the average of 1,200 and over daily being maintained throughout, with the sales running into comfortable figures for all the exhibitors with any kind of a display, properly managed and looked after.

Fully 500 members, exhibitors, etc., assembled at the City Hall Plaza Monday evening, the opening night, and marched in a body, headed by a full military band, to the exhibition hall. In the absence of George D. Porter, Director of Public Safety, who was to formally start the exhibition going with an official address of welcome on the part of the Quaker City, the honor fell to C. W. Summerfield, secretary of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, who gracefully performed the pleasant duty. Thursday evening Mr. Porter appeared and in a clever speech explained why he was detained in reaching the hall until at a later hour owing to a motor mishap. Edward James Cattell, Chief of the Bureau of Contracts and Statistics, also delivered an interesting address at the same time.

Friday evening an informal banquet was tendered the Exhibit Committee in the dining room of the Parkway Building by the exhibitors. At this agreeable affair, in addition to the spontaneous talk fest, speeches were made by two veterans of the local hardware trade, namely, Robert Biddle, Sr., and Joseph G. McCaffrey, who naturally indulged in reminiscences of a delightful nature to their closely attentive auditors.

Every foot of space was sold, and while the hall is not of great size, the exhibits were well arranged and the merchandise given an effective display. Among the principal exhibitors occupying the largest floor room was the Simmons Hardware Co., in charge of V. J. Crancer, chief of the city selling staff. The exhibit was a unique selection of articles of their own manufacture and "Keen Kutter" goods, including edge tools of every description, tool cabinets, work benches, and a select line of cutlery. This embraced an elegant showing of pocket knives of various styles, scissors and shears, safety razors, shaving sets, carvers, silver knives, manicure sets, etc. Their line of housefurnishing goods, washing machines, enamel ware, sterling tin, aluminum, galvanized and nickel-plated copper ware attracted marked attention, as did also the carpet sweepers, food choppers, lawn mowers, autcycles, etc.

Next in size and importance was the fine display of the Supplee-Biddle Hardware Co. lines. The exhibit consisted of general cutlery, a large and handsome display of fine pocket knives, Liberty Bell half hatchets—arranged in "cherry tree" style—carpenters' and mechanics' tools of every description, Pennsylvania lawn mowers—from the first machine placed on the market many years ago to the 1914 perfect model—sporting goods, bicycles, etc. Dunn & Eldridge had a very complete exhibit of their brass goods specialties and general hardware in a conspicuous spot, in personal charge of Thomas C. Wimer, of the firm. An exclusive saw exhibit was made by Henry Disston & Sons, Inc., whose products are known the world over. The Disston trade literature was a feature. In the same line the silver saw display of the E. C. Atkinson Co. was notable. The sporting goods of the Edw. K. Tryon Co. were in a prominent place, as was the cutlery staples of Wm. Sommer & Co., and the specialties of the Safe Padlock and Hardware Co.

Other general hardware lines entitled to special mention included those of the Lamson & Goodnow Mfg. Co.'s "Anchor" brand cutlery, bits and tools; Meriden Cutlery Co.'s fine table cutlery and plated knives; Chas. M. Ghriskey Sons' "Hammer" brand pocket knives, etc.; Germantown Tool Works' hammers, hatchets and special tools; McCaffrey File Co.'s line, effectively shown on one of the three superb display stands which are to be a part of this concern's exhibit at the Pacific-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco next year. Food choppers—Sargent's "Gem"—were exhibited by Shields & Bro.; while the U. S. Slicing Machine Co. gave a demonstration of their "V. B. P." slicer and accessories.

Floor polishing mops of various makes and reputations were very much in evidence. The pioneer and original of this very useful household essential, the O-Cedar Mop, was prominently displayed and effectively demonstrated by an efficient local representative of the Channel Chemical Co., the inventor and manufacturers, Chicago. A half million dollars' advertising yearly has most effectively served to place the Triangle O-Cedar Mop in the preeminent position. Next in order came the Wizard mop, the one that "gets into the corners," having a "human elbow," so to speak, made by the Wizard Products Co.; the O-So-Ezy mop, with an adjustable handle and is self-feeding, the product of the O-So-Ezy Mop Co. Spiegel's mop, manufactured by the Germantown Varnish, Color and Paint Co., and the Floor Shine mop, sponsored by a local firm. A group of paints, stains and enamels, the product of John Luca

Practical Paint Selling Co-operation.

Dealer co-operation in a selling plan is indispensable to success, and the assistance of the manufacturer of any article in hardware and allied lines is equally important, if rendered in a practical manner. An illustration of what may be considered real co-operation with the dealer is embodied in a proposition offered by a leading paint manufacturer. There is no question as to the quality standard of the product, and with this as a basis of fact, coupled with extensive publicity, it seems mutually beneficial results should follow.

The manufacturer in point says: "If the dealer who buys an assortment of paint, and then is left to move it from his shelves by his own efforts, is not apt to make so good profits as the dealer who has the extensive co-operation of the manufacturer supplying the goods. One of the methods which has produced excellent results is our plan of writing property owners, whose buildings need painting, in the interest of our dealers, sending them color schemes and convincing letters. These schemes are furnished by our dealers on blanks made for that purpose." This is but one of other excellent suggestions. This particular paint manufacturer offers to aid the dealer in quickly and profitably moving the merchandise.

Purely Personal.

Early last week A. H. Bryant, secretary and general manager of the Simons Hardware Co., Philadelphia, returned for Europe on a fast Atlantic liner on special business connected with their export department, which comes under his personal jurisdiction. He will be away for a month or more.

On the 10th inst. Walter E. Graham, president and general manager of the Philadelphia Lawn Mower Co., started on his annual trade trip to the coast. En route he will see the principal jobbers and probably some of the leading dealers, calling to keep in touch only, but not selling any goods, as the company's large staff of travelers cover the entire country and book the orders. Mr. Graham, who finds domestic and export sales quite satisfactory, will not be home again for a couple of months.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Here's the finest flavoring extract made—SAUER'S. The flavor, strength and absolute PURITY is guaranteed to the last drop."

of shoes followed by quite a large number of manufacturers. To dealers it is misleading, and the public are the victims or sufferers, if one pleases, in the end. It is urged that the present standards are sufficient. On the other hand it is stated, and authoritatively, that a visit to the retailers and storekeepers carrying shoe stocks would find that the sizes of many shoes are not correctly measured and marked. Speaking of this wide divergence of opinions, "American Shoemaking" says:—

This is particularly true of women's shoes made over the French and the stage lasts, which often are of less than standard measurement. They also would find that even size sticks used in different stores vary in their markings. Indeed, one of the size sticks, that is made in Chicago, has upon it a run of size markings according to the custom standard, and another run of size markings according to a new standard. Both these runs are different from the runs of size markings on an old standard stick that is made in Boston. The Chicago stick also has on it a foot rule, such as are ordinarily known. It will show the clerk who uses it the length of his customer's foot in inches, as well as its size according to the custom, or to the new standard of sizes.

It is held that these secret size markings are wrong. If shoe men took the public into their confidence in the matter of sizes there would be a great deal less trouble than there is over misfits. It is also possible dealers could get along with fewer sizes, especially fewer widths, and that would be an advantage. Measuring the length of the foot by inches may be impracticable; but at all events, some practicable standards for sizing feet and shoes should be set up than those now employed. Consequently all size sticks should be made to correspond, and all shoes should be plainly and correctly marked so the dealer and his customer would also be properly informed.

Cutting Shoes Apart to Prove Quality.

As has been made clear from time to time in this department of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," merchants having a shoe department are often "up against" the retail mail order house. This is particularly true of storekeepers in the rural communities, where strenuous work is employed by the catalogue concerns to switch trade from the local trader. Many suggestions have been made to counteract this influence, the following letter, sent out by a Western firm of general merchants to their trade bringing excellent results:—

Don't be deceived by the catalogue houses claiming to sell cheaper than we do. They can't and don't. We invite comparison of our goods and prices against theirs. Bring your catalogue in with you. Remember that we guarantee to sell as cheap as any catalogue house, and we do. It is our aim to so please each customer with every sale we make that they will come back to us when requiring anything further in our line; no sale being regarded as complete until the customer is fully satisfied.

Don't send away until you have tried us. Take the Sears, Roebuck catalogue No. 128, turn to page 344 and compare their No. 15R4714 men's gun metal calf shoe with ours. Their price is $3.95, our price is $4, and the quality, style and fit is far superior to theirs. On page 352, No. 15R4962, they quote a brown work shoe at $2.19; our price is $2.25; their shoe is only nailed, ours is sewed and nailed also; ours has heavier stock and soles.

Again, on page 352, work shoe No. 15R949; their price is $2.25; our price for the same shoe is $2.25, and you have no freight to pay, besides seeing the shoe before you buy it. On page 335, No. 15R14, their ladies' vici kid shoe is priced $2.50; our price for a better shoe is $2.50. We have one pair of each of their shoes above mentioned in our stores at present, so as to show you. We leave it to you to judge whether our shoes are not just as good or better than theirs for the same money.

On page 57 they price a 54-inch all wool storm serge at $1 the yard. We sell you a 54-inch all wool storm serge, sponged and shrunk, for 98 cents the yard. (We have one of their samples, so you can compare it yourself.) We undersell them on men's cotton gloves. We have samples of their linoleum. Come and compare quality with us. Their price for table oilcloth is 20 cents; our price is the same. They sell calico for 5 cents the yard; so do we.

Let us figure on any bill of goods you may need now or later. Next time you are in town come in and let us show you. The above items are only a few taken from their catalogue. We can show you hundreds of others.

So far as shoes are concerned, a storekeeper may go a step farther, as some dealers have, by cutting the shoes in two. Samples from the mail order houses are obtained and sawed apart, as are shoes from stock treated in like fashion. The comparison reveals the poor quality and deceptive appearance of the former.

The Plan to Use Cotton Sacks for Flour Shipments.

In order to increase the demand for cotton, one of the largest flour milling firms in America has directed its managers and salesmen all over the country to urge its customers to accept deliveries of flour that are shipped in cotton instead of jute sacks. Hitherto jute imported from India has been used extensively for shipments of flour, both to home and foreign markets. The sacks employed hold 140 pounds each. If the trade can be induced to accept shipments in cotton sacks holding 98 pounds each, there will be a marked increase in the demand for home-grown cotton, and the action of the flour milling firm is regarded as a long step in this direction. Anything that will improve the financial condition of the cotton growers, it is pointed out, will increase the volume of their cash purchases and thus benefit general business conditions. For this reason, it is believed that the trade will not insist on the jute sacks used hitherto.

Read This and Then Call Me a Darned Fool.

Here's where I get called a darn fool.

A customer of mine was going on to me last week about business being so rotten. He's a grocer—just carries a straight line of groceries, though he's got a good big store and could carry about anything he wanted to.

Business was rotten. The city stores were pushing in, and the mail-order houses, and there was a new chain store in town, and he didn't know what he'd do if the Republicans didn't get back in power—wasn't that ridiculous, blaming all that on the Democrats?—and a lot more stuff like that. Plumb blue and discouraged. He meant it, too, for he cut my order down to half, which peeved me.

"Nothing to it," I said. "There ain't any reason for your business being bad at all. Not a little bit! There ain't a thing in any of the reasons you've doped out at all. You can do business and you can make money. Anybody can who's got a store like this."

Now I know all right that a few thousands of you fellows that are reading this are saying "listen to the darned fool!" I can hear you, but it don't muss my hair the least little bit. I've grown up on being called a darned fool—got fat on it. Why if I was sitting in a room with a bunch of people and somebody stuck his head in the door and called "Hey you darn fool," I'll bet I'd answer before I thought.

So you see a few "darned fools" more or less ain't going to make any difference to me.

He didn't call me one in so many words, but it come to the same thing.

"What dream's this?" he said. "Who are you, to talk like that? The Emperor of Germany or the great Dr. Know-it-all?" Real sarcastic.

"I'm plain little me," I said, "and I never take an order without delivering the goods. I can show you, and I'm going to give up ten minutes of my valuable time, worth ten dollars a minute, to do it."

"This is going to be good," he said, most disrespectful.

"You've got a store, ain't you?" I said.

"Right," he said, "we're together so far."

"And a good force of clerks?"

"Right again. These are sure great thoughts."

"How many customers have you got—regular customers?"

"Oh, about a couple of hundred."

"And of course every one of 'em represents a family and that family is using every minute a lot of stuff beside what you sell 'em, ain't they?"

"They are."

"All right. Sell some of that other stuff to these two hundred pals of yours. That's it."

"Oh, great! It's a miracle!" Not a word of thanks—he didn't even ask to kiss me.

"Don't see it, do you?" I said. "Sure! I see it. It's a scheme."

"You do not see it—if you do you'd be making out your check for a thousand dollars as a slip token of appreciation. But you a-going to see it if I have to live here with you all the rest of my life."

"Listen here. You know even one of these two hundred people personally, don't you—know 'em well enough to speak to 'em and call 'em by their names, don't you?"

"Sure." "And they have confidence in you, don't they, strange as that may be."

"I suppose they do, or they wouldn't buy here."

"All right. You've got 'em buying right now."

"Why you're actually sweating, aren't you?" he said. "I believe you've got fever—probably malaria fever. Better let me wire a doctor to your house."

"You don't sell a thing here but the one line," I went on. "If you

"What of it?" he said, "I suppose you could sell a few pans, but what of this? What would that do?"

"What would it do? What could it do? Why this is what it could do. If you can sell pans, you can sell other stuff, can't you? You can sell anything! Why with all the stuff that there is in the world

He smiled and got up. I won't know until I go back there whether his golden words took root or not. I know this—that when I got out of there, after trying to do him a good turn, I felt the sweat run down my noble buzzom.

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

CCLXXXI.—The Local Merchant's Protection Against Outside "Transient" Competitors.

From a representative of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association I have a letter making the following suggestion: "Won't you pay some attention in your legal articles to the transient merchant question. So many towns are asking me what they can do to keep out the transient vendor."

Fortunately I can handle this so that it will be equally interesting and applicable to retailers of other States, as the fundamental law of the subject is substantially the same everywhere.

The situation which retail merchants are complaining of is typically this: There will be in a given town the usual number of established retailers, all citizens of the place and all contributing in one way or another, to the local expenses. Into such a town there will come other men with goods to sell—peddlers, agents, auctioneers, salesmen of outside concerns, taking orders from consumers. Of course none of these pay anything toward the upkeep of the place—they have no interest and no part in it outside of the dollars they can take out of it. Every dollar's worth of business which they get is lost to the local merchants, who in almost all cases are the more deserving of the two. Consumers, however, are not discriminating, and it often seems as if they prefer to buy goods from outsiders and strangers.

What can be done to keep the itinerants out? Is there any way in which the local trade can be preserved for the local merchants, so far as peddlers, agents, auctioneers and outside salesmen are concerned? The answer is that there is no legal way in which the itinerants can be kept out absolutely, though they can be curbed to a certain extent.

Generally speaking, any city, town, borough or township has the power to pass an ordinance taxing, licensing or regulating the transaction of business within its boundaries. This power includes the power to impose what is often called an occupation tax or license.

I say as a general thing that cities, towns, etc., can pass such ordinances. There are some exceptions, though not many. The power is derived from the general and fundamental law of the States. Of course I cannot go into the question as to which States grant this power to their cities and towns, but suffice it to say that in practically every State of the Union it is possible for the cities, towns, counties, boroughs, etc., in it to pass some sort of an ordinance taxing occupations.

There are two fundamental requirements as to such ordinances: 1, they must be reasonable and they must not destroy business under the guise of a taxing ordinance; and 2, they must not discriminate between residents and non-residents. Many hundreds of such ordinances have been declared unconstitutional by the courts because they violated the second requirement. It was a natural error, for non-residents were what these ordinances were aimed at, therefore it is not surprising that they sought to tax only non-residents who came into the territory and sought to sell goods. The law, however, is very clear that this cannot be done. An ordinance imposing a tax upon a transient business, or compelling it to obtain a license before operating, must tax transient business done by residents as well as by non-residents.

With the above conditions in mind, and speaking generally, the average city, county, borough, township or other municipal subdivision can pass a perfectly legal and valid ordinance imposing a tax or license upon all peddlers, canvassers, agents, salesmen, or other representative or person who does business within the city limits, "doing business" meaning offering goods for sale. But as pointed out, such an ordinance must include local peddlers, canvassers and agents or it will be bad. Or it can pass an ordinance taxing all transient business.

I find by an examination of the cases that most cities and towns have met this problem by imposing a tax or license on "transient" business, this of course including transient business carried on by residents of the place as well as by non-residents. It seems to me that this would meet most cases, for the outside business is almost always transient, meaning that it is not constant, regular and continuous, and that it may be here to-day, gone to-morrow and perhaps back again next week. That is certainly transient business and it can be taxed or licensed.

What tax or license fee can be imposed? It must be reasonable or it will be set aside. As one case has it, "the authority to tax or license does not include authority to impose a prohibitory tax upon a useful occupation." A business cannot be suppressed through a tax or license.

I suppose a tax or license fee up to $25 would be upheld.

In many places these ordinances already exist—they are simply not enforced, because nobody has made it his business to see that they were. In other places ordinances primarily intended to prevent peddling are phrased broadly enough to include canvassers of a more important type. For example in Pennsylvania the official definition of peddler is "one who carries from house to house small packages of goods, for the purpose of offering same for sale." It makes no difference whether the goods belong to him or belong to somebody else who pays him a salary to take them about.

My point is that this definition is broad enough to include many canvassers and outside business people who do not consider themselves peddlers at all. In such cases it would merely be necessary to enforce the peddling ordinance which exist almost everywhere in the United States.

A taxing or licensing ordinance is bad if it interferes with interstate commerce, and a very large number of small communities, while making fully endeavoring to protect their own merchants, have seen their efforts defeated by failing to remember that. No city, town, borough, township or county can tax or license a canvasser, sample agent, salesman who represents principal doing business outside the State and who solicit orders by sample otherwise, for goods which have yet been brought into the State, if they have been brought in, still in the original packages. The shipment of goods under such circumstances is interstate commerce and no agent engaged in it can be compelled to pay a tax or license by a State or any subdivision of a State. Even where residents and non-residents have been taxed alike the ordinance will be bad.

It is not interference with interstate commerce, however, where goods have been brought into a State and are in a warehouse with the original package broken. Goods removed from the original package cease to be a part of interstate commerce, and anybody offering them for sale can be taxed or licensed.

Would a $25 tax or license include any of the itinerants? Undoubtedly it would exclude some, probably a great many—especially if many communities were imposed such a tax at the same time, thus forcing the outsider to pay several $25 fees.

(Copyright, October, 1914, by Elton J. Buckley.)

Question: "B," Greencastle, Pa.—On October 27, 1913, I bought from B, of Rochester, N. Y., some garden seeds about twenty bushels of onion sets, to be shipped March 1, 1914, but in the meantime the price went up over $3 a bushel by their catalogue, and they did not send any seeds at all. I wrote to them on about the 1st of April and they wrote to me that they notified me when they received the order from their salesman that they could not fill it, but I wrote back and took an oath that I did not give the letter. They say they have it on file. Now I sold the onion the last part of March or 1st April for $2.75 per bushel, but not get them. What I want know is if I can come on them the difference between $1.50 and $2.75, which would be $1.25 per bushel? I have their contract for the sale which the salesman gave me.

Answer.—If the salesman had authority to make the contract with you and there without it having been accepted by the house, you could hold them for the difference. If the salesman had no authority to make more than submit orders to the house, then the house did not at it had a perfect right to do so. It turned the order down when the salesman sent it in. I am of the opinion, however, that it would not have to show that its letter actually reached you. If it could prove that the letter was deposited in the mails, that would be enough. As a matter of fact, under the terms of this transaction an order was not an order until accepted, the house did not have to do anything.

The core of the case is the salesman's authority. Of course you can't tell that altogether, but the law allows you to judge from the salesman's previous dealings with you, or from his previous dealings with other people, known to you. If you can show that he evidently had authority to accept orders on the spot, without first submitting them to the house, you can hold the house now. The contract which you say you have, ought to throw some light on this.

Question: S. N. Kowel & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.—We endorsed a note for a friend of ours who lives in Philadelphia. He had been keeping it alive until last July, but without paying anything on the principal. He now fails to reply to the note or to us. He is an heir to one-half of one share of an estate. What would you advise?

Answer.—You may be liable as endorser or you may not. If when the note remained unpaid at maturity the bank promptly gave you notice, you are liable, and the bank can either collect from the maker of the note, or from you. Naturally they will prefer to go against the maker, as you are more convenient. If the bank proceeds against you, and you have to pay the note, the bank for you to do is to bring suit against the maker of the note wherever you can find him, and

"This is the famous FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR. The carton keeps the sugar clean and dry and won't burst in your basket or closet, like a bag. Notice the quality and purity as well as the convenient CARTON. I know you'll like it."

get judgment against him, which you can easily do. With the judgment you can levy upon his share of the estate, if it is where you can reach it, and in that way you ought to be able to get your money.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Pearline to Be Revived.

Now That It Has Passed Into New and More Active Hands, an Effort Will Be Made to Build It Up Again.

Great interest was taken in last week's brief announcement that Pyle's Pearline had been sold to Procter & Gamble, manufacturers of Ivory soap. News comes from Chicago that an effort will be made to build up the brand again and get back some of the business it has lost.

Pearline has always belonged to James Pyle & Sons, which is an old house, organized in 1848. Pearline dates from 1877, when it was started on a shoestring and an advertising contract. The brand took from the start and by 1904 the Pyle concern was spending $500,000 yearly in advertising. Later, however, the business began to go backward and when it was sold last week was a mere fraction of its former volume.

The Pyle concern also owned "Soapade," "O. K. Naptha Washing Powder" and "O. K." lye, none of which have ever amounted to much. Procter & Gamble took them over also.

Kansas Pure Shoe Law is Good.

The Kansas pure shoe law has been held valid by Judge A. W. Dana, of the District Court, sitting at Topeka. The Judge held that the law was a proper police regulation for the prevention of fraud in the manufacture and sale of shoes. The 1913 Legislature enacted the law, which provides that any shoe that contains any substitute for leather in any way or part must bear a label showing the use of the substitute. Many shoemakers use paper, fibre board and other substances in the counters and insoles of shoes. The shoemen assert that the substitute counters, insoles and other parts are better and cheaper than those in which pure leather is used entirely.

The experienced grocer or general storekeeper in the average sized town soon comes to know, if he tries it out, that he can always depend on getting results from advertising "special days" or special events, if the advertising is properly done, and the special feature, whatever it is, has any interest for his customers. The reason for this, according to my analysis of it, is that the public likes excitement—new things, little functions out of the ordinary. It likes a store to be alive and to have things going on. People are always willing to meet such a store half way.

M. L. Jackson & Sons, grocers, Hammononton, N. J., are using such a scheme, according to a batch of circulars they send into this department. The following is printed on the back of one of them, and explains the idea:—

An Explanation of DOZEN DAY

In order to take some of the strain from busy Fridays and Saturdays, and at the same time give you good service, we pay you for ordering your week's supply of package goods on Thursdays.

Hardly a week goes by but what you use a dozen packages of groceries. Instead of ordering one or two a day, as you run out of them, why not put on your thinking cap and bunch them up?

By ordering a dozen at a time, on Thursday, you get a 10 per cent Discount.

You cannot lose. You need the goods. You have our entire stock of best quality groceries to select from. This offer is good on Thursdays only.

Discount allowed only on even dozens, and not applicable to bulk goods that we have to put up.

M. L. JACKSON & SON.

Next to Post Office.

Another circular, which I have had photographed and reproduced below, shows further how the idea is advertised:—

THURSDAY IS DOZEN DAY IN Our Grocery Department!

You Save Ten per cent if you Buy by the Dozen

Every business has times when it has too much to do, and other times when more can be done easily. Thursday is the day when we can do more. If we can shift some of our Friday and Saturday business forward into Thursday it will be worth money to us; so we pay you for anticipating your wants by buying a dozen at a time.

This is good only on Thursday.

We save delivery expense. You save TEN PER CENT, have a full pantry, and are always ready should company come suddenly.

To make this saving, you do not have to buy something you do not want, or too much of something you do want. You can buy one dozen of one thing, or an assortment.

Discount on half-dozen lots only five per cent. Discount allowed only on even dozen or half-dozen.

DOZEN-DAY SUGGESTIONS:

- Tartan Tomatoes, 15 cts. per can
- Nectar Peas, 18 cts per can
- Tartan Corn, 15 cts. per can
- Grape Nuts, 14 cts. per package
- Corn Flakes, 10 cts. per package
- Shredded Wheat, two pkgs. for 25 cts.
- Dutchess Catsup, 10 cts. per bottle
- Mason Jar Olives, 28 cts. per jar
- Hires' Root Beer Extract, 15 cts per bottle
- Kingsford's Corn Starch, 10 cts. per pkg.
- Jello, seven flavors, 10 cts. per pkg.
- Huyler's Sweet Chocolate, 5 cts. per cake

This list is merely to show how easily you can make up an order for a dozen, and save the discount. You have our entire stock to select from. Prices and quality are right.

Respectfully yours,

M. L. JACKSON & SON.

Next to Post Office.

At the bottom of the dozen day idea lies its real advantage to Jackson & Son—the fact that the expense of selling a dozen is no more than the expense of selling one. They are probably still ahead even after allowing the 10 per cent. discount. More than this, they have their customers filled up so that they will not buy of anybody else in the meantime. It is a good scheme, and probably every grocer could adopt it with profit. It could not be used by general storekeepers with the same effectiveness, because outside of groceries the needs are not every day needs in the same sense and you can't induce people to buy ahead as easily.

Jackson & Son's advertising matter is well written and shows care in preparation. I don't know what sort of a plan Hammononton is, and whether this is the kind of advertising best adapted for it, but if it is, I should expect to get steady results from this advertising.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Dealers' Influence Far Ahead of Any Other Method of Introducing Proprietary Products

Some Exact Figures Which Show That Many More People Use a Thing Through the Grocers' Influence Than From Advertising, Canvassing, Demonstrating or Anything Else.

Not long ago the St. Louis "Republic," a well-known Missouri newspaper, started out to gather some information about advertised brands of food products which nobody, so far as we know, has ever gathered before.

Into the hands of over 1,000 women were placed the names of 110 commodities which are sold both in package and bulk form. The women were asked to write which of these brands they preferred, and to state how they came to use it, whether by seeing it advertised, having their grocers recommend it, through advertising matter sent them by manufacturers, by friends' recommendation, by a store demonstration or by being influenced by canvassers. The reports that 1,044 women supplied are intensely interesting and important.

A sample tabulation was made as to chocolate. Of the 1,044 housekeepers 913 use chocolate. In this table are shown both the number and the percentage of people using each particular brand. As many did not indicate initials, W. H. and Walter Baker have been combined in the schedule:—

| Baker's | 672 | 73 per cent. |
| Blanke-Wenneker. 134 | 14 per cent. | |

According to the reports, the influence of the grocer on the sale of chocolate runs from 21 to 53 per cent. The next highest influence on the brand which has been most exploited in St. Louis is the newspaper, which is 21 per cent. The newspaper leads all other forms of advertising by more than 150 per cent.

The 19 per cent. who gave "no reason" were probably largely influenced by advertising, and 10 per cent. was credited to "a friend."

It was shown that Quaker Oats is the best selling cereal in St. Louis with only 28 per cent. of the market, because there are 12 other advertised brands—but the 13 advertised

There is an "influence" analysis of six best sellers—chocolate, bacon, crackers, baking powder, catsup and macaroni. It was found that out of 913 consumers using chocolate, 353 were led to use the particular brand through their grocer, 90 through a friend, 35 through newspaper advertising, 7 by billboard advertising, 12 by street car advertising, 44 through magazine advertising; 131 gave no reason.

Out of 833 using bacon, 224 were influenced by grocers, 34 by friends, 14 by newspaper advertising, 22 by billboards, 1 by canvassers, 6 by street car advertising, 14 by magazine advertising. Fifty-six gave no reason.

Out of 848 using crackers, 218 were influenced by grocers, 22 by friends, 30 by newspapers, 29 by billboards, 3 by canvassers, 20 by street car advertising, 24 by magazine advertising. Seventy-two gave no reason.

brands control 98 per cent. of the market, while 21 non-advertised brands divide 2 per cent. of the St. Louis consumption.

Here is a fairly complete table analyzing thirty-two products, from data compiled from the 1,044 reports. The figures show the number and percentage using the product out of the total number of 1,044; the number using the best seller; the percentage of the whole sale which the best seller had; the number of advertised brands sold in all the lines, and the number of non-advertised brands, and the percentage of total sales which the non-advertised brands had:—

Out of 1,023 using baking powder, 187 were influenced by grocers, 55 by friends, 16 by newspapers, 2 by billboards, 5 by street cars, 18 by magazines and 69 gave no reason.

Out of 828 using catsup, 142 were influenced by grocers, 23 by friends, 16 by newspapers, 1 by billboards, 1 by canvassers, 15 by street cars, 26 by magazines and 46 gave no reason.

Out of 782 using macaroni, 123 were influenced by grocers, 33 by friends, 44 by newspapers, 45 by billboards, 3 by canvassers, 15 by street cars, 9 by magazines and 102 gave no reason.

Our Goods Wanted in Switzerland.

The Swiss merchants hope to be able to import cured and fresh meats from the United States, as the local prices have already risen from 10 to 20 per cent. Sugar is selling to-day retail at 4.41 cents per pound. The price of bread has increased very little. There is a splendid opportunity for American dried and preserved fruits to enter the market permanently. The consul has tried for some time to make an entering wedge, but has made little progress. There is sufficient pork in Switzerland to supply the demand for a few months. The farmers have already requested that the people eat pork instead of other meats, as the feed supply is rapidly giving out; hence it is believed by the Basel Chamber of Commerce that it will be necessary within a few months to import fresh pork. Petroleum is already scarce, and gasoline is not to be had at all. The supply of raw tobacco, barley, oats, corn and flour will last from three to five months.

Mail Order Houses Can't Push It Over These Merchants Any Longer.

Pen Argyl (Pa.) Protective Association Now Turns Down Mail Order Concerns Who Ask For Credit Information on Customers.

Pen Argyl, Pa., October 19, 1914

The mail-order houses are still persistent in securing credit rating information from retailers. It has become such a nuisance in Pen Argyl, Pa., that the association replied to all inquiries with the following letter:—

Gentlemen:—We are in receipt of asking for information regarding the financial standing of In answer to the same, kindly let us say that as a member of the above association, we have decided not to furnish any concern with such information, at least until we are thoroughly acquainted with the conditions of the case. Mail order houses very often get this information from a local merchant, through a rating syndicate, and sell the party such goods as they should buy at home.

We believe in home trade, and think that we are doing ourselves, as well as our fellow merchant, an injustice when we furnish such information without knowing by whom and for what purpose it is to be used.

Should you see fit to acquaint us with the real facts concerning the case, we would be willing to give the matter further consideration.

W. S.

NOTE.—It would be a splendid thing if all mercantile organizations did this. No such stupendous exhibition of cheek has ever been given than the request of the mail-order houses for credit information from the merchant they are preparing to rob.—Ed.

Give Your Jobber a Square Deal and Other People Will Give You One

Little talks between wholesalers and retailers on the ethics of fair business—what is square and what is tricky?—Doing unto the jobber as you would have him and other people do unto you.

No. 6

Does the retailer who gives his jobber an order and then carelessly cancels it, sometimes even after it is shipped, realize how absolutely unfair he is? He has made a contract with the jobber, as legal and binding as a written contract for the purchase of real estate. Entirely outside of the legal aspects of the case, he has not the slightest moral right—any more than the jobber would have—to throw that contract over.

In the interest of general commercial honesty and fairness, let us all remember, when we sign an order, that we have bound with our name something that deserves to be respected.

Here is an Awful Bang at Private Brands —Do You Agree With It?

A Manufacturer Who Packs Some of Them Says They Are Bad Business for Everybody—Manufacturer, Jobber, Retailer and Consumer. Says Average Private Label Brand is Inferior to Manufacturers' Own Brands.

The private label business is an economic loss to the manufacturer, jobber, retailer and consumer. Given goods of equal quality, we find that it costs a great deal more to place them in the hands of the consumer under a private label than it would if packed under the brand of the manufacturer himself.

Unfortunately, investigation has almost invariably shown that private label goods instead of being equal are as a rule far inferior to those which are packed by the manufacturer under his own brands.

The reasons for this are plain. It comes about naturally and could hardly be otherwise.

Why do some merchants want to handle goods under their own label?

It usually begins with a merchant who reasons that if he has goods put up under his own label, and places them among his trade he will establish a business which competitors cannot take away and that he can ask a larger profit on them. He is relying upon the confidence of his customers, and yet unwittingly he is destroying that confidence.

He thinks that by placing a contract with one manufacturer for all of his goods in a certain line he can get them at a cheaper price than if he used the manufacturer's own brand. He feels at liberty to establish his own prices, make as much profit as he wishes and frequently endeavors to convey the idea to the public that his business is of such proportions as to warrant him in manufacturing his own goods and that he does actually manufacture them.

At all events he has decided to sell under his own brand. He knows very little or nothing about the manufacturing cost or technical knowledge and skill required, but understands that his goods must come under the requirements of the Food and Drugs Law. Hence in nine cases out of ten his requisition to the different manufacturers asking for estimates reads about as follows:—

Please let us have your very lowest figure on goods manufactured under Brand, to comply with the Pure Food Law.

What is the result? If the manufacturer has any hope of securing the business he immediately figures on the very cheapest goods possible, anything that will comply with the law, and sends the merchant his prices.

Sometimes the merchant seeing that the manufacturer's estimate on his private label is a little lower than his price on regular brands believes he has "put one over" and is securing goods at lower figures, but does not take into consideration the difference in the quality. As a matter of fact, it costs the manufacturer 5 to 15 per cent. (in proportion to character of goods and guaranty) more to put up goods under a private label, for the reason that for his own brand he buys bottles, containers, labels, cartons, etc., by the million, whereas in furnishing private label goods he is compelled to figure on small quantities at much higher cost.

Frequently the formula is also different, requiring special lots of goods to be manufactured, which increases the cost of labor. The difference in goods and style of package often necessitates the work being done by hand, which on manufacturers brands is done much cheaper by machine.

This additional cost in production can be and is more than offset by lack of quality of the goods, and that is why a manufacturer's price on private label goods is often lower than on his own brands.

A great many merchants do not stop to consider all this; in fact, don't know it. They finally get their goods—the next thing is to put them on the market. They find that the field is full of keen competition. Manufacturers' brands have been sold for a great number of years and the chances are that the merchant sold them too, but the manufacturer paid for all advertising and introduced the goods by his own salesman at great cost.

The merchant had no expense whatever along this line and his profit was good. With goods under his own name this burden is his and he is forced to shoulder the responsibility and expense of introducing a new line. It is needless to dwell on these difficulties.

Many housewives are willing to try something new but as a rule know the difference between goods which are simply pure and goods of high quality. These trial sales don't make money for anybody and consumer reverts to standard brands.

The merchant is never sure of prices. He may possibly but probably build up a trade on goods only to have the manufacturer let him notice that he can no longer up the goods at the same price.

For some time the various authorities have been endeavoring to pass legislation requiring that name of the actual manufacturer show on all foods and drugs. This is done in the interest of the public on account of the deception which is practiced, to say nothing of the ture to revive it.

Organizer Smedley addressed the Retail Grocers' Association of Easton on Monday, October 12th.
There was a large attendance and a most interesting meeting. Three new members were added to the roll. Before the speaking a substantial oyster supper was served.
President Smith and Secretary Gray are determined that this shall be a big year for association work and many plans are in contemplation to bring about this result.

Mr. Smedley addressed the Merchants' Association of Pen Argyl on October 13th. The attendance was good and much interest was manifested. Quite a number of the merchants of Wind Gap were present.
Lunch was served. Short talks were made by President Jackson, Secretary Sauerwine, E. A. Spear and Mr. J. A. Weiss. The merchants of Pen Argyl and Wind Gap are splendid fellows and progressive to the last degree.

The Northeastern convention of merchants will be held at Bethlehem on October 29th. This association is composed of associations at Slatington, Bethlehem, Allentown, Pen
Argyl, Easton and Northampton.
A large attendance is expected.

The Allentown Merchants' Association held an interesting meeting at Crocker's Hall on October 14th.
A splendid lunch was served, after which President Shelling stated the object of the meeting as being to create a greater fraternity among the members and to stimulate the association to its best efforts during the coming year. A splendid address was delivered by E. J. Lumly, president of the Chamber of Commerce, on "Organization." Mr.
Smedley made an address and he was followed by Patrick Heraty, H.
W. Reiff, Henry Merkle and E. J.
Loux.

The Allentown association is making an effort to have all wholesale dealers in meats, groceries and produce to cut out all retail sales.

It is believed that they will be successful in their efforts. Big things are expected from the Allentown association. The officers are aggressive business men who believe that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well.

Organizer Smedley addressed the merchants of York on October 16th.
There was a fair attendance. As one result of the meeting a committee was appointed to arrange for a "Buy at Home" week.

Tamaqua has a good association which is making an effort to rid the town of trading stamps. This association should affiliate with the State association.

Mr. Smedley has an inquiry from Mifflinburg relative to organization and expects to make an early call there.

Mr. Smedley will speak at Brownsville on October 26th, Verona and Oakmont October 28th,
Cambridge October 29th.

WITH THE EDITOR

For years a live topic of discussion has been how much influence a retail grocer had with his customers in the way of inducing them to buy something. Up to a few years ago many manufacturers assumed that he had no influence, and that it therefore made no difference whether he was favorable to the goods or unfavorable to them. Acting on this view the manufacturers made little or no effort to enlist the grocer in their cause. They merely exhorted consumers, through advertising, to "Demand our brand of your grocer." If the demand was loud enough, the manufacturers thought, the grocer would feel forced to comply with it.

But this delusion has long since lain down in the graveyard with other delusions as to the omnipotence of advertising, and everybody now agrees that the average grocer always has an influence with his customer, though until the St. Louis "Republic" attempted it, nobody has ever tried to get the thing down to percentage figures. The St. Louis "Republic" did, and some of its results appear in another column. The point in brief was to find how many women out of a total of about a thousand used a given Nationally advertised product, and then to find what part of them were induced to use it by the grocer's recommendation, what percentage by a friend's recommendation, what percentage by advertising, and so on. The result is remarkable. In all the cases the grocer's recommendation got several times as many customers as all the other reasons put together.

For instance, chocolate. Nine hundred and thirteen women out of 1,044 used chocolate, and of these, 353 were induced to use the particular brand by their grocers. Ninety more were induced to use it by friends' recommendation, and only 98 by newspaper, magazine, street car and billboard advertising. Personal recommendation by somebody seems to have it all over advertising, with the grocer's influence the strongest by far.

A retailer with such influence as this can pretty nearly make his business what he likes.

Within the past week a certain Eastern department store has gone into the hands of a receiver. The writer cannot but feel that its collapse, which incidentally, it brought upon itself, is a blessing not only to the reputable stores in the same territory, but to the general cause of commercial worthiness.

From its beginning this concern was an advocate of cheap goods. Doubtless it handled some good merchandise, but probably 90 per cent. of its stock was shoddy—cheap, showy trash made to sell at prices that looked low but considering quality were really high.

When it comes to merchandise, it is true that you can fool some of the people all the time, all of the people some of the time, but nobody has ever lived who could fool all of the people all the time. If a piece of merchandise bought cheap lives only half the life it ought to live, the next "bargain" offered by that house may be bought just as avidly, but if that too fails to make good, the store is as good as dead with that customer. The writer's conviction is that the department store in question failed because its customers found that it does not pay to buy cheap goods, or to patronize houses that sell cheap goods, and left it for some more satisfactory place.

Recently a great many inquiries have been received from subscribers asking for advice regarding various real estate investment schemes.

These are usually in New York City, at a convenient distance from the people who receive their literature. In substance all these schemes promise to do the same thing—issue bonds payable in installments, and bearing interest, which are supposed to be backed by first mortgages upon or the actual ownership of valuable real estate. Invariably this paper has advised having nothing to do with them.

Before the writer lies a newspaper clipping which reports the last end of one of these real estate investment schemes—a typical one, we should say, in every sense. Part of this we reproduce:—

Nothing is left of the Monaton Realty Investing Corporation fraud. The temporary receiver for the fraudulent concern, M. Morganthau, Jr., has just issued a preliminary report to the several thousand swindled investors, and makes it clear to them that he has no hopes of being able to restore to them any of their lost savings. Instead of owning millions of New York realty, the swindling concern was heavily in debt; the real estate carried on its books was mortgaged far beyond its value, and served merely as a blind for a bare-faced stock swindle.

The receiver, since his appointment seven months ago, has been unable to locate no property owned by the swindle, except its handsome office furniture. He has found that the company has liabilities of $1,495,020 and assets of only $2,340.20.

Of the $2,340.20 that the receiver has scraped together for the creditors, he realized $1,155 from the sale of the swindle's pretentious office furniture. He says he cannot find no other property of any value belonging to the concern, as all the real estate carried on the company's books at one time has either been sold under foreclosure proceedings or is in the hands of mortgagees.

The company sold various kinds of securities under installment payments, and pretended that it was investing the money of its victims in New York real estate. It obtained fictitious title to several large properties, merely by accepting mortgage obligations on them far beyond their market value and paying interest on these inflated mortgages as a means of keeping up the false pretense of ownership.

The money invested by victims of the fraud was used partly to pay these interests and keep up the false pretense by which no genuine property values were acquired. The fraud sold its securities in all the leading cities of the East by paying big commissions to men who peddled the paper among their personal friends and associates.

Sometimes these concerns operate through agents, usually well known men in local communities, and sometimes they work by mail. Always the known enormous prices of New York City real estate are dangled like a bait before the victim's eyes. It is an easy fake work—how easy is seen from the fact that the concern referred to above collected over a million dollars—and has it yet somewhere, no doubt—although its present visible assets are only a little over $2,000.

Every man with money to invest can find plenty of ways of investing it safely right at his door.

What the War Will Do to Maraschino Cherries, Both Imported and Domestic.

Well-known Packers Say Domestic Maraschino Cherries are Fully Equal to Foreign and in Some Respects Better. Great Industry Waiting If Farmers Would Grow More Cherries.

The question has been asked how the European war would affect the sale of cherries in glass (so-called Maraschino cherries) in this country.

Many people have been laboring under a misapprehension as to the relative quality of foreign fruits as compared with those of domestic manufacture. It is true that "Maraschino cherries" originated abroad, but about twenty years ago we embarked in the manufacture of this product, being the first American manufacturer who attempted to compete with the French manufacturer.

From the very beginning our ambition was to improve, if possible, on the imported cherry, and working along these lines we evolved processes which enables us to produce a finer cherry than the imported, and which contains no preservative.

With the enactment of the National and various State pure food laws the position of the American made cherry became much stronger, for those of foreign manufacture (all containing preservatives in large quantity) were found in many instances to be deleterious to health and were therefore condemned.

Many benighted grocers still demand imported fruits, but the enlightened discriminating dealer today insists on American made goods, for he knows that with the strict sanitary laws enforced by the States, together with rigid pure food laws, he obtains in goods of domestic manufacture an article vastly superior in every respect than is the imported. Even foreign ountries have come to the realization of the excellence of the American made product, which is evidenced by the rapidly growing volume of our exports.

There are a vast variety of cherries grown, but only a limited number of these can be used for the Maraschino cherry." The necessary types are not abundantly grown in America, therefore we are compelled to turn to Europe for a portion of our supplies of raw fruits, and at this point only are we affected by the European war.

If the American farmers will develop their cherry orchards, growing one of these several necessary type of cherries, it will be only a very short time before this country will be independent of all Europe for our supply of "Maraschino cherries."

Don't Have Anything to Do With the Interstate Furniture Dealers' Association

A Detailed Answer to Several Requests for Information Regarding Chicago Mail Order Scheme, Which is Being Tried on General Storekeepers.

For some time we have been receiving requests for information as to a concern calling itself the "Interstate Furniture Dealers' Association" of Chicago. The concern has for some time been sending mail to general storekeepers all over the United States, and some of it was very alluring. Ostensibly the scheme was a combination of retail dealers buying furniture co-operatively, but upon being investigated it proves to be just another scheme, and a pretty poor scheme at that.

The concern offered some apparently very low prices on furniture, as for instance the following, which was suggested as a "trial order":—

|--|--------|
| 4 parlor tables, at 98c..... | $3 92 |
| 2 sanitary couches, at $1.89.. | 3 78 |
| 2 library tables, at $2.95..... | 5 90 |
| 4 supported bed springs, at $1.19 | 4 76 |
| 2 iron beds, at $3.49..... | 7 98 |
| 6 rockers, at 69c..... | 4 14 |

|--------------------------|------|
| Iron beds | 1 09 |
| Go-carts..... | 2 95 |
| Roll-top desks | 9 95 |
| Membership and dues..... | 5 00 |

Of course there is no doubt that all these goods were absolute trash, because nothing but trash can be made to sell at these prices, even with all selling expenses cut out. The "association" also offered "Best quality" Axminster rugs 9 x 12 feet at $13.50, and Wilton velvet rugs 9 x 12 at $9.95. These are frauds on their face.

The Interstate Furniture Dealers' Association is not listed by the mercantile agencies, and proves to be merely a name assumed by one F. T. O'Brien, who is connected with a furniture house called the Acme Co., 318 W. 43d street, Chicago, Ill. O'Brien conceived the idea of working the Interstate Furniture Dealers' Association as a side issue to get business for the Acme Co. The scheme has not succeeded very well, as several judgments have been entered against the Acme Co. within the last few months. One suit for $200 has been filed in Chicago against the Interstate Furniture Dealers' Association. The Acme Co. is not rated either.

The merchant who sends any money to this outfit, no matter how alluring the promises of value, is probably playing a joke on himself.

Must State Actual Food Contents of Brine Packed Articles. Labeling of Candy.

The Department of Agriculture, in the service and regulatory announcements of the Bureau of Chemistry, has issued a ruling that where fish, olives or tomatoes are packed in brine, the label should state the net weight of the actual food, exclusive of the brine. In the case of tomatoes packed whole in brine, the label should be such as to distinguish them from ordinary canned tomatoes. Another new ruling, as to labeling of candy, is that packages of mixed candies labeled "all fruit flavors," "assorted fruit flavors," "fruit flavors," etc., are considered misbranded if the candies contained therein are prepared by the use of both true and artificial fruit flavors, for the reason that such labeling would give the impression that only true fruit flavors have been used.

52—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because if you do, it is possible to do business on much less advertising of your own.

Obviously a retailer who is selling well known products that the manufacturer is widely advertising, doesn't need to do any more himself than to announce to the public that he keeps them. Some advertisements clipped from magazines or newspapers and pasted on his window will do that very well.

This is just another way of emphasizing that the dealer who attempts to push non-advertised products to the front has got a hard push on his hands. He and not the manufacturer is doing the work then, and no matter what profit he is promised, it is not enough pay for the work.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

Government Attacks Mercantile Exchange as Combination in Restraint of Trade. Merchants' Association Doing Valiant Work for Foreign Trade Expansion. Coffee Importers Say Retailers Are Overcharging. Retailers' Organizations to go Into Politics. Market Summary.

New York, October 23, 1914.

Proceedings under the State anti-trust act for the purpose of abolishing the New York Mercantile Exchange as an illegal combination in restraint of trade, began last Thursday in the Supreme Court. The charge was that the Exchange entered into a conspiracy with a number of cold storage warehouses and packing houses to manipulate the market. The petition was filed by the Attorney-General, and charges an arrangement between the various members of the conspiracy to restrain and prevent competition in the supply and the price of eggs.

There is a Butter and Egg Committee of the Exchange, which is accused of constantly manipulating market prices and interfering with supply and demand. In connection with this, a newspaper, called the "Producer's Price Current," is used.

It appears that in 1907 an injunction was granted in a similar proceeding against the Exchange. Later, in 1912, it was charged that the organization was still doing the things complained of, and the District Attorney began a proceeding, but the practices were then discontinued and the proceedings dropped. Shortly after the Exchange is accused of having resumed them again.

The New York Merchants' Association is rendering valuable service to those of its members who are seeking to enlarge their business by increasing their export trade. It is publishing regular articles on the subject prepared by its Industrial Bureau, and at the same time is offering its services to members in the way of furnishing them with information regarding foreign trade conditions.

The most valuable thing which the association is doing is gathering information regarding foreign firms who are in the market for specific orders for our merchandise. This list of merchandise has been sent to more than a thousand of the members of the association, and is immensely valuable. Much of the data gathered concerns South American trade, which is peculiarly dependent upon American sellers since the usual sources of supply have been cut off by the war.

Considerable attention has been directed to a publication in the "Journal of Commerce" during the week, which apparently was inspired by "several leading importers of coffee," who criticized the retail prices charged for coffees by retail dealers. The old charge was made that while grocers had gone up with the market they had not come down with it. The case of Santos 4s, which is a standard grade of Santos coffee, was cited. It was said that this grade of coffee is now being bought by roasters at about 10½ cents green, which means a selling price to retailers of 15 to 17 cents roasted. This grade of Santos, according to these importers, is being retailed at 25 to 28 cents per pound, which they say is too high.

The same authorities agreed that retailers were not charging too much for tea.

The organized retail grocers of this section propose to go into politics to fight the movement for open city markets. On Monday night a mass meeting of the New York, Brooklyn, Manhattan and Queensboro Associations was held at the meeting rooms of the New York Retail Grocers' Association. It was unanimously resolved that the grocers present, and any others whom they could influence, should go into politics and take an active interest in the election of aldermen and members of the Legislature.

The free markets which are being operated under city dominion were freely discussed and vigorously condemned on the ground that they were against the interests of retail grocers.

A committee representing the four associations was appointed at the meeting and it will map out a campaign of attack.

During the week Wm. L. Mitchell, senior partner in the firm of Mitchell Bros., wholesale coffee dealers, and Peter Shannon, a well-known coffee broker, were placed on trial in the Federal Court on an indictment charging them with conspiring to defraud the public by forwarding misbranded coffee into interstate commerce. The coffee in question was a consignment of washed Venezuelan coffee branded as if it came from Colombia. It was seized in Chicago upon information furnished by Heidemann Coffee Co. of Milwaukee.

There is great jubilation here over the fact that the war revenue bill finally passed without imposing a tax on gasoline. It is generally agreed that the effect of this tax, had it passed, would have been very far reaching and probably would have increased the expenses of doing business for more concerns than will be affected by any other provision of the new law.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Coffee quiet, with prices fairly steady. The consumptive demand pared down to actual wants.—Tea quiet and fairly steady. Low grade Congous in good demand for export, especially to Germany.—Sugar weaker, with refined a shade lower for the week. Some refiners selling granulated at 5.80. Further declines are predicted.—Dried Fruits not materially changed. Currants weaker on large receipts.—Canned tomatoes dull and weak, with sales reported as low at 62½ cents for No. 3s, f. o. b. Baltimore, in large lots. Peas, string beans, corn, all unchanged and active.—Wheat unsettled, with steady to firm undertone. Flour quiet. Buyers holding off through belief in lower prices.

How Some Foreign Houses Sell Goods in This Country.

Apropos of the general discussion over commercial honesty, and whether it is improving as the years go on, Messrs. Halpen, Green & Co., the Philadelphia wholesale grocers, make the following interesting contribution from their experience:—

We are hearing these days a great deal about "A Scrap of Paper" and the violation of its provisions. We regret to say that nations are not the only ones that have little regard for their contracts when it answers their purpose to disregard them. Our experience in importing food products tells us that there are many merchants in foreign countries who care little for what they contract to deliver, if the market should go against them, although it may specify plainly the quality, etc. Heretofore foreign goods were paid on sight draft with bill of lading, either by a letter of credit abroad or through bank here, but in nearly every case they are paid for before the goods are received and examined. So bad had the deliveries of certain lines, which we will not mention here, become that the direct importations of those articles by jobbers came almost to a standstill. We regret to say that lately it became the habit of one or two curers of mackerel in Norway who sold

Grade Your Grapes.—If Malaga grapes are properly handled there is no article in the fruit department that will show a better margin.

Number 1s is the only kind to buy, and these can be graded into small, medium and large bunches, representing, of course, three prices. Stripping the large bunches should be avoided if possible; they should be weighed on a computing scale and sold by the bunch only.

Apples in a Punch Bowl.—The Jonathan apples that are now coming from the State of Washington in cases are very decorative. Their perfection of color appeals to every eye, but particularly to those who can afford the price. Transfer them from the box to the punch bowl and you'll sell twice as many. And by the same token, this applies to a very high-grade lemon.

Don't doubt this until you try it out.

Don't doubt any scheme of this kind until your experience tells you that such scheme is N. G.

We are all too ready to act indifferently about simple suggestions, either because they appear too simple or because we are too lazy or too "set" to adopt them.

Booming the Bakery.—The object every one of you should have is to increase sales. There are many ways of doing this, but there are two at least that come under your position as clerk. One is to offer suggestions and the other is to go ahead and do the thing. Some managers invite suggestions and some haven't budged an inch in 25 years.

Some bosses are tickled with even good change and some will throw a if you disarrange a location of year standing.

If you work for the boss with the venerable tickle, and you want to boost the bakery, land your show case counter in the front part of the store and put a price on every cake and every loaf in the case—just a figure; and it's right here you'll find response to figures.

Your very "select" high-class bakery will frown upon such a thing. While the frown is on you're selling cake, and before long your volume jumps 25 per cent.

This has recently been done.

After Hours.—The man who has "taste for reading" is to be pitied.

It was Oliver Goldsmith who said "The first time I read an excellent book it is to me just as if I had gained a new friend; when I read over a book I have perused before, it resembles the meeting with an old one." Cultivate the reading habit and cut out this aimless street-wandering habit if you want to get some real pleasure out of life and the things that pertain to life. Hours and hours nightly wasted, when the hours could be improved by simply commanding the companionship of the mighty teachers and lofty thinkers of the past and present.

Go on over to the library and pick out the book that appeals to you. History, travel, fiction, religion, business, astronomy, geometry, any book that you think would make you a better, brighter, more companionable man you may have for the asking.

It's wicked to be ignorant.

autumn caught fish to ship mackerel containing more or less summer fish mixed with autumn, but last year one went further than that. A purchase of a lot of fancy No. 2 autumn mackerel was confirmed by letter by the seller, was paid for as usual and were mostly sold, and on their arrival before shipping from the dock, we examined them as we always do, and found them an inferior quality of summer fish, which, of course, we would not ship to our customers, but delivered others, paying considerable more money, as the market had advanced nearly $6 per barrel. The broker who took charge of them made repeated efforts to sell them, but the quality was so poor that at no time could he get a bid of $5 per barrel until the beginning of the European war, when during the excitement he was able to sell at $10 per barrel, having carried them for eight months.

September Failures Show Heavy Increase.

un & Co.'s Report Shows That in Every Mercantile Line September, 1914, Was Much More Disastrous Month Than September, 1913.

The month of September had a rather decided increase in the number of mercantile failures, particularly in grocery and general store lines. In fact some increase is shown in all lines by R. G. Dun's official report.

The figures are as follows:—

General Stores.—September, 1914, 115; liabilities, $719,081; September 1913, 97; liabilities, $759,225.

Groceries.—September, 1914, 87; liabilities, $1,317,441; September, 1913, 224; liabilities, $865,500.

Clothing and Furnishing.—September, 1914, 127; liabilities, $1,576,499; September, 1913, 76; liabilities, $595,425.

Dry Goods.—September, 1914, 4; liabilities, $572,514; September, 1913, 41; liabilities, $489,100.

Shoes, Rubbers, Etc.—September, 1914, 34; liabilities, $939,504; September, 1913, 27; liabilities, $295,900.

Hardware.—September, 1914, 1; liabilities, $2,425,115; September, 1913, 26; liabilities, $251,500.

is a characteristic every merchant must possess if he desires to succeed in building up a satisfactory Tea business and the degree to which he possesses it will be measured by his Tea sales. Apropos of this subject, the following clipping should be inspiring as well as interesting to each and every merchant who is ambitious, hard-working and desirous of success:—

“In all business it is the persevering man that comes out ahead. If the truth were known, many a business genius is nothing but personified persistence; and quite often he owes his success more to dogged determination than to extraordinary talents. The sea of business has its flood-tides and ebb-tides, and it is when trade reaches the low-water mark that the pessimists and weak-willed drop out. They forget that the tide must change because of a fixed law. No doubt, the difference between success and failure can be measured by perseverance. The man who will not admit the word failure in his thoughts is sprinkling salt on the tail of achievement. While the man who groans, grunts and grumbles, and thinks failure possible, is trying to catch it with a bass drum. The man who prepares for poor business gets it. The way to be successful is to think success—and the way to have good business is to go after it.”

The grocer who believes he can increase his Tea business has made great strides toward accomplishing that end. He knows it can be done and he will work and persevere to accomplish his object. Without these convictions it is impossible to obtain results. In waging this battle for a greater Tea business, it will help you wonderfully if you use PARKE'S GOLD CAMEL SELECTED TEAS. It is impossible to obtain permanent results unless you use quality Tea that is better than the average.

Shelbyville, Ind., Oct. 18.—Obidiah M. Johnson, grocer, held a reception in his store here to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of his entrance into business.

Johnson's store has not changed in any particular since 1874. He has not added to the two small show-cases with which he started in business; boxes and barrels still line the aisles of the store, which is still lighted with kerosene lamps. He boasts he has increased his business without a delivery service or any other concessions to "new-fangled" business notions.

The New Federal Commission Law and How It Affects the Trade.

Philadelphia, October 22, 1914.

To the Editor,

Dear Sir:—The Trade Commission Bill has finally passed both Houses of Congress, receiving the signature of the President.

The operation of this law and the review of business matters by the Commission will probably be of quite as much importance to the manufacturing and mercantile interests of the country as the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission is to the transportation interests.

You will, therefore, doubtless read with close interest the inclosed copy of a statement made, at our request, by our counsel, Felix H. Levy, Esq., 37 Liberty street, New York City.

It would further appear that the conference which was held by us with President Wilson, on July 29th, has tended to aid the business interests of the country in bringing about the passage of legislation framed in the light of reason and with a recognition of the interests of the business community.

THOS. A. FERNLEY,

Secretary Wholesale Dry Goods Association.

With the above came a copy of the opinion of Mr. Levy, a part of which we reproduce:—

The law which establishes the Federal Trade Commission was signed by the President on September 26, 1914. The particular portion of the new law which interests the business community is contained in Section 5, as follows:—

"Unfair methods of competition in commerce are hereby declared unlawful. The Commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships or corporations, except banks and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce."

It seems unnecessary at this time to express any opinion with regard to these powers of investigation, for the reason that, in general, they are the same powers as have been heretofore possessed and exercised by the Bureau of Corporations. Accordingly, the provisions in the new law with respect to investigations do not constitute any radical departure from the existing law.

The provisions above quoted from Section 5 does, however, constitute an innovation which is likely to prove of great importance to the business community of this country.

During the debates in the Senate in connection with this new provision, a great variety of views were expressed concerning the meaning which the Commission would give to the phrase "unfair methods of competition." It is generally agreed that the Commission will interpret this phrase to include all oppressive, dishonest and unethical practices contrary to the usual course of fair business dealing, and especially such practices as are pursued with the intent or result of creating a monopoly. In this respect the new provision is intended to supplement the existing Sherman law, which has not in any way been amended and will remain in its present form.

If thus interpreted, the new provision will probably prove to be very important to the business interests of this country. On the one hand, it will permit merchants who consider themselves aggrieved by any wrongful practices on the part of the great trusts to present, in a prompt and convenient form, their complaints to the new Commission, with the probability that a much speedier decision will be obtained than through the procedure formerly necessary under the Sherman law. On the other hand, business concerns, especially large corporations, will be able to obtain a speedy decision on the question whether business methods used by them are unlawful. This opportunity will arise through the fact that if any such practices are of doubtful legality, it is altogether likely that one or more concerns affected by such practices would make complaint concerning the same to the new Commission and thereby enable the matter to be authoritatively determined. In this way many of the questions concerning the legality of which the business community has expressed doubt can be definitely and promptly decided, with the probability that after the new Commission has been in existence for a reasonable length of time a sufficiently large number of decisions will have been rendered by it, on a variety of different subjects, to furnish guidance to the business community upon other similar methods of business procedure which business men may contemplate adopting.

It is obvious from the foregoing that the operations of the new law justify close attention upon the part of the business community, both in respect to merchants resorting to it for relief against unethical practices of competitors, and in availing themselves of it for guidance and instruction with respect of any business methods which a merchant might wish to inaugurate, but as to the legality of which he may be in doubt. In short, there is every reason to believe that the new Commission will in a large measure furnish "the advice, the definite guidance and information" which President Wilson in his message to Congress stated to be the principal purpose for establishing a Trade Commission.

The President has announced that he will not appoint the new Commission until December, so that the new law will not become operative until that time.

ers of agricultural implements and her farm operating equipment. This industry brings its representatives into a peculiarly intimate relation with agricultural conditions not enjoyed by other industries. This relation gives a clear and accurate knowledge of general business conditions in the agricultural field.

The responsibility imposed on the American farmer by the war is tremendous, for this country will be called on as never before to help feed the nations of Europe. To set the wheels of industry and commerce in motion, credit, confidence and courage are needed, and as we believe the banker can lead the way to a resumption of industry, we respectfully recommend his careful consideration the following:—

(1) Urge upon the farmer who has invested his grain not to speculate on the fluctuation of future prices.

(2) Recommend to the farmer of the South to diversify his crops. Experience has shown that a one-crop country cannot continue to bring prosperity to its farmers. The great wheat States of the Dakotas are diversifying. Our cotton States should do likewise.

(3) Preach preparedness for the 1915 harvest. Care in seed selection, proper tillage and cultivation will bring increased crops to meet the increased demands. More intensive cultivation quite as much as increased acreage will bring prosperity to the farmers.

(4) Increase the number of farms raising stock, and thereby secure a natural fertilizer for the soil. Cattle, hogs and poultry mean ready money and bank accounts.

(5) Secure for the agricultural community the benefits provided in the new currency law by creating a demand for the early opening of the various Federal Reserve Banks.

(6) Discourage all speculation, but encourage the expansion of legitimate business in the rural communities by a reasonable extension of credit.

We hear on all sides that the European war has left the door wide open for this country to enter and secure the markets of the world. This cannot be done in a day or in a year. Let us first bring this country's industries back to their normal condition. This must be done before an increased foreign trade can be secured. Yours truly,

E. W. McCULLOUGH,
Secretary National Implement and Vehicle Association.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The market shows no change for the week, though the undertone is still somewhat soft. Some teas, not only low grades, but the better grades, are being bought by the foreign countries now at war, Germany particularly, and this tends to strengthen the prospects somewhat. Also a number of vessels have been sunk by the belligerents, destroying about 9,000,000 pounds of tea. This is a factor. The demand for tea is only fair.

Coffee.

The coffee market is unchanged and both dull and weak. Brazil's financial condition, owing to the war, is still depressed, and all grades of Rio and Santos coffee are feeling the effects. The market is in buyer's favor throughout. Mild grades are unchanged and also in buyer's favor. Java and Mocha unchanged.

Sugar.

The sugar market is steadily weakening and raws have been sold during the week around $4\frac{1}{4}$ cents. Most of the refiners have dropped their prices during the week to a 5.80-cent basis for granulated, and some second hand holders are reselling at slightly below. The market is weak and further declines seem almost certain unless something happens to prevent. The demand for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is dull at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup dull at ruling prices. Molasses quiet and unchanged.

Fish.

Mackerel is in rather unsettled condition, and nobody knows exactly what the situation is. The independents are having difficulty getting supplies, and there are intimations that the new combination has won them over. The combination has plenty of mackerel, although small sizes do not seem over plentiful. The demand for mackerel is fair, but the large buyers are not buying much, as they don't know what the market is going to do. Irish mackerel is not cutting much figure. Shore mackerel very dull and not wanted. Cod, hake and haddock very dull and unchanged in price. Imported sardines show no change in price; everything still very scarce and firm, particularly French and Portuguese. Norwegian sardines are more plentiful and relatively cheaper than the others. Salmon of all grades is unchanged and quiet.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are in very bad shape, from the packers' standpoint. In a large way No. 3s are freely quoted at 65 cents, and No. 2s at 45 cents, f. o. b. factory. If the packers can be believed, these prices are below the cost of production, though everybody seems willing to sell at them, and buyers are not very eager. There is some indication that speculators are beginning to look at tomatoes with some interest, and already there has been some buying which could hardly be other than speculative. No figures are available as yet as to the year's pack. Corn is steady to firm on supposed short pack; demand quiet. Peas unchanged and dull, but with some inquiry for cheap peas. Apples very weak and dull. California canned goods show no change and no special demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are neglected, but coast holders are trying to think and trying to say they are firmer. Peaches are still very cheap and unchanged in price; demand light. Apricots also are much cheaper than they were, though not so cheap when compared with peaches. Raisins are unchanged; demand light. Currants unchanged and quiet. Other dried fruits dull at ruling prices.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are firm on a basis of $2.50 in a large way, due to scarcity. Marrows, on the other hand, are weak and declined. The present quotation is $3.50 in a large way. California limas are steady on about the same basis as last week—5 cents in a large way in New York. On spot the market in large quantities is 6 cents. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged; demand quiet.

Butter.

The butter market is active at present prices, with a good consumptive demand for all grades. The quality is as good as usual for the season and the market is healthy. No important change seems in sight.

Eggs.

New-laid fresh eggs are scarce and meet with ready sale at present prices. Storage eggs are slow and prices are nominal. Receipts of fresh eggs are light, and do not seem likely to increase soon.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm and prices are unchanged, with a moderate consumptive demand. No change seems in sight. Good quantities of cheese are said to be going out of the country, which strengthens the market. If there is any change, an advance is likely.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are dull and in light consumptive demand. The market shows a downward tendency. Stocks are reported heavy. Pure lard is firm and in fair consumptive demand at unchanged prices. Compound lard is dull at $\frac{1}{4}$ cent off. Barrel pork, canned meats and dried beef are all firm and unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

The downward movement as to prices in the tomato market appears to have run its course, if the character of the buying last week may be accepted as a fair basis for judging the outlook. But one can never be sure of what is going to happen in connection with canned tomatoes. The tomato season of 1914 is certainly making a record that upsets all previous experiences. For instance, a season without a "glut" of the raw fruit cannot be recalled by the oldest men in the business, and the young man of to-day will probably tell about it to his grandchildren. What of the output this year? The official statistics of the National Cannery Association will tell us, around December 1st, all about the size of the pack. Meantime, all other figures are merely guess-work.

The low prices attracted many orders for tomatoes to this market, and some large-sized lots changed owners. The shipments were more widely scattered than they were during the previous two or three weeks, which indicates that this market is the cheapest source of supply at the ruling quotations. The weak feeling that came over the canners suddenly last week seems to be passing away, and their bankers are not now so anxious for the remainder of their loans to be paid. Consequently, there is less pressure to sell.

The new fall crop of spinach is now being canned; the quality is choice, and because of this fact there is an excellent demand for it. The October crop of string beans is about over, and when there is an improvement in the general market conditions, this article will probably advance in price. Sauer kraut is a shade lower. Sweet potatoes are fairly active and firm. In the other lines of vegetables there was nothing doing this week outside of the daily run of small orders for the different lines of goods, scarcely any of which were entirely neglected.

The new pack of pears was active this week, for all of the different grades, but more especially for the high-class fruit in heavy syrup. It was the only article in canned fruits that showed any life during the week, and it is well worth attention now. Whether or not the crop is really short, remains to be seen, but this is, evidently, a good selling season for pears. Pie peaches were more active, perhaps, than at any time this season, the orders this week having increased in size as well as number. They look cheap at to-day's prices. All the other fruits were dull enough during the week.

The fall season for canning oysters opens October 15th. Note prices for the new pack, for shipments as wanted.

The trade still continues operations on a hand-to-mouth scale, due, in a measure, to slow collections. The cotton situation still causes considerable anxiety, so that taken altogether, the situation remains unsatisfactory, and with the slow demand for export, business is generally inactive and prices are ruling a trifle easier. It is generally felt that the present situation is bound to be but temporary, as it is clearly evident that operators are beginning to formulate plans to capture the increased demand that is expected when business conditions settle down to a normal status.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast indicate a continued slow movement, trade, on account of the cotton situation, being unsatisfactory, planters still holding off awaiting better prices. At New Orleans the demand is showing marked improvement. American, Java and new crop Japans moving freely at slightly reduced prices.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, conditions show decided toning up. Millers in some sections report working double shifts to supply the demand. Prices are firm with no indications of change at present.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple market continues strong and active here for good stock for prompt shipment. The output continues away below normal, with the demand great enough to absorb offerings.

Prime quality, in small lots, continues to bring $5\frac{1}{4}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ cents, in 50-pound boxes, with cartons $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound higher.

Choice quality is obtainable at $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound over these prices.

There has been decidedly more demand for carload lots, sellers getting 5 cents per pound for prime.

There is not so good a demand for November or December shipment, but sellers are not willing to shade prices for these later deliveries.

Raspberries are firmer, with a better inquiry, and it is difficult to buy to-day under $21\frac{1}{2}$ cents, f. o. b., in barrels.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Business during the last few weeks has been very quiet in our line of business, but this week has brought about quite a change. There is a decidedly better feeling amongst the trade, and we have had a great many more inquiries and a great deal more business, and more cheerful business than during the few weeks past, but this is only natural. When the war started every one hadling imported goods secured a large share of supplies than would be bought under ordinary circumstances. Naturally, when the trade is well supplied business is bound to be flat until the supplies have gone into consumption. The demand during the last week has clearly not been a speculative one, judging from the orders that we have received.

Holland herrings are very scarce in this market. The last Dutch steamer brought a very small supply, and part of the herrings which arrived were found to be of unsatisfactory quality. Those that were good went immediately into consumption. This scarcity of Holland herring has naturally had a good effect on the market for Scotch herrings, and there has been a good business done in Scotch herrings during this last week.

Norway herrings continue in very good demand, and prices in Norway show a decided advance.

Some supplies of Norwegian and Portuguese sardines have come to hand, but practically all the lots that were well-known brands and of good quality found ready sale. Naturally, when goods are scarce, and when shipping facilities are not very plentiful, good friends abroad seem to think that America will consume almost anything and they are likely to ship over here a good deal of trash, but our American buyers are not tempted even by the scarcity to take in stuff that is not readily salable, and they seem to stick to well-known brands and to good quality, especially as long as they can be bought at reasonable prices, which as a whole show very little advance over prices quoted before the war started.

Nothing has come forward in the line of French sardines or in the line of French or Belgian sprats. We had letter to-day from our sardine pack in France, whose principal factory is located at Nantes. They write that practically all they could use is requisitioned as soon as the goods are ready for the army. Consequently they find almost impossible to ship any goods to us, although their factories are working overtime. The packers from whom we receive our largest supply of sprats were located at Ostend in Belgium, and now that this town has been captured by the Germans, we do not know what will become of the factory there, and whether we shall be able to again get supplies from there. We have had no news, which is only natural.

There have been large arrivals of Norway mackerel and quite a little business has been done. There has been no trouble whatever to dispose of real one, fat autumn mackerel, but, unfortunately, a lot of Norway mackerel has arrived here which showed poor or mixed quality, and receivers of these fish are having troubles of their own. On the whole, prices for Norwegian mackerel are very reasonable at the present time, and it is the general belief that prices are likely to show a smart advance before long.

MARKET NOTES.

Cranberries are in poor demand and are selling at very low prices—$1.50 per crate for the best. The quality is very fair.

Florida grapefruit has taken a slump and $2.75 per box is now top. From here the price drops to 75 cents. The quality of much of the receipts is poor.

Apples are unchanged and still on a very low basis—$1.25 to $3.25 per barrel. The demand is fair.

Chestnuts are still ruling very low—$1 to $1.50 per bushel, with very fancy stock bringing $2. Much of the receipts are wormy and bad.

Wilmington (Del.) Jobber in Trouble.

Joseph R. Richardson, former secretary and treasurer of the Joseph R. Richardson Co., wholesale grocers, of Wilmington, Del., which went into the hands of a receiver last July, was on Thursday held in $1,000 bail on a charge of obtaining goods by false pretenses, for a further hearing Monday, following a preliminary examination before Magistrate Buckley. Richardson is alleged to have obtained groceries valued at $661 from C. F. Bonsor & Co., of Philadelphia, from March until July 4th, by making what are alleged to have been false statements concerning the amount of goods owned by his company. Counsel for Richardson concluded at to-day's hearing that no criminal charge could be supported, as it was the Bonsor company's duty to have satisfied itself as to the true conditions of the Richardson company before shipping goods on credit.

Dry Goods—Notions—Knit Wear

Silk Dress Goods "Made in America" Almost Exclusively. Advanced Prices on Account of War a Fake.

Speculation has been rife as to what quantity of silks of all kinds—dress goods, linings, ribbons, hosiery, knit wear, etc.—consumed or used in the United States, was of domestic manufacture and what imported. The impression in lay circles and among merchants is not altogether clear as to just what credit should be given American manufacturers for their enterprise, skill and foresight in not only placing this country in the front rank of silk producers, but also as commanding the attention of the world for the variety, beauty and artistic designs of their fabrics. An authority on the subject, one of the largest and best-known domestic manufacturers, supplies convincing information in the following communication to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World":—

South Manchester, Conn.,
October 15, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In relation to the status of the silk industry and the effect of the war upon it, I inclose a table showing the census figures of manufactures for the year 1909 and the value of the imports, duty included for the same year, as follows:—

| | 1909. | Value of Manufactures. | Imports, Duty Paid. |
|--|-------------|---------------------------|------------------------|
| Total | | $196,911,667 | $49,940,335 |
| Broad silks, including tapestries | 109,441,146 | | 11,930,495 |
| Velvets and plushes .. | 6,872,758 | | 3,636,500 |
| Ribbons ... | 32,744,873 | | 946,643 |
| Sewing and machine twist | 10,521,074 | | 7,082 |
| Laces, em- broideries, threads, etc. | 11,994,395 | | 15,738,420 |
| Hosiery and knit goods | 4,992,779 | | |

The figures as here given are made so as to form as ready a comparison as possible and are not exactly in the same tables as the census or import figures present them. From this it will be seen that only about one-fifth of the silk manufactures used in the United States are imported, and that approximately only one-tenth of the silks from which dresses are made are imported, one-third of the velvets and plushes, about 3 per cent. of the ribbons, practically none of the sewing silks and about half the laces, embroidery and hosiery. Most of the hosiery is made in the United States, although it is included in the classification with miscellaneous imports in the table of imports.

The silk business is chiefly judged in the minds of women by the materials from which they make dresses, in which case only about one-tenth of the silk goods used in the United States is imported. One-third to one-half of this is made up of the cheapest and poorest silks, imported from China and Japan. Similar goods are imported from Europe in amount probably to make up one-half of the silk dress goods of cheap, poor materials. The other half of such goods is very largely of high-class merchandise, made on hand looms in very elaborate patterns and very small quantities, goods which in general retail for $5 per yard and over.

Therefore, practically all of the good, medium priced, yarn-dyed, piece-dyed and printed plain goods, and a very considerable proportion of the fancies, are made in the United States; and the goods from which most American women make their dresses are manufactured here, and the woman who is told that the price of the plain goods of any kind has had to be very heavily advanced because of the war is being fooled. Silk prices have not advanced; in fact, have decreased for several years.

The immediate effect of the war has been to reduce to a low level the prices of raw silk, and to considerably demoralize the market for silk goods because of the difficulty of many of the smaller manufacturers to secure reasonable accommodation from the commission houses and bankers, which has caused a considerable liquidation of stocks. It is probable that when this liquidation has occurred prices will again harden and be restored to the level of last winter. There is very little probability that they will be higher in any case than they were last year.

There has been some difficulty on the part of small dyers and manufacturers in securing sufficient dye-stuffs, which are manufactured almost exclusively in Germany, to produce all of the shades which are desirable; but this condition is not likely to be a serious one, as there has already been some importations received, and it is reported that there are more upon the way.

The importations of raw silk come very largely from Japan, and of the remainder by far the larger part from Italy, neither of which sources of supply have been interrupted, and there is plenty of raw material for manufacturers. The silk industry in the United States is therefore in a position to produce whatever goods the country desires and in as great quantity as it is able to purchase. The only difficulty at present seems to be the financial situation and the hesitancy of American merchants to buy goods because of the difficulty of financing. The silk business does not anticipate a boom business this year or any material advance in prices.

Yours very truly,
CHENEY BROS.
Horace B. Cheney.

"Onyx" Brand Applies to Under- wear as Well as Hosiery. Sweep- ing Court Opinion.

When Lord & Taylor, owners and originators of the world-famous "Onyx" trade-mark, New York, instituted an infringement suit against Harris Wolf and others, trading as Wolf & Sons, of Cincinnati, for the use of the same brand on underwear, mention of the fact was made in this department of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World." Recently Judge Sater, of the United States District Court, Southern District of Ohio, handed down a decision upholding the plaintiff's contention and a decree was issued granting Lord & Taylor the injunction asked against the use of the "Onyx" trade-mark by the Cincinnati concern. The court, in maintaining the right of the New York firm to the exclusive use of the trade-mark as applied to underwear as well as hosiery, based its decision to a large extent upon the interpretation, after a review of the standard dictionaries, that hosiery is a generic term, which includes underwear of all kinds, as well as stockings and socks.

It appears that Lord & Taylor registered the word "Onyx" in 1887, and for seven years following 1897 was actually used on their line of underwear, and then discontinued in that connection because of changes in style. In 1907 the firm reregistered the trade-mark to be employed on hosiery, the court saying this reregistry was sufficiently broad to cover underwear as well.

New Shades in Broadcloth. Plain Colors in Dress Goods.

Jobbers and manufacturers of dry goods, notions, dress materials, knit wear, etc., who sell direct to retailers in the East, admit the general merchants are buying conservatively. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has explained this situation by the cautious attitude of bankers and brokers, who practically finance many concerns, or at least extend accommodations, during the buying season. The Mid-West and Northwest sections, with their tremendous crops, are more favored, and therefore the merchants are purchasing more freely. At the same time their orders are well within bounds, a condition reflected in the weekly review of the trade by Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, who say:—

"The continued warm weather is partly responsible for the dullness in the retail dry goods business, which has, in turn, retarded the wholesale business. Merchants are slow to make commitments on spring lines, although orders are fair from agricultural sections. Collections in sections of the country where crops are well diversified are good."

A trifle more cheerful in tone is the advice from the John V. Farwell Co., as follows:—

"The optimistic view taken early in regard to the wool dress goods situation is more than realized at present, as sales show decided gains in this class of merchandise. One of the strongest factors in bringing about this result is the phenomenal demand for broadcloths. Early in the season the best selling colors were black, navy, green and negre brown, today the range of colors has broadened and there is a good demand for plum shades, dark reds and many pastel shades, especially those that border on green effects. The American demand for chiffon broadcloth has cleaned up the English market of all French and German broadcloths.

"A demand for black dress goods continues, with black broadcloth and silk and wool poplins leading. Reports from Belfast show that the linen market is getting in a serious condition from the supply point of view. Up to last week Belfast was getting a little flax from Belgium. Further exports of flax and yarn from Belgium have been forbidden, consequently linens at Belfast are being held very firmly at advanced prices.

"Silk vestings are attracting particular attention at present—an unusual demand having been created for their use in trimming for the new style capes, military coats, street dresses, etc. In silk stripes and checks are showing activity, although printed effects in silks promise well for spring owing to the beautiful and wide range of patterns produced this season by the manufacturers to offset the dress goods tendency toward plain colors."

Sheer Cottons Interest Retailers.

Comparisons of prices on cotton goods offered now and those sold a year ago often show declines of from 5 to 7 cents per pound on staple merchandise. This is an illustration of the radical change that is taking place, and a general revision of prices to lower levels is looked for soon, or no later than early in November. Merchants are therefore waiting to see which way the "cat will jump" before ordering beyond immediate necessities. Brown goods are being offered and sold more freely. Prints are moving slowly. Dress gingham are being taken by small town merchants in fair quantities. Bleached cottons have been lowered in price. Many fine sheer goods are coming to the market and they are proving interesting to retailers who are looking ahead to spring. Fashion's change seem to be bringing about a strong leaning toward merchandise that could not be sold a year ago, even with concessions.

Known Brands of Merchandise to be Advanced in Price.

Regarding any increase in price of well-known branded goods as against unknown merchandise, an interesting question is now being discussed. Fluctuations in the price of "orphan" goods, some of which are said to be the result of manipulation for private profit, contrasted with the stable price of advertised merchandise, the manufacturers of which contend that advertising makes it possible to produce a better product at less cost and still maintain a steady demand. The American Fair Trade League has taken a hand in the matter by sending to members a letter requesting candid answers, in strict confidence, to the appended two questions:—

"1. Is there a reasonable possibility that the resale price on your products will advance in the course of the present war? 2. Will such advances be limited to actual advances of prices of raw materials used in making and packing your goods? What other possible causes for such advances occur to you?" Extracts from some of the most significant of the answers received, every one of the writers an advertiser of trade-marked goods, many among the most prominent in the country, follow:—

Men's Underwear.—While the price of dyestuffs, etc., has advanced, there will be no advance in the resale price of our products. The fact that we have always advertised a resale price for our merchandise at 50 cents per garment and guaranteed to give the consumer satisfaction without any limit or other strings to our guarantee, excludes the possibility of our increasing this resale price or cheapening our product in any way. In other words, we have found that giving a bona fide guarantee with our merchandise forces us to make a better every year. We are obliged to stand these losses on increased prices ourselves.

Men's Furnishings.—There will be no advance in prices to jobber, retailer or consumer. We maintain the same prices, regardless of the advances that come and go in materials that we use. On the occasion of the tremendous advance in rubber, several years ago, the price was not advanced.

Hosiery.—There is no likelihood whatsoever that the resale price of our hosiery will advance in the course of the present war. The prices of our hose at retail have been practically staple for years and do not look forward to any changes whatsoever.

Handkerchiefs.—There is a reasonable possibility that in linen handkerchiefs which we manufacture for men there will be an advance in the cost of the linen cloth to us. We therefore shall be obliged in all probability toward the close of the war, or certainly by the beginning of next year, to charge the retail dealers an advanced price in order to cover the amount of the increased cost to us. This may, however, take the form of giving a larger count in the linen than we have been giving and maintaining the scale of prices the same as heretofore.

Knit Goods.—We do not control the sale prices of our knit goods product. Our regular price list has not been changed for the past 15 years, and will not change under present war conditions.

Silk Gloves.—We do not anticipate having to raise the price of our gloves, although everything we purchase that goes into the manufacture of our gloves has been advanced to a considerable extent. We expect to maintain our present prices.

Next Year's Hosiery Outlook.

Knit hosiery for the fall of 1915, in simple form, is being shown by first class makers; but the major lines may not be ready until November 1st. Prices on knit hosiery is expected to be about the same as a year ago. Cashmere hosiery with price advances, is also one of the new next fall lines just being introduced. The price on cotton hosiery in view of the threatened further advance in raw material. Some foreign goods are being received, but not enough to affect the market.

Men's Sweaters a Preferred Line.

Men's sweaters are in demand, and about settled the mills of any concern making these goods will be for some time to come. It is sure that in the coming year will be higher in 1914. The call for knit goods from European concerns is becoming more intense weekly, and it is having an influence on prices. General merchants with these facts before them are coming into the market for the current and next spring's supply. Jobbers are buying for stock only as prices are favorable, or to fill orders from retailers.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Soup made from this flour is more wholesome and delicious than home soup made from whole beans or cereals and much more economical than canned soup."

Cotton Underwear Figures Fluctuating.

Reductions in the price of certain underwear products are not altogether to the liking of all manufacturers, though merchants are watching the market with equanimity and taking every advantage which may come along. It seems the cuts so far announced cover low end balbriggans exclusively; and buyers, it is said, are mistaken who conclude from this condition that a general disturbance in price is pending. Certain it is also that many jobbers have commitments for the current and winter season to take up at higher figures and therefore are not a little perturbed by the action of mills which sell direct to the retailer revising their list downward in harmony with the lower price of cotton.

Reports that heavy purchases of underwear for foreign account may have a tendency to stiffen the market are given due publicity for the benefit it may create on the mind of the merchant who may contemplate placing orders. The latter, however, is wise to the situation, is buying cautiously and is not to be misled into overbuying at any price by wars or rumors of wars, and the horrid consequences thereof on raw material and other essential construction ingredients. It is the general opinion that cotton goods of every description are on the toboggan and that everybody interested is figuring accordingly.

Boots Shoes Findings

Market Status of Shoes and Polishes.

As a consequence of direct inquiry, a shoe manufacturer whose name and trade-mark appears frequently in the public prints, says of future prices:—

Ultimately there is no question but that the resale price on our product will advance. We were up against a very hard proposition regarding leather before the war, and, of course, the situation is now acute. We hardly look for an advance on the low-shoe season, but with the advent of fall business, a year from now, we would say shoes would go up at least 50 cents, and possibly a dollar a pair. We hardly look for increases excepting in raw material, as our labor seems to be well paid in proportion to other trades.

Shoe polishes are an important item in the findings stock of the general store, and of their price a manufacturer, included in the above category, replies:

There is no probability that the resale price of our products will advance during the course of the present war. There is absolute certainty that they will not advance before January 1st. In case an advance is absolutely necessary, such advance will be limited to the additional cost of raw material. It is our intention, even though we are paying increased prices for dyes, colors, shellacs and waxes, to still maintain our price list according to the schedule that we have advertised for many years, believing that it will be better for us to absorb a temporary loss than to alarm our trade by allowing fluctuations in our price list.

An Ingenious Plan for Attracting Trade.

Ingenuity, if not always artistic, effects in the display of merchandise is a wonderful help in the sale of shoes. No pretense is made to criticize the merchant in the small towns for a woeful lack of this faculty in many, many instances; but at the same time storekeepers who have shoes for sale should make every effort to bring their good points to the direct attention of his customers. While adults are chiefly aimed at, the wants of the children should not be overlooked, let alone neglected. They are buyers as well as their parents, through whom the appeal should be made, examples of which are given by the "Shoe Retailer," as follows:—

Recently, in Baltimore, a shoe dealer had great success in pushing his line of children's sandals by the publicity gained from a very novel window display and his unique campaign of advertising. The window display represented a playground, with chips and logs strewn about, while in the center was a sand pile with which several youngsters were having the time of their lives. The children were garbed in rompers and sandals, and looked decidedly cool and comfortable. In the foreground were a couple of tree stumps, on each of which reposed a pair of sandals, one white, one brown, and tacked to the stump was a tag announcing the price.

The window itself was catchy enough to attract attention, but the merchant gained a large and appreciative audience and more than doubled his sales by his original manner of mail advertising. He secured the names and addresses of all school children between the ages of 6 and 12, and mailed them a circular letter—filling in the name at the top so as to make it more personal, telling them to come and see his window, and to take note of the advantage of its sandals for summer wear, showing that they combine all the freedom and comfort of going barefoot, with the neat appearance of ordinary shoes. All children are flattered to receive personal letters, and it is safe to say that 9 out of 10 who received one from this merchant went to see the display, and that having seen it a large per cent. induced their parents to buy them a pair.

A St. Louis dealer also enlisted the sympathy of the children by his appeals to them. In the background of the window was draped a large American flag, and in front were a sample line of good substantial school shoes. The majority of children are very loyal to their school or club, or any organization to which they belong, and the merchant took advantage of this to announce that with every pair of shoes of this line sold within a certain time a coupon would be given, and that for a certain number of coupons an American flag would be presented.

The announcement had the desired effect, for a number of Sunday schools, bands of Boy Scouts, and others went to work to secure the flags. Shoes are an indispensable article of wear—they could be purchased here as cheaply and to as good advantage as any place—and the result was that there was a concentrated buying from that particular store, the child being proud to contribute his share towards his school flag, especially as it did not entail asking any money or favors of any kind from his parents.

Perhaps the general store may not always have window room for such elaborate displays; but they are offered as suggestions, which may be put to practical use in a different way, but equally as effective. The good will of the young element in a community is not to be disregarded with impunity in a scheme of profitable merchandising.

South American Meat Coming Here Regularly.

Exports of meat from the Argentine Republic to the United States continue on a liberal scale, shipments during the past week amounting to 30,000 quarters frozen and chilled beef, 6,000 carcasses mutton and 6,000 carcasses lamb, compared with 34,000 quarters of beef and 6,000 carcasses lamb the week previous. Since January 1st exports total 662,000 quarters beef, 109,000 carcasses mutton and 76,200 carcasses lamb.

Why Not Sell Imported Cheese?

You will sell more cheese if you tell your customers you are buying your Emmenthaler, Roquefort, Camembert and other fancy cheese from Carl Wilde, Philadelphia's largest cheese importer, because he has the reputation of handling only the best. Owing to his enormous business he is able to sell you at the price of ordinary cheese.

Also—tell him what you need in Delicatessen and Fancy Groceries. His stock is complete and his prices right. Once a customer always a customer.

Bought Simply Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Why Don't You Sell Oleomargarine?

¶ As man to man, will you answer this question?

¶ 1—Is it because you think you have no market for it? We repeat what we said before—that there is not a grocer anywhere, no matter what kind of a business he does, but who can sell Moxley's Oleomargarine. People will buy it to reduce the cost of living, and because they can get out of it all they can get out of butter.

¶ 2—Is it because you believe Oleomargarine is a second class and questionable product? Nothing could be more absolutely wrong. Moxley's Oleomargarine contains all the food value that any butter contains, and it is made in a more cleanly way, for the Government inspects every step.

¶ 3—Is it because you think you can't make a profit on it? You can make more than you make on butter, and still undersell the butter market many cents a pound.

¶ There is not one weak place in Moxley's Oleomargarine as a selling proposition. Think carefully of all we have said.

Can You Fellows Explain This to Me?

D'ye know, I believe as much as anybody does that there's a good man up in the sky looking after everything and everybody. If I didn't believe that I would think I'd got to be more of a darned fool than I just naturally am.

Maybe I ain't always as respectful to him as I ought to be. It's a way people have with somebody they can't see. But that ain't either here or there. There's something or somebody on the job somewhere working the wheels; that I know.

I own up, though, that some of the things the wheels do, when they work, I ain't on to. I can't see it. It don't look to me like being fair. Maybe I ain't got the brains to see all sides of it.

It's the case of my old friend Ben Dinsmore that's getting my goat. That fellow is being handed a raw deal, and I can't see why. He ain't got it coming to him, from anything I can see, and why he's getting it when a lot of grave-robbers that ought to have it, ain't getting it, you can search me. It looks as if the good man above played favorites, though the good book says he don't, they tell me.

Ben is a fellow about fifty years old and strong as an ox outside of one thing. He ought to be good for twenty-five years' more hard work, and what's more, he can't live if he don't work, for he ain't got a thing outside of his store. The store's made him a living for twenty years, and it could go on making him a living for thirty more.

It ain't a big store. He has two clerks outside of himself, and I don't suppose he makes any more out of it than a good week's wages for himself.

Ben's got the worse case of catarrh in his head you ever heard of. Had it all his life, but for the last five years it's been going ahead and now it's awful. It's the kind of catarrh that comes up and makes itself acquainted the minute you come within 100 feet of it. Maybe if the wind's blowing your way, it could do it in two hundred. Believe me, it's fierce. It's got so bad you can't come within six feet of the poor fellow and feel happy.

Ben's done everything anybody ever told him to do for it, from going to the highest priced catarrh doctor in Philadelphia ($10 a visit) to burying a black cat in a graveyard at 4 o'clock in the morning. He ain't neglected it for a minute—sometimes I wonder if he ain't sort of overtrained it.

The thing has just naturally killed Ben's business. You can see how it could do that. One woman after another dropped off—couldn't stand it—and he couldn't either get 'em back or get more to take their places. I suppose you can't blame people for handing themselves as few bad minutes as they can. Still it seems rough, don't it?

It ain't as if Ben could stop it by not waiting on people. If he's anywhere in the store, that's enough.

He don't make any bones about talking of it.

"What am I going to do?" asked me only a month ago. "I could only get rid of this infernal trouble!"

"Why don't you hire a man to run the place?" I said, "and go home a while?"

"I can't afford it. The business won't stand it. After I'd paid a man his wages there'd be nothing left. Especially now when it's down so. I couldn't get a man to do what there is to pay him with now."

"Can't you sell the business and get into something else?" I asked.

"By George, there ain't much to sell," he said. "It's been going down every week for the last months. I couldn't get anything for it."

"Couldn't it be built up?" I said.

"I don't think so—there's too many stores around here now. I can't put it to yourself—would you put money in this business?"

"Why, I—ah—"

"I Have Sold Them for Years"

It is a pleasure for the grocer to sell Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk, because they are such lively sellers and always prove so satisfactory to the customer. Established reputation for purity and quality, together with steady advertising, keep Borden's Brands of Milk moving rapidly from the grocer's shelves. You can handle Borden's Milks with perfect confidence, knowing that every can in every case will sell and give satisfaction.

There are brands of condensed and evaporated milks which do not give satisfaction because of inferior quality, or they will not keep until sold, owing to unscientific, careless or insanitary methods of manufacture, causing many complaints from customers. You can avoid all these complaints by handling only Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk, Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk, St. Charles and Silver Cow Brands of Evaporated Milk. All Borden's Brands, whether sweetened or unsweetened, are made from the highest-grade raw milk, by the most modern method of manufacture, and are guaranteed absolutely pure. Push their sale.

CCLXXXII.—The New Clayton Anti-trust Law and Its Probable Influence on Trade Conditions.

The Clayton anti-trust act, which was signed by the President a few days ago, and is now a law, is the United States Government's latest effort to stop business combinations which restrain trade, interfere with competition, or create monopoly. The Clayton act was passed in order to supply certain deficiencies in the Sherman anti-trust law, which as readers hereof know, is or was this country's main anti-trust act.

It has occurred to me to make some explanation of the Clayton act, particularly as to what influence it will probably have on trade conditions. Naturally everybody in any kind of mercantile business, whether as manufacturer, jobber or retailer, is interested and affected by any combination or plan which touches him either as to buying prices or selling prices, or as to his facilities for buying direct, or as to the amount of competition he is to have. All business combinations of the class which the Clayton law legislates against, touch one or the other of these phases of business.

The Clayton act is a long affair, having twenty-six sections, but a large part of it consists of provisions for enforcing it, and these need not be gone into. The real crux of the act is contained in Sections 2 and 3. Section 2 is as follows:—

Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities, which are sold for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation, or discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade.

This will prevent only such price discriminations as this: A large corporation doing an interstate business wants to break into a certain territory where a competitor is especially strong. Its competitor is weaker financially than itself, and the first corporation therefore enters the territory and cuts the price of its goods to a point so far below its competitor that the latter cannot meet it and live. If it does not meet it, its business is gone, and if it does meet it it will be selling below cost. Result—destruction of the competitor, who had the trade first, and the triumphal entry of the other corporation, accompanied, almost invariably, by an advance in price.

In the old days this scheme could be worked without let or hindrance, and it was. But it will no longer be possible under the Clayton act. There will be no interference, however, with the common practice of selling at one price in one community and at another price in another community, where this is done not to destroy a competitor, or create a monopoly, but merely to meet competition, or for any one of many perfectly legitimate reasons.

The provision at the close of Section 2—that sellers may still select their own customers—means that a manufacturer, or any other seller, may still appoint one merchant in a town to sell his goods exclusively without being accused of creating a monopoly. Such a seller would in fact be creating a monopoly, but it would be a legal monopoly—a monopoly of his own brand, which he has a perfect right to have.

Let me still further emphasize this. Whenever this act declares against monopoly, it always means monopoly of a product rather than a monopoly of one brand of a product. Every proprietary brand is a monopoly of course—it is owned by one man, who can restrict its sale to persons of his own choice. A man may create an iron-clad monopoly of his own brand, and no law can interfere with him. If it is Gold Medal flour, he can absolutely prevent anybody from packing Gold Medal but himself, and he can prevent anybody from selling it except such people as he wants to sell it. But if he seeks to monopolize the whole of the supply of flour that way, he is up against a vastly different proposition. It is the latter class of transaction, rather than the former, that the Clayton law means when it speaks of monopoly.

Section 3 is as follows:—

Sec. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

This is intended to destroy a well known practice, which, however, is not as prevalent now as a few years ago. A manufacturer will go to a dealer and say "my price to you is $1 a dozen, or a pound, or a c if you sell competitive goods a If you will agree not to sell c petitive goods also, the price be 80 cents." Many large cor rations in different lines have p tically frozen out competition this scheme. Whether any la legally prohibit this, I regard a very grave question. My pers opinion is that it cannot and c not. When it is once firmly es lished that a man may sell or re to sell to a given buyer, and i sells, that he may sell on any co tion he cares to lay down, I can see why he may not make this c dition as well as any other—the price will be subject to rel if no competitive goods are hand

As a matter of fact, the langu of the above section permits thi be done where its effect is no "substantially lessen competition tend to create a monopoly." S ers can therefore go on mak those rebate contracts if they show that they do not create mor oly or substantially lessen com titution. A seller doing this mi argue that he was not lessen competition, but on the contr was increasing it, for his comp tor had the right to make the sa kind of a contract with buyers, even a better one. This defe would have considerable force less the 80-cent price, to refer ag to the above illustration, was so below cost that a competitor co not possibly meet it.

These two sections are the m ones in the law, so far as trade are concerned. There provisions preventing corporati from buying the capital stock competitors, where the effect wo be to reduce competition; pro sions prohibiting a person fr being a director of two competit corporations at the same time, a so on.

The method of enforcing the is interesting. Whenever there evidence that somebody is violati the act, the particular Governm commission under whose jurisd tion the matter comes, must not the offender and give him thi days to stop what he is doing. he fails to do it, the commissi asks the United States Circuit Co of Appeals to make an order of p vention or punishment. Of cou the alleged offender can app from the decision of the comm sion and have the matter heard the court.

Another interesting provision is that where a corporation shall commit a violation of the act, it shall be considered the violation of the officers of the corporation who authorized it, ordered it, or did it. A fine is imposed not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding one year or both. For refusal to abate any violation of the act, after notice, the offender is tried for contempt of court and if convicted must pay a fine not exceeding $100 or go to prison for not more than six months.

The United States is not the only complainant who can sue under this act. Anybody who has been injured by somebody else's violation can sue for damages, and if he succeeds he can collect three times the actual damages he can show. No excess is imposed as a penalty. Of course the law covers only persons, firms or corporations doing an interstate business—shipping from State to State, or conducting business in United States territory, i. e., the District of Columbia or the territories. A person doing business wholly within his own State is not subject to the law at all.

Question: A. Baker Barnhart, Lancaster, Pa.—I read your answer to my letter about Briggs Seed Co. Now I am inclosing contract and letter and catalogue so that you can see for yourself. This is the first order I gave to a salesman, but when he was here I asked him if I could depend on the goods and he told me they never, as far as he knew, appointed anybody; that they always fill all of the orders which he receives, so that is about all the light I can give you on the case. Please return order and catalogue.

Answer.—Last week this correspondent wrote to ask whether he could collect from a wholesale seed dealer his damages because they refused to fill an order he had given to one of their salesmen. It seems that the market advanced and he had to pay more. My answer was that if a salesman had authority to accept an order when it was given to him, it was a contract between this respondent and the house and he must make them pay damages for violating it.

He sends me now a catalogue of concern in question, "Briggs Seed & Co., 138 North Water Street, Rochester, N. Y.," called a wholesale list." On the first page

"As Easy to Handle as a Can of Tomatoes"

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is as easy for the grocer to handle as a can of tomatoes or a bottle of pickles. It's ready to sell when you get it. It requires no weighing, no wrapping, no tying—we've done all that for you at our refinery. We pack FRANKLIN SUGAR in CARTONS because the margin in sugar is so small that if you buy it in bulk and weigh it out, put it in bags, stand for the cost of bags, twine, labor and loss by overweight, you LOSE MONEY. FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR enables you to make a PROFIT instead of a LOSS, because it costs you nothing to handle. Your customers like the clean, neat CARTONS and, once having bought FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, will always ask you for it because of its cleanliness, quality and purity.

The Convenience of the "Container"

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is packed in containers holding 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs., according to the grade of sugar, the fastest selling grades not being packed less than 48 lbs. to the CONTAINER and you are thus enabled to buy to suit the needs of your trade. The CONTAINER is a heavy fibre case that is guaranteed to carry its contents in perfect condition, but, is easier for you to open than a box or barrel—a penknife will open it.

appears "terms," and under it these words:—

These quotations are based on our present or estimated supply. We reserve the right to decline orders or to advance prices without notice.

If this correspondent had not had a copy of this catalogue when he gave the order, and if he had not been told and did not know that they reserved the right to turn down orders, without notice, then he can in my judgment hold them responsible for damages. He also sends a printed "Bulk Seed Order" form on which appear more terms, but nowhere is mentioned anything about a salesman having no right to take orders.

Even if you did have this catalogue in your possession, it is still not absolutely clear that the house could "decline orders without notice," if those orders had already been accepted by an authorized salesman. In other words, the salesman's contract would then be his employer's contract, and the latter could not back out of it.

How the Larkin Co. Gets Consumers' Names.

An interesting glimpse into the scheme the Larkin Co. uses to get in touch with householders is supplied by the following letter, which was recently sent to a country town clerk:—

Dear Sir:—We wish to obtain a list of all reputable heads of families (excepting grocers or general storekeepers) who get their mail through the Overton, Neb., post office. We wish the list to include those living outside of the village who use this post office, whether they live on rural routes or not, as well as those living in the village itself. We write you in the hope that you can make up such a list for us.

We will pay for these names in Larkin products at the rate of $1 worth for 100 names. Inclosed is the latest list of our products and prices.

The list should include the names of heads of families only, as we wish to mail printed matter to not more than one member of a household.

It could easily be compiled from the tax roll or poll list. The names of those not heads of families should, however, be omitted and the names of any heads of families not given in the list, added.

A directory published prior to six months ago should not be used unless the names and addresses taken from it are revised to date.

We inclose blanks on which the names may be written; if more are needed, we will supply them. Read carefully the notice at the top of the blanks.

In case you cannot devote any time personally to this work, we hope you will refer this letter to some clerk in your office or other person who can do it. In either case, we will be grateful for your kind assistance.

Please send the list of names to us promptly in inclosed stamped envelope; or should you be unable to supply it and know nobody else who can, please return the blank sheets, so we may take up the matter with some one else without loss of time.

Yours respectfully,
LARKIN Co.

Congress Asked to Investigate Alleged Sugar Manipulations.

Senator Thomas has introduced in the U. S. Senate a resolution directing the Secretary of Commerce to investigate the report of the proposed engrossment of raw sugar in domestic ports and to report the result of such engrossment to the Senate. Mr. Thomas said he learned that immense quantities of sugar are being stored in New York and Philadelphia in the expectation that Great Britain and France will be strong competitors for Cuban sugar in the near future. This would result in advancing the price of raw sugar to such a figure that the refined product in January and February may go for 10 cents a pound. It is probable that the resolution will not receive much attention, owing to the steady decline which is occurring in sugar.

I have a copy of the store paper issued by the Perry Grocery Co., of Durham, N. C. I don't know how often it is issued—I suppose quarterly, for the copy sent me is dated "spring." It is very well printed on fine cream paper. I reproduce the first and third pages. The fourth page, which is only half filled, and the second page, are like the third page, which I reproduce:—

carried out, it always means business. but it doesn't carry it out to suggest such staples as olives, canned goods, syrup, bread, flour, butter, tea and coffee. There is nothing in the least spring-like about those; if they are seasonable at all, they are winter foods.

Turning now to page 3 and the balance of the paper, I think it is good.

the results obtained; it is merely in line of producing as good a piece of printing as possible—one that will be good to look at and satisfying to the eye. While that part of advertising may not bring direct results, it is to give the store a place in the public estimation, which is just as important for future business, as the bringing of results is for the present.

Advancing!

When we can get a better article we get it; when we can do better service we do it. Our old friends shall have our best. New ones solicited on same terms.

OUR "THURSDAY SPECIAL"

Insurgents last fall, has been made a permanent bargain day for consumers. Making a lower price on some necessary article each week, serves as an advertisement, saving consumers money, and keeping our stock right.

BUYING CANNED GOODS

(Fruits and Vegetables)

by the dozen from P. O. Company means a saving of 10 per cent; having a full pantry in case of emergency, and therefore in easy mind. Buying in a larger way is modern and intelligent buying. It eases us delivery expense, and we give it back in 10 per cent discount.

This plan is meeting with greater favor with the people than we ever dreamed of. You are not required to buy a dozen of any article, unless you want to. It may be a dozen of 19 different kinds.

SPRING suggests a change of Food. We have here almost every seasonable article that can be found in a great metropolis, and at lower prices. Following we have selected about "101 Good Things"—the Cream of our stock—prices unchallenged. Everybody will be interested in one or all items herein briefly described.

"THESE ARE OUR JEWELS"

Perry's Own Olives—plain and stuffed.
"Premier" Canned Goods—Fruits and Vegetables.

This is pretty impressive advertising. It distinctly suggests high class and high grade. Speaking of page 1, I think that might possibly have been strengthened. The idea to start with apparently was that spring means a change in food, and a number of suggestions would be made by which consumers could make this change. A very good idea and properly

Something is said about all the goods advertised, and no time is wasted in saying it. Moreover, it is well said, and if read will doubtless convince. I think perhaps the artistic quality of this paper would have been improved by setting the boldface lines in capitals and small letters instead of all capitals. Of course, this would have no bearing on

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Why We Can Guarantee Against Spoilage

The filthiest thing on earth is rennet if made carelessly and under unclean conditions.

If you could see some commercial rennets made you wouldn't let them enter your store.

We guarantee to the absolute limit the perfect cleanliness of James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet, but we have other proof that it's clean—we guarantee it not to spoil. We wouldn't dare guarantee an unclean rennet that way.

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet will also coagulate milk in 2—5 minutes, and in every way will satisfy your most exacting customer.

Costs you $1.50, sells for $3.00. Order some now, before you forget it. All jobbers.

Doesn't This Date Tell You Something?

'This is the date Knight's Cooking Extracts first decorated grocery shelves. Time, skill and experience combined have added to the perfection of these goods each year. If an old lady or a child is sent for a cooking extract without being told to get a certain brand, they'll ask for Knight's by instinct. This name naturally identifies itself with flavoring extracts in their minds. It's a household word and stands for the highest standard of excellence.

Food Inspector Asks Why Groceries and Meat Markets Should be so Unclean

Thinks Stores Where Meats are Sold Particularly Lacking. Lack of Proper Toilet Facilities for Clerks Another Shortcoming. One Sight Seen in a Meat Market. The Bad Back Room.

Most grocers are awake to the need of making necessary improvements, of keeping their stores in proper sanitary condition, providing proper protection against flies, dust and other means of injury to food products; yet, there are a few who do not feel any responsibility in this matter and complain that although they maintain a grocery they are not given proper patronage by the people of their town. Who is to blame for such a condition? There are towns where the citizens send to adjoining towns or cities for their supply of groceries and meats rather than patronize the local dealer, and in some instances they have been justified in such a course. The time has come when the up-to-date grocery will have its place in keeping with the demands of the time, and the food products will be at all times in sanitary shape. It does not necessarily follow that bulk goods may not be used or that the goods must be of the most expensive and latest advertised, but the goods can be kept under proper sanitary condition, uncontaminated with tobacco smoke from every person who desires to gather at the store in the evening to swap jokes and smoke stale tobacco. Codfish will no longer be piled alongside of cookies or butter, and perishable products will be put in shape so that they shall not be made offensive. The basement will be kept as clean and as well ventilated as the store itself, and the back room will no longer be a store room for every discarded product that may find its way into the place. The up-to-date groceryman is endeavoring to please his customers and his customers are becoming more exacting, and rightly so, with regard to the condition of the products which are supplied to them.

In not a few instances the meat market is also far from what it should be. Even though the front shop may appear well, the back room, where the sausage is made, and the basement may be a veritable breeder of filth, and the utensils far from sanitary. It was this class of men who formerly used chemical preservatives to keep their products sweet. To-day they are neglecting the sanitary conditions of the surroundings. Back of the shop may be decayed animal products not properly drawn away or cared for; hides may be either kept in the back room with other articles of food, or in the basement to scent the entire building and to make unpalatable the food products.

In the course of the inspection of groceries, meat markets and other places where food products are sold, in connection with the work of the Food Department of this State, some proprietors of grocery stores have wondered why they received so low a rating. I have asked them these questions: Do you have city water in your store? Do you provide a place for your clerks to wash and do you furnish soap and towels? Do you provide toilets? Is the toilet boarded up? Is it stuck in a dark, old, dismal corner of your basement? Do you have the hams or bacon lying around on a box where dogs and mice have access to the same? Is the refrigerator, the cheese rack, etc., clean? In what "shape" do you keep your basement? Is it ventilated or just a foul dug-out under your store?

A toilet and conveniences for washing are required around a store or place where food is handled. It takes off twenty points from the score in this State where these are not provided. The toilet should be walled up, ventilated from the outside and not merely a platform in the basement or back room that ventilates into the room where food supplies are stored. All stores should frequently be scrubbed and the stock kept in such a condition that scrubbing is possible. The front of the store should not be the place for a store room. It looks very untidy.

In one town of this State, I saw stores where foods are handled that are not suitable and if some of the people who buy their food at these places saw the way it is handled and the places in which it is kept and the care of preparation, it would be a safe guess that the customer would go out with an empty market basket. I believe the customers of any market place should demand the privilege of admittance to the back room, basement and work shop to see how their foods are prepared. It seems that the customer himself is at least half to blame for he should demand better sanitary conditions.

The condition of the average meat market may be much improved. This is especially true with regard to the back room, the basement or the place where sausage is made, and where the trimmings and waste portions of the meat, which are to be used in the preparation of sausage, are handled.

Only recently the writer saw just back of the door leading into a butcher shop a mass of putrefying, decaying products from the slaughter house with millions of maggots developing in the same, and flies so thick that one could hardly see the color of the material. Such a condition is a disgrace to any community. If the consuming public should go into these back rooms, or in the back yard, and see conditions of this kind it would be a long time before meat would have an appetizing effect upon those before whom it was placed.

There is no food establishment that should be kept cleaner than a meat market. There probably is no shop that is easier to keep clean. The meat refrigerator is not a place for a general cold storage plant for fruits, pickles, dairy products, etc. Where we find such a condition we usually find a refrigerator so crowded with barrels, boxes, etc., that a frequent cleaning is impossible. One market basement writer found used as a hide-out. This is a very poor practice as the odor is always going to be more or less of an odor emitted from such a place. The meat blocks, tools and meat tables do not receive the care they should. The meat market should put up a clean, neat appearance. There were none in this city that impressed the writer so on entering your shops.

A Coffee Fraud in Many Respects Amazing.

One of the Best Known New York Coffee Jobbers and Well Known Coffee Broker Convicted of Gross Coffee Substitution in Very Teeth of Many Food Laws. Each Firm Fined $3,000 and Deprived of Citizenship. Facts of a Highly Interesting Case.

New York, Oct. 29, 1914.

The prosecution recently brought by the United States Government in this city against William L. Mitchell, senior member of Mitchell Bros., of this city, a well-known wholesale house, and P. J. Shannon, an equally well-known coffee broker, has been concluded by a verdict of guilty in both cases, and a sentence on both defendants that they pay $3,000 fine and lose their citizenship.

The case is astonishing in that such a daring fraud was perpetrated in the very teeth of the Federal and State food laws.

The facts were these: P. J. Shannon & Co., as brokers, were requested by the Heidemann Coffee Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., to send samples of Bogota. They sent out samples, listing them as Bogota but the coffees submitted were a matter of fact washed Caracra. The Heidemann Coffee Co. ordered 84 bags of sample No. 1 which purported to be a P. A. Bogota. Shannon then went to Mitchell and offered him 16¼ cents for the coffee. After some argument the offer was accepted. Shannon then told Mitchell that the coffee had to be dumped and mixed as it was two lots, and stated that as he had sold the coffee, he would allow Mitchell 16½ cents for the coffee and pay half the cost of dumping and mixing, but requested Mitchell to bill the goods at 17¼ cents and give him the overage when the coffee was paid.

The case was perfectly clear so far as Shannon went—that he had attempted to put it over the Heimann Co. and so make an additional profit. Both Mitchell and Shannon claimed that there was no conversation between them with reference to mixing and misbranding. Mitchell claimed he knew nothing about this feature of the transaction. There was considerable brought out to the effect that Mitchell was exceedingly mad with his clerks when he found out what had been done without his knowledge, but it was also brought out that these clerks were still in the employ of Mitchell and that Shannon, who he claimed had gone behind his back in putting this over was still selling for him.

Mitchell stated on the stand that he had instructed his clerks when the Food and Drugs Act went into effect that no more mixing and misbranding was to be done. The District Attorney then handed him some forty or fifty complete transactions secured from the New York Dock Co. covering the past two years, in every instance showing a rebagging and misbranding. Mitchell professed to be dumfounded and said he knew nothing about it.

The misbranding charge was admitted when the goods were seized. The case the Government then brought was one for conspiracy to evade the law, which is a felony. Judge Van Vleet, before sentencing the defendants, stated that it was evident from the result that the jury did not believe the statements of the defendants on the stand any more than he did.

Not only was the coffee mixed and misbranded, but a vessel had been substituted on the delivery order in place of the actual vessel that brought the coffee in. In other words, the washed Caracas coffee came up in the steamer "Progresso." This vessel does not bring Bogota coffees, so that Mitchell Brothers placed on their delivery order the name of a Bogota vessel, the "Allamania."

An important point of this case is that seemingly responsible warehouse companies are mixing and misbranding coffees at the instigation of importers. There is of course no objection at all to mixing coffees in a warehouse, but when the warehouse repacks in bags of another mark and permits the substitution of a vessel other than the correct one on their delivery order, there is absolutely nothing that can excuse such transactions. If a dealer buys a lot of coffee calling for a shipment ex. a particular vessel, and the warehouse honors such a delivery order when the coffee did not arrive on such a vessel, it is my opinion that they are a party to the fraud. If a coffee is mixed in a warehouse, unless it all came from a certain vessel, it certainly loses its identity in this regard, and in any event a delivery order should not be honored where a misstatement is made thereon, nor a weighing return issued stating that a coffee arrived on a vessel that did not bring it to this country.

Coffee Exchange First Decides to Re-open Next Wednesday, Then Decides Not To. War Insurance Advances. Advertising Beer as a Beverage. Foreign Houses Asking for Agency for American Products. Market Summary.

New York, October 30, 1914.

The coffee trade are very greatly exercised over the Government's successful suit against Mitchell, the coffee jobber, and Shannon, the coffee broker, which has been reported in this correspondence. They were accused of the boldest kind of fraud under the Federal Food Law and found guilty. Both men have stood well here, especially Mitchell, and the trade cannot understand how it is that, in the face of the Government's conspicuous efforts to enforce the food law, these men would have the courage to defy it as they did.

News was received on Wednesday that the London Underwriters had advanced their rates from $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 per cent. on war insurance, particularly owing to the destruction of the English steamer "Manchester" by a German mine off the north coast of Ireland. The result of this news was to considerably strengthen rates for war risk insurance in this city.

Some interesting and unique advertising has been appearing in some of the New York papers during the week under the heading "What Is Beer, and Why It Has Become the National Beverage." The advertising consists of extracts from an address said to have been delivered by Professor Charles F. Chandler, of Columbia University, on October 5th of this year. The intent is to stem the tide of public sentiment which everywhere, and particularly in the large cities, is running against alcoholic beverages of every kind.

Early in the week it was expected that the Coffee Exchange would reopen next Wednesday, November 4th. Although a great many operators believed that this is about as bad a time to reopen as the committee could select, on account of the very dull trade, nevertheless the traders were beginning to get impatient and wished to re-engage in gambling in coffee futures. Later in the week, however, the Board of Managers voted not to reopen.

According to advertising seen in the local commercial papers, foreign houses are beginning to ask to be appointed agents for American products, which everybody agrees will from now on have a very widely increased vogue abroad. A London house during the week inserted a very conspicuous advertisement in a commercial journal asking for the agency for American hosiery, flannel shirts and suspenders for Great Britain.

During the week evidence has been taken in the proceeding brought by the New York State Attorney-General against the local Mercantile Exchange and some of its members on the charge of restraining trade and interfering with competition. Representatives of the large Western packing houses, Armour, Cudahy and Swift, who are large factors in the egg business, have been subpoenaed to produce their books.

E. E. Martin, a butter and egg jobber and former member of the exchange, who in 1907 obtained an injunction against the exchange for publishing quotations, testified on Thursday. He said that the exchange had but few sales compared with the total sales in the New York market and that he had long ago come to the opinion that the official quotations published by the exchange were fraudulently made.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet, buyers taking stock from hand to mouth. Prices unchanged, with Japans higher than usual. Coffee about unchanged. Brazilian conditions a little better but with no effect upon this market as yet.—Sugar weak. Raw quiet at 3.89 and granulated 5.60. Western beet sugar granulated quiet at 5.25.—Canned tomatoes unchanged on a slightly higher basis than a week ago. Other canned goods quiet and unchanged.—All dried fruits quiet at unchanged prices. Citron, lemon and orange peel tending higher.—Salmon in fair demand at unchanged prices.—Wheat unsteady and inclined to be weak, with some talk of dollar wheat.—Flour in light demand and mills pressing for business. Prices weak.—Provisions easy.

A Remarkable Offer That Only Takes About $6.12.

Messrs. J. S. Ivins' Son, Inc., of Philadelphia cake and cracker bakers make an offer in this issue which in several respects is the most generous we have ever known a manufacturer make. They have arranged what they call the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" assortment of several of their leading brands of cakes: Swiss Marias, Chocolate Butters, Fruit Dessert, Assorted Bon Bons, Chocolate Desserts and Butters, all well-known leaders. With this offer, which stands the buyer about $6.12, they give free a handsome display rack that is a constant salesman every day it is in view.

But even a more important part of the offer is that the firm will take back the unsold part of the goods, if any, within 45 days. This means that they send you the goods, give you a display rack to show them in and then guarantee their sale. Even more than that they pay the freight in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut. Full details of this remarkable offer appear elsewhere in a full-page advertisement.

The Ivins products are generally recognized as having the very finest quality made by any American baker. Anybody can instantly tell the difference between them and the ordinary cakes and crackers, and their greater richness is the cause of their enormous vogue in this section of the country.—Adv't.

Grocery Clerk

Head Clerk

Boss Grocer

Wholesaler

Manufacturer

The Grocery Clerk wants to be the Head Clerk—the Head Clerk wants to be the Boss—the Boss wants to be the Wholesaler—the Wholesaler wants to be the Manufacturer.

It takes time, diligence, and ability for the Clerk to become Head Clerk, and while the same thing is necessary, only to a greater degree, for the Head Clerk to become Boss,

Every Grocer Can Become a Wholesaler and a Manufacturer

If this is true, it is important, isn't it? Fill in the coupon at the bottom of this page and we will prove that it is true so conclusively that no doubt will remain in your mind.

Under ordinary conditions, it would require a great deal of money for a grocer to become a Wholesaler or a Manufacturer. We will show you how to become both a Wholesaler and Manufacturer. If true, this is important too, isn't it? Fill in the coupon at the bottom of this page, and we will prove this also.

No Grocer is so prosperous that he can afford not to know what is going on around him. No Grocer is so independent that he can afford to close his eyes and then say, when it is too late, "I didn't see it." To be just to himself, he must investigate anything which looks as though it might help him to greater independence.

We know that every Grocer wants to buy cheaper, and every Grocer knows that he would buy cheaper if every manufacturer sold him direct. We know, and every grocer knows that if he was the manufacturer of all the goods he sold to his customers, which means producer to consumer, the tremendous sums now going to the middlemen would come to him, and that he in turn could share them with his customers, which would mean—holding his customers.

If this can be done, it is important, isn't it? Fill in the coupon below and we will prove this too.

The war tax measure is now a law, and an analysis of its provisions shows that it will have a wide-spread effect. Almost everybody in business will pay the tax under one provision or another, and some will pay it under several provisions. They will also pay a tax as consumers. Generally speaking, the tax will be paid by the following:—

The War Tax.

Those who buy and sell bonds and shares of stock.

Those who give proxies for voting their shares.

Those who buy and sell produce and merchandise on the exchanges.

Those who borrow money on promissory notes.

Those who ship goods by freight or express.

Those who do long-distance telephoning.

Those who sell real estate.

Importers of goods through the Custom House.

Those who insure their goods or buildings.

Those who go abroad on ocean steamships.

Those who use perfumery or cosmetics.

Those who brush their teeth.

Those who chew gum.

Those who travel in parlor and sleeping cars.

Those who drink beer, wine or spirits.

Those who do business as brokers, including pawnbrokers.

Those engaged in banking, except mutual savings banks.

Commission merchants.

Proprietors of theatres, museums, concert halls and circuses, except the managers of Chautauqua courses.

Tobacco dealers and manufacturers.

Some lugubrious wit, after looking the law over, has declared that the only business man not directly or indirectly taxed under it is the undertaker, but that is not strictly accurate. The new law will affect everybody except a savage owning nothing and living in the woods.

And while it is truly hard luck, that we, neutral and non-combatant, should have to bear this $100,000,000 tax by reason of somebody else's war, still the situation might be worse. It is bad enough to lose money through war, but it is infinitely worse to lose money and life.

Ever since food laws, and now weight laws, began to be passed, and their enforcement was committed—usually—to ignorant and impracticable theorists or politicians, it has been a habit on the part of these officials to make rules and regulations which were absolutely unwarranted and illegal under the law they were to enforce. Dr. Wiley, former Government chemist, did that under the Federal Food and Drugs Act, and later had to back water several times. Other officials have done it since, and are doing it to-day, and usually they get away with it because fighting the United States, or even a State, is neither comfortable nor profitable. The officials take advantage of the natural reluctance to fight such mighty antagonists, and again and again perpetrate what to the writer has often seemed like absolute outrages.

In another column one of these is reported. The department at Washington has advised Florida fruit growers that besides putting the number of oranges or grapefruit on their boxes, the average diameter of the fruit in the box must also be put on! And later on, it is suggested that the grower may find it convenient to ascertain the average diameter of the pack and put that on his boxes!

The writer sees in the Federal law not the slightest shadow of justification for this. We believe that the first court which passed on it would throw it out with a sharp reprimand for the woolly-witted autocrats who conceived it.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" is glad to note that the United States Government is endeavoring to administer a lesson

Illegal Manipulation of the Butter and

to the New York Mercantile Exchange for manipulating the market, and hopes and believes that the same lesson will eventually be taught to some other Produce Exchanges or Butter and Egg Boards. No food products are to-day being more directly and positively manipulated in defiance of law than butter and eggs are by "Produce Exchanges," "Mercantile Exchanges" or "Butter and Egg Boards." The New York Mercantile Exchange has a Butter and Egg Board, so has the Philadelphia Produce Exchange, and so have numerous other exchanges of the same kind. They all work about alike, and the writers believe are all violating the law in a greater or smaller degree.

The object of the manipulation of butter and egg quotations is of course the common one of enabling the manipulators to make more money. Daily "quotations" are made, supposedly based on the operations of supply and demand, but often based on the secret machinations of a few members of a board who hold more or less fictitious sales and then announce the result as the "market." The manipulation does two unfair and illegal things: it influences settlements which the manipulators—and others—make with shippers who send them goods, and it furnishes a false basis for sales which the manipulators—and others—make to their retail customers. The vice of the scheme is that it interferes with the natural course of supply and demand. In other words, if it were not for this manipulation of the market, prices would often be quite different. Sometimes they would be higher, for occasionally it serves the manipulators' purpose to depress the market but usually prices would be lower

Getting Business and Then Fooling With It

Some business men are very, very foolish when it comes to risking the good will of their customers. One would think customers too hard to get to risk losing them after they are gotten, but evidently everybody doesn't figure that way.

A coterie of promoters is now endeavoring in Philadelphia to float a new manufacturing scheme which promises to make two blades of grass grow where none grew before. A company has been organized, and stock is offered, with the usual free bonus for every share bought. Between the present status a scheme like this, and dividends, there are so many obstacles that I cannot even begin to mention them.

The selling of the stock of this scheme has been committed to a firm of professional stock promoters who have been mixed up with a lot of similar schemes before. The members of this concern are now canvassing everybody who has a little money, chiefly retail business men. They gain their introductions to these retail business men by an ingenious scheme which I imagine is quite effective. The only point I want to make out of it is the shortsightedness which wholesale houses show in lending themselves to it.

The scheme is this: In some way or other—by a gift of stock if it can't be done otherwise—the promoters interest a wholesale dealer with a large number of customers on his books. Once they have landed him they persuade him to give them a personal letter to every one of those customers. One of those letters lies before me. It was sent by a wholesale fruit firm to a customer whose trade and whose good opinion they doubtless value. In part it reads as follows:—

This will introduce you to Mr., who is the fiscal agent of the Co., and who represents a most important proposition for the commercializing of an article heretofore entirely worthless, the conversion of which into a most necessary product for which there is unlimited demand, offers unusual possibilities in the way of profits.

I have myself become interested in the proposition, and believe if you will give a little of your time to explain fully the possibilities touched upon, you will, as I have, appreciate the same.

Now this is nothing less than a strong boost for a speculative scheme that may or may not make good. If it does make good, of course the writer of the above letter has the recipient of it bound to him for life. But suppose it does not make good, and statistics say

Until You Can Do This—Have a Hand in the manufacture and wholesaling of the goods you handle, you will never get yours

If every manufacturer was willing to share his profits with you, wouldn't you be foolish if, instead of taking advantage of it, you kept on working from 12 to 17 hours a day for the same salary that one of these manufacturers pays his head clerk? You will be just as foolish if you don't fill in the coupon and send it to us, and find out how you can share in the manufacturers profits.

that it only has about five chances out of one hundred. Suppose it does not make good? The wholesaler has virtually guaranteed—with that customer's business—the success of the scheme to him. If it fails, he will lose that business unless the customer is a most unusual man.

When you figure that a letter like this went to every one of that firm's customers, you will see that from now on they are sitting over a volcano. Collapse of the stock scheme, particularly if there happened to be anything fraudulent about it, might very easily mean the complete destruction of that house. That is precisely what happened to a physician of my acquaintance. He was the leading physician of a Philadelphia suburb—busy all the time, with a practice several times as large as that of any other physician out there.

Somebody interested him in a petroleum scheme and he went quite wild over it. Drummed the stock to every patient, including such patients as old maiden ladies who couldn't afford to lose a dollar. He sold an amazing amount of stock, and when the scheme flunked, as it did in a very short time, he had an angry patient for every block of stock he sold. That thing completely ruined him. He sold his team, and finally his house, and then moved to Pittsburg. It was a great pity, but it was his own fault.

It seems elementary that a man who by hard work has won and is holding a customer, should do nothing which will risk losing him.

Here is a Curious Thing.

Quite recently a gentleman in Europe, observing the passage of some troops through a village, noticed the women, in their enthusiasm, offering little gifts to the soldiers, and, making some inquiries, ascertained that the soldiers almost invariably asked for chocolate or cigarettes. Lately European governments have made large purchases of chocolate, finding that it is the favorite emergency ration on account of its small bulk and the large amount of nutriment it contains.

For many years in this country Walter Baker & Co.'s chocolate has been recognized as an exceedingly valuable article of food; chocolate containing, as one authority has stated, "More flesh-forming matter than beef."—Advt.

It is quite possible that a number of associations will endeavor to have ordinances passed regulating the transient merchants which infest the various towns. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" performed a distinct service to the trade by printing the law on the subject.

The Braddock Association gave a splendid luncheon to its members at Carnegie Institute on October 29th. The attendance was large and there were some inspiring addresses and good music.

New Castle is planning a "Boost-er Week" for the week commencing November 7th and ending November 14th. Visitors are expected from a radius of 25 miles and arrangements have been made to refund car fare to purchasers. Edward O'Brien has charge of the arrangements.

Here's a copy of a splendid sign on the office door of a wide-awake wholesale grocer:—

"We welcome all salesmen. We look at all samples. Be prompt. We are busy."

This wholesaler is popular, prosperous and every salesman has a good word for him whether he sells him or not. It pays to be pleasant to the men on the road. Some wholesalers could profit by following his example.

Twenty ounces to the pound is a new method of cutting prices. Big signs all over one retail store announces this fact. Another cut we noticed in one store was "a cash discount of 3 per cent. on all purchases." As prices appeared to be "cut to the bone" we wondered what the final result would be at the end of the year.

Next week Mr. Smedley will visit the associations at Lancaster, Hazleton and Chambersburg.

Organizer Smedley was the guest of the New Castle Retail Grocers' Association at a splendid dinner given to the members at the Y. M. C. A. building on October 19th. There was a big attendance. President Gibson introduced J. C. Norris as the toastmaster. The organizer made an address and the balance of the evening was spent in an exchange of experiences.

The organizer spent Tuesday, October 20th, with the newly formed association at Sewickley, in the evening addressing the association in the Town Hall. The organization has affiliated with the State association.

Sewickley is a splendid town with real live merchants. It was a good meeting.

The organizer visited the association at Farrel on October 21st. This is a new association, but it promises to be an efficient one. It has affiliated with the State association. A large number of the merchants were present and some forward work was mapped out.

Too many banquets, concerts, etc., at Sharon on October 22d made it necessary to postpone the meeting of the merchants planned for this date. We hope to return. Sharon is a good town and a good association but it is not as active as it should be. An effort will soon be made for an effective revival. President Kahl and Secretary Wilkes are wide-awake men and in their hands the association should go forward.

We had a real revival meeting at New Brighton on Friday, October 23d. We spent the day calling on the merchants and in the evening addressed a big meeting. Association matters look promising. Addresses were made by I. Z. Smith, secretary New Castle Credit Men's Association; A. A. Woods, secretary Butler Merchants' Association. A committee was appointed to engage the services of a paid secretary and the committee has in mind a very desirable man. After the regular meeting we met the grocers and had a real old-fashioned experience meeting.

"Indifference is the foe to progress." If the merchants of Pennsylvania would shake off their indifference to their own interests and make up their minds that membership in a business men's association meant a business investment, the evils which beset all lines of business would soon disappear.

Are you dissatisfied with your jobber?

Is there any other move you are about to make on which you would like some honest, fair, well-posted advice?

We can help you. We have all the principal catalogues of all the store appliances used by retail merchants on file in this office. You can see them if you call here, or we will send you any information from them which you want.

As to any other things, we have a staff here which is pretty expert about most things connected with merchandising. It is entirely at your service without limit and without price.

Generous? Not at all. On the contrary, selfish. The more we can do for you the longer we will keep you a subscriber. It is straight business all the way through.

This is what happens when the Grocer bucks his "Big Brothers"

If you were all one size, it wouldn't be so easy, would it? If you were as big as the other two, and they were as small as you appear to be, it would be impossible, wouldn't it.

You can be your own jobber, for you can buy all your goods direct. Fill in the coupon and send it to us, and we will prove it to you.

You can become interested in the manufacture of all the goods you handle. Fill in the coupon and send it to us, and we will prove this also.

If you can

Buy All Your Goods Direct

no matter how small you are, there is no question about this increasing your chances of becoming big, is there?

If you can become interested in the manufacture of the goods you sell, you would be very foolish to continue to give all the profit to the manufacturer and wholesaler, wouldn't you? Fill in the coupon, and send it to us, and we will show you exactly how to do it.

The manufacturer is big because he gets these big profits. You are small because you don't. As long as you stay small, you will continue to take just what the manufacturer hands you—as illustrated above.

When you grow as big as he is—and it is possible, mind you—then—and not until then, you will be in a position to ask him sweetly to handle you more gently, and if he doesn't do it, then—and not until then, you can hand him what he is now handing you. Whether there is any doubt in your mind, or not, on this subject, fill in the coupon and send it to us, and then—after you hear what we have to say, pass your judgment. You can't possibly express yourself on this, or any other subject until you KNOW.

Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

The Badness and Goodness of Jealousy.—Jealousy is an awful disturber, and it's just as foolish as it is awful. In business you will seldom find a jealous man a broad man. You will find him to be a man full of little fancied wrongs, and these illusions of his keep him from broadening out and making the most of himself.

We have seen jealousy work badness and goodness in the store, but we will speak of the badness first and allow our article to be what the sentimental fiction reader terms "a good ending."

Store jealousy among clerks comes from fear. The dictionary may give a different definition of it, but practical experience with the monster tells us that it's fear—plain fear and nothing else.

Go away down into your own inward secret seat of thought, let it face the open and answer you manfully, why it is that you are jealous of Frank Jones.

It isn't because he is older or dresses better or is better looking. Is it not because you fancy he had a pull with the boss, or because he knows his stock better, works harder or makes more sales than you do; or worse still, is it because he is getting as much pay as you get and you are a year ahead of him in the store force?

Whatever the cause, at the bottom of it lies fear—fear that some day or somehow he will be giving you official instructions in your work. And this is just the very thing that will happen if you keep up your narrow thinking and he keeps up his broad acting.

Because your jealousy is crippling you. You have allowed it to so impede your actions and darken and dampen your thought that you have made this man Frank a stumbling block. You aren't alone. There are thousands in your predicament in every mercantile and professional department of life acting just as silly, just as irrational as you.

Do you know how you should deal with Frank? You should view him as your best friend.

You remember when a bunch of us fellows used to start out on a century run during the bicycle days we always picked a pacer. We picked a lad who knew the turns, who had good general endurance, good muscle and good wind. He showed us what could be done.

Were we jealous? Did we skulk? Of course not, but we prepared for the next run so as to be able to at least keep pace with him.

Your action in the store is exactly a parallel case. Frank is the pacer, and instead of knocking him, instead of criticising his methods, emulate him. He is just the man you need. Be glad he is there. Be glad you have a pacer that keeps you on the live list.

Nobody is jealous of Edison. He's a mover and thinker, and because he is, he keeps his entire official force moving and thinking.

Be men and cut out this mean spirit and open your mind and heart to the splendid action and talent—developing capacity of the fellows you are associated with. They're surely a blessing in disguise, and it is entirely up to you to profit by their example.

DO YOU WANT TO TRADE?

Did you ever see a baby in your life that you would trade for yours? If you did you are a most unnatural father

Why in the name of common sense should you father the manufacturer's baby instead of your own? That's exactly what you do when you sell a brand of goods which you are not responsible for. You have only one excuse, the manufacturer creates a demand for his goods through consumer advertising.

How many times have you ever seen an advertisement which was so strong that you couldn't advertise another product in your face-to-face talk with your customer, still stronger?

Don't you know that no manufacturer, regardless of the tremendous pulling power of consumer advertising, has any chance at all when you pit against it

Your Personal Influence With Your Customers?

There is scarcely a product on the market which cannot be duplicated as far as quality is concerned, at a very much lower price than you pay for it. If this wasn't so, the manufacturer would not have the money to spend for consumer advertising.

Some of the money which is spent for consumer advertising should come to you. You will never get it by asking for it, no matter how many times you say "please". There is just one way, and only one way that you can get it, and it is really worth working for, because the amount spent for consumer advertising is over $700,000,000.00 a year—and that is to be personally interested in the manufacture of the goods you sell—to buy them direct to save the wholesaler's profit.

If you will fill out the coupon and send it to us, we will show you how this can be done.

Philadelphia Candy Manufacturers.

Elizabeth, N. J., October 29, 1914.
 To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Kindly give me the names of some Philadelphia candy manufacturers.

Yours truly,
 J. A. SHAPIRO.

Croft & Allen, Thirty-third and Market streets; Chas. W. Miller, 3735 Filbert street; Stephen F. Whitman & Sons, 415 Race street, and Quaker City Chocolate and Confectionery Co., 2140 Germantown avenue.

Two Inquiries.

Adamstown, Pa., October 29, 1914.
 To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—What do you know about the Mountain Valley Water Co., 258 S. Twelfth street, your city? Is it a water possessing curative power? Who buys string twine from the packages a grocer gets?

Thanking you, we remain,
 Yours truly,
 H. F. SNADER & Co.

The Mountain Valley Water Co., 258 S. Twelfth street, Philadelphia, Pa., claim a great medicinal value in their product along the lines of stomach troubles, etc. From their statement it could be used as a table water, but its high price is prohibitive, being $1 per gallon. They state that Smith, Kline & French and Robert Steel and other firms of like importance handle it. It comes in various sized bottles.

You can dispose of your strings, twines, etc., to the Penn Paper Stock Co., Marshall and Willow streets, Philadelphia, who will pay 50 cents per 100 pounds.

Finding the Cost Price on Free Deal.

Los Angeles, Cal., October 17, 1914.
 To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—A merchant here recently bought one dozen large bottles grape juice for $4.75 and eight dozen pint bottles grape juice for $21.20. He received one dozen large bottles free. Will you very kindly let me have the actual cost price of the entire lot per dozen? We did figure on the cost, but differ in the solution. As a subscriber to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," I felt you would not mind the little space it will use in your paper.

Yours truly,
 WM. J. RIESE.

In this case it is a little hard to give the benefit of the free dozen to anything but the dozen of the corresponding size. It would of course be customary to figure that the buyer paid $4.75 for two dozen large bottles and that the cost price was therefore $2.37½ per dozen, or 19.8 cents per bottle. We should then charge the regular retail price of the quarts; in fact, that is what you will have to do to preserve the proper difference between the quarts and the pints. As for figuring the cost price on the whole lot, it amount to this: The buyer spent $25.95 for grape juice and received a rebate worth, we will assume, $4.75, or about 18 per cent. Deduct 18-per cent. from the full price of the quarts (39.6 per bottle) and from the full price of the pints (22 cents per bottle) and you have the net cost of both. This will be 32.5 cents for quarts and about 18 cents for pints.

A Market for Dried Apples, Etc.

Bland, Va., October 21, 1914.
 To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly give me name and address of some reliable man we could sell dried apples and produce?

Also of the manufacturer of machine to measure cloth in bolt when taking inventory? It is quite a job to handle, unroll and roll 8,000 to 10,000 yards of cloth. I do not find anything of the kind mentioned in your valuable journal.

Thanking you for this favor, I am,
 Yours truly,
 F. A. CRABTREE.

As to dried apples, we suggest your getting in touch with the following firms in Philadelphia: Schlaich Bros., 34 N. Delaware avenue, and H. Cowan & Son, 28 S. Front street.

We called up an authority in the dry goods line concerning your request for the name of a device for measuring cloth, and he knew of nothing good for this purpose except a machine costing about $500, which would, of course, be out of the question for the ordinary retail merchant. One of our solicitors who was in the office and heard us calling for this information, suggested a method by which much time would be saved on inventories. This was to have the clerk subtract after each sale the number of yards sold, marking the balance each time on a tag attached to the bolt.

How Florida Fruit Will be Stamped From Now On.

The Florida Growers' and Shippers' League has issued the following announcement as to how Florida fruit, meaning oranges and grapefruit, will be labeled in the future:—

The growers and shippers are at liberty to stamp upon the boxes the contents of that box in terms of bushels, pecks, quarts, pints or fractions thereof. We have received a statement from the Department that for the Florida standard box, which measures 12x12x24 inches, the expression "Contents 1½ bu." stamped upon the box, will fulfill all of the requirements. In addition to this marking, the numerical count may be added.

If the shipper does not desire to use the first method, he may stamp his boxes with the number of oranges or grapefruit the box contains. In addition to this number there must be placed upon the box, however, the average diameter of the fruit in that box. The exact measurement of these diameters for the different packs was determined several years ago by Prof. Hume, and a table was prepared by the Experiment Station. It is perfectly legitimate to use a larger diameter than indicated in this table, providing, of course, you do not give the average diameter larger than it actually is. If one desires to use this latter method of stamping his boxes, it is possible to prepare rubber stamps which will show each pack, and at the same time the average diameter of that pack. This will make it unnecessary to do any more stamping than is done at the present time when the packer stamps the number of fruit on the end of the box.

Apple Day Made a Hit in Pittsburg, Pa.

Seems to Have Been Celebrated More Extensively There Than Anywhere Else.

Pittsburg, Pa., Oct. 30, 1914.

Apple Day (last Tuesday) made a pronounced hit with the public of Pittsburg. Many of the big department stores surrendered some of their display windows in which to produce and fruit men put hand some apple exhibitions. The decorations were in fanciful figures constructed of apples of various sizes and colors. Illuminated by shaded lamps these displays were very attractive.

The public did not get the full significance of the occasion, however, until the fruit dealers parade had traversed all the downtown streets. Headed by a band the procession went from the produce yards at Twenty-first street and Allegheny Valley Railroad down to the Wabash depot in Liberty avenue. The parade happened just at the lunch hour when thousands from the office buildings and stores were in the streets. Two million of apples were distributed and the scenes along the sidewalks when the fruit was thrown from the wagon were amusing. There was a wild scramble for every apple and at times one apple would be tossed half a city block from one eager hand to another before some fortunate individual could get his finger securely about it. Twenty-nine agon loads of apples, shipped from the West, were sent to the public school buildings, where the fruit was distributed among the children. Altogether the Apple Day was a success.

The firms participating in the apple festivities were: Iron City Produce Co., M. O. Coggins Co., Miller & Co., Schaub Fruit Co., H. C. Kurtz & Co., Joseph Flaherty, Ohio-American Fruit Co., Beatty Haberman, Crawford & Bunce, James M. Fanning, S. C. Focer, Hutchfield & Woolfolk, Chester Franzell Co., Kammerer Brothers Co., A. M. Travis Co., Troop Brothers and J. R. Coll Co.

United States Department Tells How It Proposes to Enforce Federal Net Weight Law.

Green Coffee in Bags Need Not be Labelled With Net Weight Because That Particular Package Does Not Go to Consumers. Opinions on Various Other Net Weight Questions.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 30, 1914.

The Department of Agriculture has handed down many opinions during the last few days interpreting the new amendment to the Federal Food and Drugs law, requiring foods "if in package form" to bear statement of net weight or count upon the label. Some of these opinions are summarized as follows:—

36. Statement of Quantity of Contents on Bags of Green Coffee.

Inquiry has been made as to whether green coffee in bags imported from Brazil should be marked with a statement of the quantity of the contents in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1913, commonly known as the Net Weight Amendment to the Federal Food and Drugs Act.

It is stated that green coffee is commonly received from Brazil in cargo lots packed in bags weighing approximately 132 pounds each, and that such bags of green coffee seldom, if ever, reach the ultimate consumer, there being practically no demand among such consumers for unroasted coffee.

The question whether green coffee in bags constitutes food in package form within the meaning of the Net Weight Amendment is, in the opinion of the department, not entirely free from doubt. Under the circumstances the department will for the present interpose no objection to the importation of green coffee in bags solely upon the ground that such bags are not plainly and conspicuously marked with a statement of the quantity of the contents.

Should it finally be decided by the department that bags of green coffee constitute food in package form within the meaning of the law, public notice of such a decision will be

Sell KARO for Preserving

(Crystal White)

It makes better preserves than all sugar

In our extensive advertising, and in the "Preserving with Karo" booklet, we tell the housewife about the superiority and convenience of KARO for preserving fruits, making jellies, marmalades, jams, etc. It will pay you to follow up our suggestion and recommend this use of KARO (Crystal White), because your profit on KARO is much larger than your profit on sugar. You can be sure your customers will be not only satisfied, but delighted. KARO (Crystal White) is already extensively used for preserving purposes, and this use is increasing every day on account of the superior qualities imparted to the preserves, jams and jellies. KARO (Crystal White) is too profitable for you to let your customers use it simply as a table syrup; tell them to use it for cooking, baking and candy making, and you'll secure increased sales that will pay you many a dollar of extra profits.

Preserving booklets will be furnished to the grocers for distribution on request.

Corn Products Refining Company

NEW YORK

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Try KARO (Crystal White) for preserving. The recipes are in the 'Preserving with Karo' booklet; sent free on request. You'll find KARO (Crystal White) will produce the best jams, jellies and preserves you ever made."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants given and importers afforded an opportunity of making the necessary arrangements, in the countries from which coffees are imported, to have the necessary statements placed upon the bags.

87. Statement of Quantity of Contents on Packages of Fresh Oysters.

When fresh shucked oysters are shipped in interstate commerce in returnable packages which are refrigerated, these packages should be plainly and conspicuously marked with a statement of the net contents, by measure, in terms of the largest unit of measure and fractions thereof, in the package, or in terms of weight, if preferred, if there is a trade custom to this effect.

There appears to be no objection to labeling with a statement of quantity, under these conditions, by means of a tag which is firmly affixed to the package, providing it is made conspicuous.

88. Quantity of the Contents of Canned Oysters, Canned Clams, and Canned Shrimp to Be Declared on Cut-Out Weights of the Drained Meat.

In the opinion of this bureau, the quantity of the contents of a package of canned (cove) oysters or canned clams, as usually packed and processed, should be declared on the basis of the cut-out weight of the drained meat. This also applies to canned shrimp.

In this connection attention is called to letters Nos. 2 and 3, in Bureau of Chemistry Service and Regulatory Announcements for January, 1914, which state the weights of drained meat which, in the opinion of the bureau, satisfactorily fulfill the requirements of Food Inspection Decision 144 in the case of canned oysters and clams.

89. Statement of Quantity of Contents on Packages of Flavoring Extracts.

If a bottle of flavoring extract is placed in a permanent carton and is delivered to the consumer in the carton, the regulation (F. I. D. 154) would seem to be satisfied if the statement of quantity appears only on the carton. The law itself requires merely that the statement shall appear on the outside of the package. If the carton is a part of the permanent package, a statement placed upon it would seem to be on the outside of the package within the meaning of the Net Weight Amendment.

90. Statement of Quantity of Contents on Packages of Catsup.

In the opinion of the bureau, catsup may be sold either by weight or by measure, in conformity with paragraph (f) of Food Inspection Decision 154.

HOLT.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The well-known wholesale coffee house of Sutton & Vansant, Philadelphia and New York, is liquidating. There is no failure—the firm is simply retiring from business. It consisted of Milton W. Orme, Daniel B. Graeber and A. Gordon Norrie. The last named will wind up the business. Some effort is being made to reorganize it by the two other partners.

Boots—Shoes—Findings

Some Shoe Ad. Copy.

When it comes to the style in which an advertising writer sets forth the attractiveness of his goods there is no accounting for tastes or phraseology. At least this would be the judgment of one after looking over a bundle of samples of the ad. writer's art or skill or whatever it may be called. Extravagance or hyperbole, often employed in the shoe trade, is the "long suit" with a few artists in the line, of which the following is a sample, in speaking of a new example of woman's footwear: "Fashion's anvil stroke in the world of shoedom. A truly resonant note, testifying the individualistic strain in the organization to the maximum." Can you beat it?

Special Shoe Days of the Year.

Several places—especially in the Middle West—have endeavored to establish a fixed day for the appearing of either high or low shoes, summer and fall hats, etc. They are called "special merchandise days," and in certain cities the Mayor has issued a proclamation designating the dates. This is done in Minneapolis, and in Chicago public action has been so influenced that May 23d is known as straw hat day, May 29th as low shoe day, September 4th, instead of the 15th, recognized in a majority of cases, was selected for men to assume their fall hats, with high shoes coming in October 2d and 3d. Doubtless these dates are taken in connection with a publicity scheme and boosted accordingly by the daily papers, imitating what is termed "a new thought in advertising." Merchants in smaller communities can utilize this idea to advantage in connection with their local advertising, to which it will add point and piquancy.

Men and Women's Cloth Top Footwear.

From many reports turned in by the road salesmen it appears the cloth top shoes for men are not scoring a great success. Dealers in the large cities pretend to be enthusiastic over what they call an "improvement" from several points of view, but the men themselves are not that way inclined, judging from the sales so far. Cloth tops have always marked the extreme of fashion in the same sense as white spats; but the market for such goods is narrow, and it is certain the general storekeeper does not feel justified in stocking a line. On the other hand, women's boots in fabric quarters are very popular everywhere for dress purposes, at least. Shoe manufacturers say the run on these goods is marked and plants are crowded with orders for prompt delivery.

The call in women's shoes is for patent leather vamp, with fabric top, in plain black, brown, fawn and dark grey, and some in brocade, a number of patterns being made up to resemble the appearance of gaiter tops. While these shoes have been more or less in vogue in the principal cities, they seem now to be getting a strong hold in the small towns. The half or Cuban-Louis heel leads in popularity in many of the high-grade lines and practically all the medium priced shoes. In other styles the full Louis heel in both wood and leather will be employed. There appears no end of the fancy lines in design, finish and general appearance.

Are Glazed Kid Shoes Coming Back?

In a recent issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," mention was made to the possibility of glazed kid being again used in the manufacture of shoes. The article appearing in this department referred to the fact that at one time this leather had been utilized extensively, and indications were that shoe manufacturers in the principal centers were again looking favorably upon glazed kid as a possible material in the near future. The "Public Ledger" on this subject and cognate matters relating to the promised increase in the cost of shoes, says:

The cost of a pair of shoes retailing at $5, it is figured out by men who supply calfskin and sole leather, will be increased about $1 to the wearer by the higher values put upon leather and findings as a result of the war.

In arriving at this deduction, it is pointed out that the manufacturer will add the increased cost of materials. He allows a certain per cent. margin for overhead charges, and the higher the cost of the finished product the greater becomes overhead items. And, further, the increased price means larger commissions to salesmen; and, figuring on the same basis, the retailer must add more than the mere first item in increased cost in order to maintain his per cent. of profit. It all ends with the wearer.

The higher price of calfskin is viewed as benefitting the glazed kid industry, centered in Philadelphia. The cost of shoes can be kept down, it is shown, if the public comes back to wearing glazed kid. At a recent meeting of tanning, leather and shoe interests in New York, in response to a call sent out by A. C. McGowin, president National Shoe Retailers' Association, and shoe buyer for Wanamaker's, a manufacturer made this announcement:—

"As my company is a tanner of importance, I am willing to further the situation of glazed kid and have your shoe manufacturers tell your salesmen to go out and push glazed kid shoes in preference to any other shoes. I don't want to make any more money out of the situation. I have been optimistic on the situation until this miserable war started. I am willing to-day to take orders for immediate delivery of 50,000 dozen skins or more at ruling prices."

Just how far dealers can influence the public to buying shoes made of certain leathers, should they be induced to advocate glazed kid shoes, remains to be seen. If the manufacturers make up a line and the retailing merchants stocks such shoes, their combined efforts would go far toward placing them among the season's best sellers. As a general proposition, the public's preference is a secondary matter when the right "dope" is given out by the dealer.

Conditions of the Shoe Trade. S. Way to Estimate Dealer's Profit.

Replying to an inquiry regarding conditions in the shoe business, R. Prather, advertising manager of Thomas G. Plant Co., owners of "Queen Quality," "Dorothy Dodd" and other brands of women's shoes, says:

We can only answer this question after looking at our own business for the past year and what the salesmen have done since they too to the road September 10th. Conditions are very satisfactory, and from present indications we will show a nice increase.

We did not exert any special effort to keep sales up to the normal. We simply kept our flag nailed to the masthead and went right along as if there was no war. We continued to advertise. We did not use any larger volume, neither did we add to our sales efforts in any other manner.

It is simply a case of going serenely along, full of confidence without fear or pessimism, advertising because we have always advertised, supplying the best shoes we know how to make, and helping our customers to sell those shoes at a satisfactory profit.

Other evidence along the same line is furnished by Endicott Johnson & Co., who claim to lead the world in the manufacture of shoes, their daily average output being 47,000 pairs. They state that notwithstanding the war in Europe, which is figured upon by shoe manufacturers in general as detrimental in several different ways, 1,000 more are now being employed than at this time last year. This firm recently cleaned up the hide market, its purchases of green hides amounting to $750,000. Next to Endicott Johnson & Co., the International Shoe Co., Louis, an amalgamation of five concerns, is ranked second. Now, where Rice & Hutchins come in on the list of leaders as to output?

With these figures on record it appears no great, if any, advance in retail price of shoes has been made with the possible exception of new styles or novelties. These goods are always marked up at the opening of a season and unless they prove popular sell soon fall back into the "ruck," and are disposed of at special sales. In talking of this to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" recently, a careful retailer said: "There have been some creases, but not many. As a matter of fact, prices have been increased by shoe factories for the past ten years. This is not always accomplished by a marked up in price to the dealer, but in other ways. Sometimes the discounts are lessened or withdrawn altogether, and long, or catalogue, price is left untouched to avoid confusion. A great many dealers, it is true, sell shoes at fixed prices, made by the manufacturer. I do not. Every invoice of shoes is figured on its actual cost and the retail price adjusted accordingly. To my mind

Little talks between wholesalers and retailers on the ethics of fair business—what is square and what is tricky?—Doing unto the jobber as you would have him and other people do unto you.

No. 7

Practically all wholesale grocery bills are sold net 30 days, so much discount in 10. Sometimes a retailer will think he ought to have 45 days, or 60 days, or once in a while 90 days.

Those retailers probably never reflect that every time they do this they break their word, yet that is the fact. A man who buys merchandise that is sold on established and well known terms, pledges himself by the very act of purchase to comply with those terms whether they are mentioned or not. If he takes 45 days instead of 30, he breaks his word, and that is all there is to it.

The business man who keeps his word implicitly, not only his direct but his indirect word, and in big and little things alike, is the man who gets along, both in this world and the next.

Tests for Reliable Paints. What They Should Resist.

Dealers carrying paints with a knowledge of their stock should be in a position to give information to a customer regarding the product. For example, many homeowners regard paint as a purely decorative agent. While this is undoubtedly a very important feature, it is by no means its chief or principal function. In purchasing lumber that is to form the outer, weather exposed surface of a building, special care is exercised to select only the best, clearest, well-seasoned, time enduring stock; and yet if the paint that is applied on such lumber does not protect it from the ravaging effects of the weather, the excessive dampness of the winter months, the extremes of heat in summer and cold in winter, quality in the lumber will avail but little.

It is a fact that poor lumber, if kept well covered with weather and moisture resisting paint, will give better service than the best lumber infrequently coated with poor paint. A customer who is a house owner can ill afford to stop exercising discrimination in structural material until he has given the paint that is to afford its protection to the whole structure the same thought and consideration. Therefore the careful selection of the right kind of paint and its correct application is to a large extent left to the judgment and knowledge of the general storekeeper. The skilled and trained practical or professional painter will know how to judge and mix paints, but the standard and quality of ready-mixed paints, such as general stores carry in stock, is dependent almost wholly upon the reliability and standing of the manufacturer. The merchant is called upon to buy his supplies from the firm whose product is best known, whose guarantee means something more than mere words.

Further, the real test of a paint is the result it gives in actual service; or, in other words, its efficiency. If a paint be attractive and glossy, but so porous that it absorbs moisture readily, it is a failure in the most essential quality. If a paint covers, solidly, in one or two coats and hides the old surface perfectly, but simply lies on the surface, it is a failure; because the constant expansion and contraction of the wood underneath, from excessive heat and cold, will loosen it from the surface so that it will peel or scale off. If the pigments from which a paint is made are alkaline or otherwise chemically active, the paint will be a failure, because the chemical activity will attack and destroy the colors and accelerate the decomposition of the linseed oil.

If a paint is made from pigments that change their nature on exposure to atmospheric influences, the paint will again be a failure, because it will blacken or discolor. If a paint presents a too coarse or non-glossy surface to the weather, more especially where excessive moisture or dampness abounds, the paint will mildew readily, as the fungus will cling or adhere readily to a coarse and non-glossy surface. These are but a few of the important points that a customer must consider in selecting paints for outside use especially, and which the general merchant should guarantee against in selling his goods. The ultimate guarantee, however, rests with the paint manufacturer, and should his product betray any of the weaknesses above detailed, he and he alone is to assume the blame and responsibility for making and selling inferior material.

Quality vs. Cheap Merchandise. When the Merchant is at Fault.

From a list carefully prepared it is claimed a complete stock of hardware covers over 75 separate classifications. It is not to be supposed the general storekeeper will carry all these items, but a great many he will find necessary, according to the community he looks after. For the benefit of the merchant with a hardware annex who may desire to know just what may be counted in as legitimate hardware lines, the following enumeration is submitted:

Agricultural implements, automobile supplies, bath room fittings, belting, bicycles, blacksmiths' supplies, boat hardware, builders' hardware, building papers, butchers' supplies, clocks, contractors' supplies, cream separators, crockery and glassware, cutlery, dairy supplies, dog collars, dynamite, electrical supplies, electrical household specialties, enameled ware, factory or mill supplies, fencing, fireplace goods, 5 and 10-cent goods, fishing tackle, furnaces, garden implements, gasoline engines, glass and putty, guns and ammunition, hammocks, harness, heavy hardware, shelf hardware, horseshoes, hose, garden or lawn; housefurnishing goods, ice cream freezers, iron and steel, lamps, portables, etc.; kitchen utensils, lanterns, mining supplies, lawn mowers, paints and oils, iron and lead pipe, plumbing department, poultry supplies, pumps, railway supplies, refrigerators, roofings, rope and twine, saddlery hardware, door and window screens, sewing machines, ship chandlery, silver plated ware, sporting goods, steam fitters' supplies, stoves and ranges, tin plate and metals, tinners' supplies, automobile tires, tinware, carpenters' and mechanics' tools, plasterers' tools, toys and games, wagons, wagon woodwork, washing machines, weather-strip, woodenware.

Several of these classifications are almost complete departments in themselves and the various articles coming under these distinct headings are manifold. Now, the point this journal wants to make is does it pay best to handle quality or low-price goods in the various lines the general merchant may elect to handle? It is held by experienced merchandisers that the better goods mean better profits. The ultimate consumer is said to be demanding better grades of merchandise in every line and is getting them excepting in the average hardware store. In other words, the hardware dealer would rather sell goods which are cheap than merchandise which is reliable and dependable at a higher price.

From interviews the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has gathered that the average storekeeper stocks only indifferent tools, for example, and other lines of a similar standing in the belief that mechanics do not know what they are buying and are indifferent to quality so long as the price is "right." As an example, a carpenter said: "We do want the best we can buy, but when we go into a store we cannot often find it; and we have to lead up to the best tool in stock, for nearly always the cheapest is shown us first. We can afford and want good tools." How many merchants are guilty of this shortsightedness? It is poor salesmanship to start with and indefensible business at all times.

Reputation of the General Merchant as an Effective Distributor.

Discussing "hidden markets," a Canadian newspaper tells the following, which, after a manner, applies to the miscellaneous character of the dealers who make up the reading constituency of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World:" "We are used to drug stores handling hardware, but to have a concern add a choice line of groceries to an extensive showing of fine hardware it is an evidence of broadmindedness that should be noted, the formal announcement reading: 'On Saturday, August 22d, the Shore Hardware Co., Ltd., will open a complete line of groceries, which they have added to their large stock of hardware.'"

Any one familiar with the general store trade is not surprised at this combination. The country merchant has an assortment of merchandise truly wonderful whenever considered in detail. That is the very essence of his business, and as a means of distribution to the consumer for the jobber, wholesaler and manufacturer, is one of the most important factors in successful merchandising. There are more of this kind of stores throughout the country, in any community away from the cities and large towns, than all other selling agencies at retail combined. The range and variety of their stock is the attraction to the customer, and their standing and reputation in their respective localities deservedly high. It is true there are exceptions to this general summing up; but it is noted the manufacturer or wholesaler whose merchandise—whether hardware or what not—is best known to this class of modern merchant enjoys a wide and satisfactory sale for his products.

Making a Razor Out of a File.

A curious and pertinent story is told by a merchant in Oklahoma about how a well-known brand of files was converted by an Indian into an acceptable razor, which was used for eight years to shave the heads of a tribe of Osage in that part of the country. The merchant in transmitting the razor-file to the manufacturing company in the East succinctly furnished the appended fact: "I am sending you a curio that I obtained in Pawhuska, Okla., and noting your name on same, procured it its history. From what I was able to learn, this curio was made by an Indian in the Indian village of Pawhuska, ten years ago, from one of my files, all of the work being done by hand, using nothing but his crude tools which consisted of a hand bellows, flint hammer and an emery rock. As you will notice, it is as nearly perfect as if done by machine, the edge of the blade being in perfect alignment. It was used by this band of Osages (by the way, are the wealthiest Indians in the world, on account of their oil royalties) for about eight years. They used it to shave their heads, with the exception of what is known as the scalp lock (which on an Osage Indian runs in a line about two inches wide from his forehead to the back of his neck) and was then presented to the man who gave it to me. The Indian who made it is still living and, as near as is known, is nearly 100 years old." The company in question is making effective use of the converted file in their publicity campaign.

Motor Lawn Mower the Latest Development. South America No Strong on Grass.

Lawn mower manufacturers are preparing for the coming season. The well-established makes are not adding any specially new mechanical features beyond the usual refinements incident to suggested improvements, with here and there a change which is heralded as "distinctly their own." The department which has been tentatively introduced in recent seasons is the motor driven mower, superseding the horse-driven machine. A Western automobile manufacturer, adopting or utilizing the model of a well-known Eastern lawn mower, has put on the market a motor driven machine which is said to have met with initial success. The output last year reached several hundred, but in 1915 the number will run over a thousand. As a motor of this description costs in the neighborhood of $1,500, it may be readily understood why the output is not large as their use is naturally limited. The Eastern manufacturer of standing also signified his intention of making a motor mower of about the same size and power.

Referring to this new development a mower manufacturer whose products are known the world over, said to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" the other day: "The motor mower is the newest thing in the line. Of course a machine of this kind has been known and tried, but up to last season have not proven altogether satisfactory. The motive power has heretofore been of such a nature that its weight offset its usefulness. In cutting a lawn the machine is beyond a certain weight it presses down the grass so firmly knives simply slide or glide over surface. This is a fatal defect. With the latest motor mower, however, grass can be cut after a rain, for example, as smoothly and uniformly as if the lawn were in the best of conditions. So it will cut easily on a grade of 30 per cent. and even steeper. A motor of but three horse-power is sufficient to drive such a mower, which, of course, must be specially built in certain particulars to be adapted to this purpose. In our regular line we anticipate even larger business than last year, and have made a new high record.

As to the export business, we have always shipped a lot of mowers abroad. In connection with the South American trade, of which so much is being said lately, it is not capable of any great development, for the reason lawns are so far apart. We sell about 200 machines in that part of the world, and as soon as they learn to grow grass for ornamental purposes our sales will naturally increase. The major part of South America is in the tropics, and we know what that means so far as the mowing down and caring for lawns is concerned. It is true there is no secret in this should be done, but the innovations of the average Latin-American in this respect are sorely lacking. It will come along one of these days when our Southern neighbors know that it means to have a beautiful lawn surrounding even the home of the ordinary man and not be confined entirely to the estates of the wealthy. Until that time arrives we shall be obliged to be patient; but we are ready to supply the market anywhere where the goods can be safely negotiated. Should it be along the American made mower I am swinging the business. Such merchandise in our line as is sold in those countries is of the cheapest grades. It is also a fact as regards other lines of hardware—I mean the staples to the general buyer."

Foreign and Domestic Hand Sewing Needles.

At this time, when every American manufacturer is being urged to "plug" his goods and push their sale for all they were worth, the question came up regarding hand sewing needles. A well-known importer of notions, C. H. Lowley, New York, was asked his opinion, his reply being as follows:—

Referring to your letter asking for our opinion on the effect of the war on the American needle manufacturer, I am reminded of the story of an Irishman looking at a giraffe and exclaiming, "There ain't no such animal."

That's the case with the manufacturer of hand sewing needles; there are none made outside of England and Germany to amount to any-

I am not writing this for publication but to prevent your publishing anything referring to the opportunity of the American needle manufacturer, when there is no such thing.

The Beckett Needle and Supply Co., Philadelphia, when requested for information on this point, said two-thirds of the hand sewing needles used in this country were made here, the remainder abroad, with Germany turning out the greater quantity. The domestic manufacturers, however, were not in a position just now to make up the deficiency.

On the other hand, the Excelsior Needle Co., Torrington, Conn., said: "So far as we know hand-sewn needles are not made in this country. We are quite sure that the statement asserting that two-thirds of them made here is wrong."

New Colors in Dress Goods. Merchants Urged to Buy.

Dress goods are not being purchased as freely as might be expected at this time of the year. Authorities believe buyers of all kinds are making a mistake in holding off if they expect prompt deliveries. The dye situation is by no means settled, and so far as many colors are concerned, it is just as serious at the commencement of the war. Popular colors in dress goods for next spring wear, now being booked, are black, navy and blue. A prominent seller said in this connection: "Those who put off buying until the last minute are going to get a shock when they find it impossible to obtain the goods."

As the season advances fine woollen French serges, which have been regarded with favor as one of the popular fabrics for spring, are holding their own. Merchants who have kept in close touch with the market are not losing sight of this fact, and have their orders placed for an adequate supply of these goods. It is difficult to make selections along these lines unless one keeps fully informed. Perhaps the general storekeeper may think any old thing will sell in his town; but right there he commits an act of egregious folly. Every community is wise to the fashion preferences in cloths of different weaving dress materials, colorings, in the large cities, and will accept no other. Many newspapers and magazines are read and consulted for any one to remain ignorant of these facts.

Care of Hose Supporters and Garters.

A merchant with a stock of hose supporters and garters in his notion department should keep them in a uniformly cool place, and away from radiators, furnaces, stoves, hot air registers, steam pipes and direct sunlight. Keep the reserve in original packages until wanted in forward stock. Exposure to the air tends to oxidize or harden the rubber. Keep moderate quantities of any one article exposed for sale in display fixtures, as they get soiled from handling and exposure. It is better sell out quickly small quantities of each kind exposed and to replenish often than to have a whole lot to get soiled and "go bad." This is the advice of a manufacturer, with years of experience, and the general storekeeper can follow it with the assurance of the best results.

Irregular Sales of Ribbons at Lower Prices.

Both in immediate and advance business, the purchase of ribbons on the account of general merchants is inclined to be slow. The condition in the primary markets is about the same. Salesmen who have been on trips for next springs' engagements report little activity in millinery ribbons and dry goods specialties fairly active. Ribbons have sold well for sometime, and it is expected they will continue to enjoy popular favor, but no special preferences have as yet developed. On staple goods prices are irregular. In general the reduction on spring deliveries amounts to about a quarter of a cent a ligne, compared with old prices, largely due to the drop in raw silk. Good sized lots of fancy ribbons have lately been liquidated at attractive prices. Foreign ribbons are reported plentiful, both in velvets and fancies.

Advantageous Purchases of Silks.

It is evident that retailers who have the money or credit can pick up excellent bargains in not a few lines, which are being sacrificed. Most of these goods are of foreign manufacture and were ordered for other markets now closed by the European fracas, and have finally reached this country to be disposed of to the best advantage. This is particularly true of silks. In one instance over 1,000 pieces of fancies, comprising various brocaded effects, made to retail at $3.50 and even $8.50 a yard, have been offered at $1.35 a yard throughout. This instance is indicative of a merchandising situation now prevailing wherein retailers in a position to buy at all are able to secure quantities of broad silks at advantageous prices. Concessions both of domestic and foreign lines are being made to buyers; and in the imported goods it is apparent that cancellations of orders have put merchandise on the market that would not have been obtainable under normal conditions.

Large retailers are getting rid of their silk stocks as rapidly as possible, probably in anticipation of still further declines in the primary market. Wanamaker has been holding a sale of wide silks at $1 a yard retail, in satins, moires, brocades, crepes and taffetas, that previously were sold for $2 to $6.50. More than seventy kinds of silk were offered.

Cotton Goods Situation Much Mixed.

Markets are very much mixed on cotton goods, advices from authoritative sources declare. There has been a better inquiry for print cloth yarn goods and some lines of heavy sheetings. Buyers are trying to cover their requirements for next year, the low prices having attracted some of the shrewdest. It is certain, however, orders are being

"STOLLWERCK'S COCOA is made by the original Dutch process which makes the best flavored and most digestible cocoa."

placed cautiously by jobbers and dealers, and the mills are looking after orders for export account which may eventually have a sharp bearing on domestic transactions. More goods are being engaged in this way than appears on the surface. The factories have not yet begun to offer cottons made from low-price material, but it is believed merchandise of this description will appear before long for next year's delivery.

At the same time the colored goods end of the cotton goods markets do not show much recession. No one wants to sell ahead except subject to the ability to secure dyes; and the prices asked for these and other necessary supplies are so high that the normal gain from cheap cotton is being almost wholly offset. These conditions make it difficult to quote where colors enter in as a part of the output. It is admitted, however, that the irregularity of the market as to prices and sales has rarely, if ever, been duplicated in recent years.

Further Advances in Linens.

On general lines of housekeeping linens a fairly good volume of orders have been placed by retailers. Road salesmen sent in orders of encouraging size for prompt and near future delivery. Practically all the leading secondary distributors have placed their advance orders on linens for next spring. Crashes were in active request. These goods were scarce and showed a further upward tendency. Advices have been received from Belfast that low-grade crashes had been advanced again, and, if reports may be credited, further advances may be expected. Of course, this is due entirely to the European imbroglio, which seems to grow in intensity rather than diminishing, with the further disturbance of all markets.

Weather Retarding Buying Along the Line.

Much complaint is heard about the weather retarding buying on the part of the public, the merchant, jobber and wholesaler. This is reported from a number of sections, and even the Central States, where the crops are abundant and money seemingly plentiful, have joined in this cry, as witness the appended advices from Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade: "Continued warm weather is still retarding retail dry good business and in turn affecting wholesale business. The clearing weather and slightly lower temperature at the end of last week stimulated retail trade to some extent and wholesale orders were consequently considerably larger. This would indicate that the weather conditions are an important factor and that retail dry goods business will respond to seasonable weather. More merchants have been in the market than during the same week a year ago."

Device to Abolish Garters and Suspenders.

Perhaps hose supporters may be dispensed with, but considering the number of new devices coming into the market, this hardly seems likely. A new line of hosiery is being made, however, which seems designed to do that very thing. It has a French elastic top that will grasp the leg firmly enough, it is claimed, so as to keep the stocking from slipping down. So far it is an idea only, as no steps have been taken to bring it to the attention of either the trade or the public. The same is also true of a constructive effort in a man's shirt, whereby the trousers may be buttoned to the garment at the hips doing away with suspenders and the weight on the shoulders.

Broadcloths Considered Excellent Property.

Broadcloths have had their run for fall wear, and the end is not yet. The call for them at the present time, says an authority, is as strong as ever, and the difficulty is to find enough to fill orders for immediate delivery or for shipment within the next two months. Spot stocks are low. Broadcloths in hand are good property, as it will be impossible to replace them at anything like the figure paid a few months ago. It is a question as to whether they will go over into spring with the same strength, as even chiffon broadcloths have a rather heavy appearance for warm weather use. Cheaper broadcloths will make a better showing later, but at present goods below $1 are going slowly.

Risky Business Plunging on Dress Materials.

When fashion decrees a change in women's dress materials no account is seemingly taken of the stock of goods that may be on hand either on the shelves of the merchant or in the warehouses of either the jobber or manufacturer. Losses have been severe at times on this score, and the danger of plunging on what may be a passing vagary of fashion—other changes that have taken place—is graphically reflected in the subjoined extract from the "Textile Manufacturers' Journal":—

The sudden snappy changes in women's wear styles that are apt to take place any time, almost at a moment's notice, make it rather difficult for mills to go ahead on anything beyond a very few staples and make up large stocks in anticipation of a continued demand, which is likely to stop suddenly. Many times mills have found a large stock of unsalable goods on their hands, which, once out of style, cannot be given away. This fact was demonstrated a few days ago at an auction of fine dress goods, perfectly all right in every way except that the present demand was for something else. These goods, which were made (some of them) to sell for a dollar a yard, upward, brought 27 and 28 cents a yard, and even at that the bidding was anything but spirited. Others, which originally sold for $2.50, went for 65 cents. Judging from this, it is risky business to anticipate too far ahead.

A prominent mill agent stated this week that on account of this risk his mills had changed their policy and would now only go so far; that is, they will make up sufficient yardage on fabrics to cover orders booked up to a certain point and then discontinue them whether the demand has fallen off or not, and will advise their customers to discontinue also. They prefer to do this even at the loss of some business, than to run the risk of accumulating a stock of unsalable goods. One of the reasons why dress goods cannot be sold at any price unless they are in style is that the laboring classes, which used to take advantage of bargain sales of such fabrics, will not buy them now unless they are worn by their employers' wives and daughters.

Jobbers Using "Misleading Brands" on Knit Goods. Complaints of Manufacturers.

Manufacturers are complaining of the practice that jobbers follow—of substituting their private brands for the original trade-mark on knit goods. The producers say merchants are imposed upon, that the merchandise with the jobber's mark thereon is not uniform, because made up in different mills and other indictments under the same heading are charged. A prominent manufacturer has taken up the cudgels in the defense of his own trade-mark, and states the controversy has led to no end of friction from the different attitude assumed between the two on the question of branded goods. Among other things he says:—

I am myself the manufacturer of a brand of goods, to the production of which I have given the best years of life. To these goods I have attached a trade-mark, and I have expended large sums of money in making that trade-mark known over all the country from Maine to the Pacific slope. And the trade-mark is really well known. It stands as a hall mark for our goods; it has a real and permanent value; the good will acquired by it is the fruit of large expenditures and continuous labor. There is a demand for these trade-marked goods all over the country and the demand is ever growing.

We have sold our goods to jobbers for years in large quantities and they have been sold through

Our line of syrups represents the best goods on the market. Do you sell syrups, are you buying of us, why not? :: ::

SYRUPS—A better demand for Syrups, there always is at this time of the year. Fall weather, with a crispness in the air stimulates the demand, and fortunately for you we can make lower prices. Nothing nicer than our Royal Table Syrup, some prefer the Challenge Brand, both full of merit; other well-known brands include Crescent, Ex. Amber, Gilt Edge, Very Best Fancy Cloudy, White Clover, Cruiser Brand, Quaker City, Extra Maple Brand, etc. We also have some fancy strictly Sugar Syrups and a good assortment of New Orleans Molasses, in barrels and half barrels; buy your sweets of us.

MINCE MEAT—Haden't you better add it to stock, this season's goods are now ready for delivery. Atmore's Celebrated, in pails of 20 lbs., 35 lbs. and 70 lbs., at 9¼c.; Atmore's Keystone, at 8c.; Cookman's Choice, 30-lb. pails, at 7¾c., and Quaker City Brand, 30-lb. pails, at 6½c. Our word for it, they are all good.

NEW CALIFORNIA PRUNES—Now in stock and from one of the best packers on the coast, nice black fruit, 25-lb. boxes, 40-50s, price, 9¾c.; 50-60s, price, 9¼c.; 60-70s, price, 8¾c.; 70-80s, price, 8¼c. There will be no better quality in the market this season.

MOLASSES—We have a nice lot of pure New Orleans Molasses, high grade, in cans, Blue Grass Belle Brand, 4 dozen in a case, per case, $3.75; we recommend this to those who have a trade for a really fine Molasses; can be retailed at 10c. a can.

their trade-mark. When, therefore, one of these jobbers who has been so long our customer comes to us and tells us that he will no longer accept our goods to sell them except under his own name or brand, I think we have a right to object. It is this attitude on the part of the jobber which is driving each succeeding year manufacturers who take a pride in their goods to sell direct to the retailers.

It is believed that when a jobber originates a line of merchandise which he has made up under his own specifications, he is entitled to the full credit, and the trade-mark employed thereon is a legitimate, recognized brand of identification and merit. At the same time the indiscriminate use of a general mark on a miscellaneous line, made anywhere at the convenience of the jobber, is another matter altogether, and one in which the retailer is an interested party, as it is apt to be misleading. A further illustration of the manufacturer's contention is that afforded by a statement from a Nationally known advertising agency, to wit: "Seven years ago a client sold 90 per cent. of his entire manufacture under dealers' private brands. The panic of 1907 came, and the private branders run to cover and cancelled most of the orders. Today 80 per cent. of his goods bear his own name—he owns his own trade—consumers want goods on which his name appears."

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

There has been no change in the tea market during the week, outside of a fractional advance of about ½ cent in Congous, due to the continued demand for them from London. Other grades are quiet, the demand being sluggish and for actual wants only. The market, generally speaking, is rather in buyer's favor.

Coffee.

The coffee market is still weak, sluggish and unsatisfactory from the seller's standpoint. It is a buyer's market, though few buyers are taking advantage of it. The demand for Rio and Santos coffee is light and for actual wants; prices nominally unchanged from a week ago. The financial situation in Brazil is said to be improved somewhat, but it still has some ways to go before it will be good. Java is unchanged and quiet. Mocha is getting down to a normal basis, and sales have been made during the week in a large way at 22½ cents, which is 7 cents below the highest war price.

Sugar.

Sugar is steadily weakening, due to the approach of various crop seasons, which are certain to mean large supplies of raw sugar. England is out of the market for the present, and that also has its effect on the situation. Raws have been sold during the week as low at 3.53 cents, and granulated is now down to 5½ cents, with even lower prospects. On the present basis of raws, it should be 5 cents, anyway, and probably will be within a few weeks.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is moderately active at no change for the week, though prices on tinned syrup average about 16 cents a case above last year. Sugar syrup of very fancy grade is still very high, owing to scarcity, but the low and medium grades are comparatively cheap. Molasses is quiet and unchanged. News of the new crop is that the first receipts will be available in about two weeks, and will probably sell at moderate prices.

Fish.

Norway mackerel is in good demand at about unchanged prices, though there is still considerable uncertainty about prices, as between the combine agents and the agents of the independents. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and fairly active. Salmon of all grades are unchanged and quiet. Domestic sardines are easier, probably by about 10 cents per case. Imported sardines show no change whatever.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes went pretty badly to pieces during the week, but recovered a little as the week closed. Sales were made in a large way at 62½ cents for No. 3s, which is believed to be 7½ cents below actual cost of production, and is only slightly more than No. 2s were selling for a few weeks ago. As the week closed the market had advanced to 65 cents. Pressure to sell is the sole cause of the present very low prices, which will continue as long as the pressure continues. The demand is only fair. Corn and peas show no change and fair demand. Apples are very low and the quotation on New York State gallons is $1.85, f. o. b., in a large way, which is the lowest price for a long time. Small Eastern staple canned goods show no change, with the exception of a drop of 5 to 7½ cents in spinach, owing to a large fall pack.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes of the new pack are about ½ cent cheaper, due to lack of buying as much as anything. The demand is very light. Peaches are still about the cheapest food product on the market, but nobody is interested. Apricots dull and unchanged. Raisins steady, but the demand for new fruit is dull, owing to the quantity of 1913 fruit in buyers' hands. Currants unchanged and quiet.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans dropped to 15 cents per bushel, but recovered 10 cents

National Selling Service

National Biscuit Company advertising renders a high-class selling service. It promotes repeat business for every grocer who carries National Biscuit Company goods. It is a steady producer of results.

Successful grocers are always ready to take advantage of new goods introduced by National Biscuit Company. They know that the quality of the goods is beyond question and that they will be widely advertised.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

of it, and the present quotation in a large way is $2.45. Prospective short crop is responsible for the present feeling of firmness. Marrows average $3.50 per bushel, moderate demand. California limas are unchanged, but coast holders are talking a 10 point advance. As to the large increase in this year's crop, they say all this will be needed to fill the demand that was last year supplied by imported limas. Green and Scotch peas quiet and unchanged.

Provisions.

There is some falling off in the consumptive demand for all cuts of smoked meats, and this has caused a decline of ¼ to ½ a cent in everything. Pure lard is firm and unchanged, but compound is steady at ¼ off. There is only a moderate demand. Barrel pork, canned meats and dried beef are all unchanged and in fair demand.

Butter.

The butter market is very active, with a good consumptive demand, particularly for high-grade butter. The market is firm at an advance of 2 cents. Under grades are also firmer and show an advance of 1 cent, with a good demand. The receipts of all grades of butter are light. A continued good demand is looked for without much change in price.

Eggs.

New-laid eggs are still scarce and the market is active and firm at an advance of 2 cents per dozen. Receipts are very light. Storage eggs are also firmer at an advance of 1 cent, and show an increased demand. The market is steady.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady, with a fair consumptive demand, and the market shows an advance of ¼ cent. The quality of cheese is very fancy and stocks are reported heavier than they were a year ago. The demand from abroad still continues good.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

The canning season of 1914 for tomatoes is now on the final lap of its run, and in a couple of weeks the last factory whistle will sing its requiem, unless Jack Frost gives out the hymn earlier. Tears of joy, not of sorrow, will mark the passing, for it has been a season of trial and tribulation, hope and fear, and it has rained upon the just and the unjust alike. It is not difficult to diagnose the situation accurately, the difficulty is to apply the remedy. The stringency in the money market is the root of the trouble, and the cure is in the hands of the financial powers. The consensus of opinion, however, appears to be that the decline in the market prices has run its course.

The steady buying of tomatoes in carlots does not attract much attention, but it wears away the stocks at the cannery and the goods go into line for immediate consumption, not to come back on the market again for resale, as is the case when big blocks are bought and stored away in anticipation of a later advance. Buying tomatoes at today's low prices looks like purchasing gold dollars for 95 cents, but the lack of the ready cash to make the transaction interferes with the deal. It would be forgivable to pawn the family jewels to get the liquid cash for that purpose.

Business was dull last week in the other lines of canned vegetables, and orders for straight carlots of any one article were conspicuous only by their scarcity. Pool carload shipments appear to be the order of the day, and some of them are made up of five or six articles. Ordinarily, in periods of dullness the canners offer inducements in the way of cut prices to get business, but outside of the shading of a few quotations there is no pressure to force sales now. The fall pack of string beans, spinach and sweet potatoes has attracted orders for those items, more than for the other vegetables, but there was no snap to the market.

Pears are the only article in canned fruits to show any activity, and the largest demand is for the higher grade in heavy syrup. The buying of apples has fallen off, and only small orders came in this week. Pie peaches were fairly active, but the other grades of peaches were dull. Next to nothing was done this week in berries, cherries or pineapples, and were it not for the small stocks held here these items would be lower. They will probably not become active until the general market has some improvement.

The fall canning season for oysters is now on.

THOS. J. MEEHAN & Co.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple market continues active here, with a good demand. Buyers are asking $5\frac{1}{4}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ cents for prime, in small lots, and are selling straight carlots at 5 cents. Carlot buyers are much more plentiful and are giving orders for both prompt and November shipment.

Choice grades are quotable at $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound above prices for prime.

Raspberries hold firm, and offers are scarce. It is not possible to buy good quality below $21\frac{1}{2}$ cents, f. o. b., in barrels.

Imported Fish Specialties.

We are pleased, indeed, to report a rather brisk business in most of our lines—quite an improvement over last week and the week before. Arrivals of Holland herrings have been rather small and whatever there was of good quality found ready sale. Unfortunately, a lot of those Holland herrings were very poor stuff, and the trade will not take hold of them.

Scotch Herrings.—There is a decidedly better demand, principally because Holland herrings are scarce. The demand for Norway herrings continues very good and prices on the other side are rising.

There has been some better demand for Norway mackerel, and some larger sales have been made, although the demand is not as good as it should be, principally because there is a lot of poor Norway mackerel in the market and the trade in Norway mackerel has become very particular.

Business in foreign sardines may be considered quite fair, although it is not booming by any means. Of course, stocks here are not very large, particularly of Norway sardines. Stocks of good stuff are scarce, and they are very scarce in Norway, where there is no fishing at the present time. Of course, we are looking forward to the winter fishing very eagerly, because we need a replenishment of stocks, and what this winter fishing may bring forth no one of course knows. The trouble is that the fishing is very likely to be hampered by the mines in the North Sea, but let us hope when the winter fishing starts the war will have stopped, so that regular business may be assumed. French sardines, of course, are very scarce, as no further supplies have come forward. The stock of sprats is gradually being exhausted, as no fresh supplies are coming forward, and stocks here are very small indeed, and the demand seems to be improving.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Erie, Pa.

The members of the Erie (Pa.) Business Men's Exchange are all expected to post in their stores placard reading as follows:—

To Solicitors:—We make use of the Erie Business Men's Exchange in passing upon advertising, entertainments, churches, charities, conventions, contributions and contracts. We will consider no request unless the solicitor can show credentials from the Erie Business Men's Exchange.

Washington, (State).

At the recent convention of the Washington State Retail Merchants' Association the Committee on Legislation recommended that the association favor the passage of laws against fraudulent advertising for the bonding of collection agencies, and the right to attach wages.

Many resolutions were adopted, the principal ones being as follows:

1. Urging the maintained price since the Washington Supreme Court recently decided upon the legality;
2. Recommending a sifting committee to consider the amount of profit allowed on goods;
3. For a uniform standard for weights and measures;
4. For the attachment of funds in postal service banks;
5. Condemning anti-prohibition resolution at the last National convention;
6. Praising Washington manufacturers who maintain retail selling prices on the goods;
7. For a 50 per cent. garnishment law;
8. Adopting the recommendations in President Kinsey's address;
9. A resolution favoring a "Name on the Label Bill," which was, upon the advice of National President Connolly, tabled, but the resolution condemning the "Farm to Table" plan of the Post Office Department was opposed by a few of the delegates on the grounds that it would incur the displeasure of the farmers and consumers. The resolution was lost.

The following officers were elected: President, Thos. R. Kinsey, South Bellingham; secretary, T. C. Simmons, Seattle; treasurer, A. S. Paul, Seattle; vice-president, First Congressional District, O'Rourke, Seattle; Second Congressional District, J. C. Parr, Cle Lake; Third Congressional District, C. A. Holmes, Aberdeen; Fourth Congressional District, M. Dean, North Yakima; Fifth Congressional District, W. L. M. Eachran, Spokane; trustees, M. Pearsall, Seattle; C. H. Rychar, Hoquiam; Peter Funk, Arlington; John Ditter, North Yakima.

Again in Season!

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

Announcement Extraordinary!

Our November catalogue, with its complete stock of Holiday Goods, is in the mails.

Note what we say—complete stock of Holiday Goods.

We believe we have enough Christmas merchandise to last the usual thirty days. This will be an agreeable surprise to the November buyers whose information on the Holiday Goods situation has led them to believe even Butler Brothers' Holiday Stock would be riddled by this time.

The fact is, we have since August 1st deliberately husbanded our Holiday Stocks for the benefit of the many thousands of merchants who buy in November. These merchants have come to rely on us so complete for their Holiday Supplies that they naturally would expect us to take care of them in November—war or no war.

They won't be disappointed. We have the goods. Just one more word, though: Buyers who delay even one day longer will do so at their own risk.

Giving Orders and Then Calling 'Em Off.

See what you think of this one.

You hear a lot and you read a lot about this business of giving orders for stuff and then calling 'em off. They put up some pretty strong talk about it—how a fellow ought to know what he wants before he orders, and how after he orders he ought to stick to it, and all that.

And it's pretty blamed near all true, too. I've had too many orders cancelled on me in the last fifteen years not to say amen to every word of it. People tell me the trouble with me is, when I'm working for an order, and they look into my bright, happy, open mug, they just lose track of what they're doing and sign anything. That ain't my fault, I was born that way.

There ain't any come back when you say that a fellow ought not to order goods he ain't sure he wants, any more than he ought to put his name to any other paper when his mind ain't all made up. But the fact is that a whole lot of fellows do it and can't seem to help it. I've got a hunch that if they knew they couldn't back out, it might make a difference. There'd be less orders, but what there was would be more good.

But that's up to the jobber and the manufacturer. As long as they let their people cancel orders on 'em, why they'll be cancelled, that's the whole of that.

Now here's what a fellow told me last week:—

"I can't always be sure that I want exactly what I order," he said, "I mean when I order of a salesman. I can when I order by mail, and in all the twenty-six years I've been in business I've never cancelled an order that I gave by mail. That's because I have my mind all made up before I write the letter.

"But when a salesman comes here it's different. Take yourself. You come in here to get me to order something. Maybe I haven't given a minute's thought to it. Maybe I'm in a hurry. You push me along and have an answer for everything, and after I get all warmed up and comfortable in that stream of hot air that you turn on me (It ain't so.—Me) why just as like as not I tell you to go ahead and send 'em—whatever it is. You don't give me any time to consider and what you've got from me is a half-baked order. After you go and the office cools off then I begin to think about it."

"I pass over your base allusions to myself," I said with ice cold dignity, "because there ain't going to be any personalities in this campaign. What you say doubtless applies to other salesmen but it couldn't possibly apply to me."

Between you and me that's about the only come back I could think of just then, but I've thought up a better one since and I'm going to hand it to him the next time I see him. I'm going to say this to him:—

I'm going to say, "there ain't a blamed thing in what you said—no a blamed thing. Maybe I as a salesman oughtn't to be saying this but there ain't any reason why you should sign any order until you've worked the thing out in your own mind. When a fellow comes here and tries to push you into signing up for something—mind say when "a fellow" does; I don't say when I do, for I don't do it—listen to his story and then say to him 'all right, I've got your story and I'll probably order some of the goods. But I don't know how many until I've thought it over and I ain't got time to think it over while you're here. I'll get into it to-night and send you the order tomorrow if I decide to take 'em in. Be fair about it, understand, and don't say that just to get rid of him. If you're sure you ain't going to want the goods, put him out of his misery right then.

"If after you think it over you decide you want the goods and how

¶ Everybody knows J. S. Ivins' Son, the Philadelphia bakers, who have gone further than most other bakers in their efforts to produce the finest, purest goods possible to manufacture—goods that will show all the food law requires and then some. As a part of their plan they have formulated the following "Purity Guarantee":—

We guarantee that our products are not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Pennsylvania Food Laws approved May 13, 1909, or the Act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale or transportation of adulterated, misbranded, poisonous or deleterious foods, etc."

Although the above laws permit the use of the following materials under certain conditions, we, in addition, further guarantee our products to be free of lard-compound, cotton-seed oil, adulterated chocolate, imitation honey, desiccated or frozen eggs, preservatives, benzoate of soda, alum, artificial colors, or any harmful or unwholesome ingredient.

We use selected candled shell eggs only.

any, that order won't be called off, because you'll know what you're doing. D'ye get me?"

"How many salesmen would let me do that?" he'll say to me—I can hear him now.

"Let you? How are they going to stop you?" is what I'll say. "I'd rather you'd do it than not, for when I got an order from you then I know I could count on it."

I suppose I'll be expelled from the Independent Order of Sweaty Salesmen for saying this. This is against the good of the lodge, I know that. Get the order before you leave—that's what we're taught. But not so, brethren, if the order is going to be cancelled, and a blamed sight rather not have it for it saves some cussing. There is such a thing as being too blamed good a salesman, if you know what I mean. Like the fellow that sold a safety razor to an old maid 60 years old on the argument that it would come in handy if she ever had a boy. She would have cancelled that order if she hadn't paid cash, but we can't get cash for our stuff.

CCLXXXIII.—A Popular Clause—Among Landlords—in Business Leases and Something About Protecting One's Self From It When One is Not a Landlord.

I have just concluded a case growing out of a lease which gave me a suggestion for one of these articles. The discussion should be useful to everybody—to everybody who owns real estate which he rents to a tenant, to the tenant himself, to the creditors of the tenant, and even to the creditors of the landlord.

I have always contended that the average lease of real estate was the most iron clad and one-sided legal contract in the world. It gives the tenant possession of the premises and the privilege of paying rent for it, and almost every question that can arise under the lease it decides in advance in the landlord's favor. The tenant of course signs, because he has no alternative—the landlord would often refuse to rent to him if he did not. Then too he seldom reads his lease, and for that matter neither does the average landlord.

In all the States of the Union today you can buy form leases at stationery and legal book stores containing this clause:—

10th.—If lessee shall make an assignment for the benefit of creditors, or be declared a bankrupt, or if the goods upon said premises should be sold under execution against him, then the rent for the balance of the then term shall at once become due and payable as if by the terms of this lease it were all payable in advance, and shall be first paid out of proceeds of such assignment or sale, any law, usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

This clause is usually used only in business leases, where a building is leased for a store or office or manufactory. The above clause is of course most unfair, because if any of the above disasters occur the tenancy would come to an end and the tenant would vacate. Therefore this clause compels the tenant to pay for something which he will never get. Nevertheless the clause is perfectly binding and will be everywhere enforced. Many courts have passed on this identical provision, and have always upheld it on the ground that it was first not against public policy, and second because as the landlord could have made the entire rent payable in advance, at the beginning of the lease, he has an equal right to make the entire balance instantly payable upon the happening of some contingency, such as the financial difficulties of the tenant.

There is in all States some law prescribing a limit to the amount of rent a landlord can collect as a preferred claim in case of bankruptcy and similar contingencies. Usually this is one year's rent; in other words no landlord can claim more than one year's rent—that is, he cannot claim more as a preferred claim, though he can come in with the rest of the creditors.

Now let me show how this clause works out. It is chiefly important to the creditors of a merchant or business man who is sold out by the sheriff or makes an assignment for his creditors' benefit. In a case which occurred under my own observation, the tenant was a retail dealer who had gotten rather deeply in debt. One of his creditors held a judgment note which he entered up, and issued execution upon. There was enough on the premises, apparently, to pay his claim in full, none of the creditors were moving to put the tenant into bankruptcy, and it looked as if the creditor was going to be able to collect pretty nearly all his claim.

As the case proceeded, it developed that the tenant held his store premises under a lease which contained the above clause, giving the landlord the right to collect the entire balance of the rent if the tenant got into business difficulties and had to be sold out. The tenant owed only two months' rent, but his lease had five months to run. It was of course right that he should be allowed to collect the two months already had, but in addition to that the law allowed him to collect five months more, though the tenant is out of business and the building is vacant.

The result was that this rent claim ate up practically all the proceeds of the sale, and the other creditors got little or nothing.

This is why I say that the subject is particularly interesting to the creditors of a tenant bound by a lease like this. Naturally it is also interesting to the landlord who has bound his tenant by such a lease. The tenant himself is not in a position to care so much, for if he is bankrupt it makes little difference to him how his estate is distributed among his creditors.

So far as I can tell, this clause would be enforced in every State of the Union, up to the limit prescribed by the given State as to the amount of rent that a landlord can claim if anything happens to his tenant.

The situation is changed if a tenant actually goes into bankruptcy. Under the National Bankruptcy act, an adjudication in bankruptcy ends a lease, and the landlord can therefore only collect the rent that has already accrued. In many cases, however, a business man who is unable to pay his debts will not go through bankruptcy, but will turn his assets over to his creditors in some other way.

My thought is that a lease like this should be considered a factor in the granting of credits. A jobber will often grant credit to a retailer whose stock and fixtures are apparently good security, forgetting that almost all the proceeds of a forced sale of the stock and fixtures might be absorbed by a rent claim under a lease with the above clause in it. It might easily be that the landlord could collect eleven months' rent, or even twelve, though every cent of it was future and not past.

Question: * * *, N. J.—I am closing for your inspection and vice as to its merits and your opinion subscription blank of Economic Power and Product Co., converted of wood paper pulp from cotton bush and roots. I am of the opinion that you may know something of this concern and may be able to correctly advise me.

Answer.—The scheme is that the Economic Power and Products Co. of Philadelphia, which is selling stock at $10 per share, of common being given for each share of common with every share of preferred. On the face of the contract is attached this utterly meaningless and transparent bait: "Please notice. The preferred stock of the Economic Power and Products Co. is at the discretion of the company redeemable after two years at the advance price of $12.50 per share including 7 per cent. interest." The company may redeem the stock at an advance of 25 per cent. at the end of two years, but I have my doubts.

This scheme is new to me, though I know some of the people connected with it. I do not consider it a good investment.

Question: * * *, Lebanon, Pa.—Do the School Boards of the State of Pennsylvania have the power of eminent domain?

Answer.—Not the unlimited right of eminent domain. Under the act of 1895 school boards can take burying grounds by right of eminent domain for school purposes. And under the act of 1901 school boards can take private property in the same way for private libraries.

Question: J. G. Schreyer, Milton, Pa.—Is the interpretation of the commodity weight law such that every grocer will be compelled to mark the contents on every package of bulk goods he sells, and will be necessary to mark the name of the article sold along side of the number?

If so, can you suggest any way that paper bags can be printed to save the extra work of marking number of pounds and name of article on each package weighed out? The point that seems to us to be the hardest to overcome is this: a pound of sugar or rice will go in one pound bag while a pound of crackers requires a three or four-pound bag, so we cannot clearly see how bags can be printed to suit the weights of all commodities a grocer puts in them. We thought of getting our bags printed as marked on enclosed one in lead pencil and then fill out the pounds and name of article as we use the bags. Can you suggest any better plan?

Answer.—My clear judgment is that neither the Federal nor the Pennsylvania State net weight law requires retail grocers to mark goods that are sold in bulk and then put in bags. Such as six pounds of sugar, weighed out and put in a paper bag, or a dozen eggs, counted out and put in a bag, and so on. The reason for this opinion is twofold. First, the clear language of the law makes a distinction between goods "in package form," and others, which others I take it to mean are goods sold in bulk. Second, with six pounds of sugar, a dozen eggs, and so on, the goods are weighed or counted to fill a specific order. There is no need to tell the consumer by any label what she is getting, for she knows. She has ordered that particular quantity.

My judgment is that the law applies only to packages that are put up in advance, such as the National Biscuit Co.'s goods, Baker's cocoa, package spices and a host of other things, and that its object is to make it certain that consumers are not deceived, whether intentionally or otherwise, by the belief that a package which is sold merely as a package, contains more than it does.

I know that some of the authorities who are to enforce these laws have shown a disposition to take a contrary view, but in my opinion they are wrong.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"We can absolutely guarantee the weight and purity of this sugar. It's a granulated of the very finest quality that can be produced."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants to put it, the following address to the retail trade has been issued by the Nash Hardware Co., of Fort Worth, Texas:

To the Retail Trade:—

We are not in the cotton business, but we know enough to say that an article or commodity is only worth what it will bring when offered for sale. If 8 cents per pound, or even 7 cents per pound, is all that a farmer can get for cotton, then that is all that cotton is worth, regardless of what it costs to raise it.

It is said that a farmer cannot raise cotton at less than 10 cents per pound, yet a great many thousand farmers get rich, or at least independent, raising it at 7 cents per pound, and that was when everything else that he raised was sold at a very much lower figure than is ruling to-day, and everything that he bought cost a good deal more than to-day. Besides this, he didn't get $7 per bale for seed, as he gets to-day.

We give you the following comparisons:—

He buys a hoe for 50 cents that used to cost 75 cents.

He buys a file at 15 cents that used to cost 35 cents.

He buys a single tree at 35 cents that used to cost 50 cents.

He buys a sweep at 8 cents that used to cost 15 cents per pound.

He buys a plier at 75 cents that used to cost $2.

He buys nails at 4 cents that used to cost 5 cents per pound.

He buys wire at 3½ cents that used to cost 10 cents per pound.

He buys hames at 50 cents that used to cost 75 cents.

He buys traces at 45 cents that used to cost 75 cents.

He pays 60 cents for picking where he used to pay $1.

He borrows money at 8 to 10 per cent, where he used to pay 12 and 15 per cent.

He sells what at $1 that used to bring 60 cents.

He sells oats at 50 cents that used to bring 18 cents.

He sells corn at 75 cents that used to bring 15 cents.

He sells hay at $14 that used to bring $4.

He sells turkeys at $2.25, and sometimes $4, that used to bring 60 to 75 cents.

He sells chickens at $3.50 that used to sell at $1.25 to $1.50 per dozen.

He sells a horse at $150 to $225 that used to sell from $50 to $100.

When he was confronted with the above conditions he bought land on time, cleared it, fenced it and soon paid for it, raising cotton at 7 cents per pound. But if, indeed, he is making less profit this year than formerly, the same condition is true with you, and with us, and with the business world at large. He ought not to put himself in the attitude of a mendicant, or, as the Indian, a ward of the Government. He ought to be a good sport. He ought to take his losses just as manfully and as gracefully as the rest of us are doing.

The retail merchant owes it to himself, to his jobber and to his bank to insist on the farmers selling at least a part of their cotton. A man has an unquestioned right to speculate on his own money, but he has no right to speculate on the other fellow's money. The farmer has a right to hold his cotton till doomsday, if he does not owe anything; but he has no right whatever to hold his cotton to the financial embarrassment of the retail merchant, who, since spring, has fed and clothed his wife and children and furnished him with the means with which to make that cotton.

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 19, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We are inclosing you one of our special ads. which we are running this week.

We would ask you to kindly criticize same in your next issue of long across four columns. The Drislane Co. sends me a proof only, which was not very well taken and is therefore not very good for reproducing. However, I have had it photographed in reduced size and here present it:—

too much matter in it. It is crowded there has been no chance whatever to take advantage of the effectiveness of white space, which is to an advertisement, I often think, what pauses are in conversation. I particularly dislike the use of italic type side by side with Roman type, which means straight to the point. To me it never seems to hit it.

I don't know whether the printer used his own judgment in designing this advertisement or whether he merely followed as he was told by the Drislane Co., in fixing up all those blocks he made himself a lot of work without the least increasing the effectiveness of the advertisement. In fact, as I see it, he has marred its effectiveness. To begin with, I should not have used so wide a border. In the original it was three-quarters of an inch wide around the advertisement. Why give so much valuable space to a border? A quarter-inch border would have been enough. Then I should have run the heading about as it is now and followed with a few strong lines of introduction. The balance of the space I should have divided by long column rules into three columns and displayed the various headed paragraphs in those, separating them with other rules or dashes. The advertisement would have been much easier to set that way, and would, I think, have presented a much clearer and more inviting appearance. The present advertisement to me is not inviting at all, owing to the way the printer has put it together.

Just a word as to the matter. I should never crowd so much stuff into an advertisement that it left me no room to talk a little about the goods. That is what has been done here—on one side of a few things, nothing whatever has been said for the goods advertised except the one insufficient statement in the heading that they are offered at bargain prices."

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Awards in the Moxley's Oleomargarine Ad-writing Contest

¶ The judges have had the usual difficulty in making their selections—the competing advertisements seem to get better every month. The prizes are awarded as follows:—

First Prize, $20—F. M. ROOT, Newark, N. J.

Second “ $10—C. J. WOOD, Corry, Pa.

Third “ $ 5—K. RAGAN, Quicksand, Ky.

¶ The advertisements on the opposite page are considered worthy of honorable mention.

FIRST PRIZE

SAVED 36c. a Week

A housewife with a family of four says she has saved thirty-six cents a week on an average for the past four years. How? By using instead of butter. And the family have kept in excellent health all this time. She has saved practically

MOXLEY'S OLEOMARGARINE

Seventy-five Dollars

Surely this testimony ought to convince anyone who is in doubt. Let us hand you samples. The use of Moxley's Oleomargarine is growing by leaps and bounds.

SECOND PRIZE

NOT FICTION, But a True Story

A young couple own a fine bungalow on shores of Lake Chautauqua where they make their Summer Home, and last season invited Father and Mother from the Farm to pay them a visit. They coupled with the invitation a request “Bring some of your good Country Butter. Hubby and I eat MOXLEY'S OLEOMARGARINE and like it better than Butter, but I fear you might spleen against it.”

The invitation was accepted and the Butter brought. In a spirit of fun the young Housewife fashioned a ball of Oleomargarine to look just like Father's Butter and placed it in lone state on the table, in the midst of the Dinner, Father as he spread the supposed Butter thick on his buiscuit called the attention of his Children to this sweet waxey grainey Butter churned from Jersey Cream when fit to churn, and cooled with pure spring water.

MORAL

Eat Moxley's Oleomargarine. Save on the high cost of living. A product fit for the Gods. Pure and clean as the morning dew on the clover blossom, healthy as the air we breathe.

Submitted by C. J. Wood
413 Concora St., Corry, Pa.

THIRD PRIZE

Ask for a Sample of Moxley's Oleomargarine

There are people in this town who used to shudder when oleomargarine as a food product was mentioned. They thought it grease — or worse. We have changed the current of their thoughts by showing them that contains all the essential elements of fine butter. That it is as good as butter, and that the cost is about one-third less, are two points worthy of consideration in these days when we hear so much of the high cost of living.

Let us give you a sample on a cracker or biscuit.

Men Like Good "Eats" and they like William J. Moxley's Special Butterine because of the rich, creamy delicious flavor, and Madam you will like it because it is absolutely pure, government inspected and made under the most sanitary conditions.

And then, last but not least, the cost, compared with the ever increasing cost of butter has brought Moxley's Butterine into lasting favor through its army of users, not only for the sake of economy but for those who insist on the purest of food products always.

Insiston Moxley's which is equal to the best creamery butter in taste and wholesomeness.

Better include a pound in your next order.

Moxley's Oleomargarine

Better than most butter, as good as the best butter.

Appetizing Nourishing Economical Uniform Reliable

Contented cows; beautiful farms, grassy meadows are pictured to you to sell you butter, but these cows often find poor pasture, garlic and weeds, and butter churned from their milk will be grassy, garlicky or rancid. That is why butter is so unreliable in quality.

Moxley's Oleomargarine

is scientifically prepared out of cream and animal fats after a perfected, standard formula, insuring uniformity, and is reliable in quality.

Dealers can tell of many instances of patrons when entertaining guests being asked, "Where do you get this delicious butter?" With the answer, "That's not butter, it's Moxley's Oleomargarine, and costs only half as much as butter."

MOXLEY'S OLEOMARGARINE

Is not "imitation butter." It is not an imitation of anything. It is just itself, Butterine. Better by far than any country-made butter. Pure and cleaner and more nutritious than creamery butter.

It is made of sweet cream; pure, clean, creamery-made butter; oil from fresh beef fat and leaf lard, all churned together by machinery, perfectly scientific and sanitary.

OLEOMARGARINE

is

Cleaner than butter;

Purer than butter;

More healthful than butter;

Cheaper than butter.

Why not use it then instead of butter?

Just so the unscrupulous dealers had their calculations knocked sky high who during the recent prolonged drought when pastures were dried and parched to the very roots, boasted the consumer would pay 60 cents for butter. Here's where

Moxley's Special Oleomargarine

Scored a Hold Down

Its unprecedented and increasing sale tells the whole story.

Don't think because you cannot see the milk maid—a beaten up old flossy—with the milk stool that the quality is not there.

Moxley's Special

is a most delightful dainty morsel of pure food product. We insist that you compare it as such, not with the ordinary brands, but side by side with the best butter obtainable. You will find it sweeter, purer, better than the very highest grades of butter, and its cost so helps to make the pay reach round.

Insist on Moxley's Special.

What Has Moxley Done?

Moxley has furnished us with Moxley's Oleomargarine, the finest, purest and most delicious product of its kind on the market to-day.

Moxley has cut the price of spreading your bread from a third to a half. You will save that much if you use Moxley's.

Moxley has squelched the prejudice against oleomargarine wherever Moxley's has been used.

Give Moxley's a trial on bread or hot cakes. Take home a pound to your family and "pass the butter." They won't know the difference. Then tell them it's Moxley's and they'll ask for more.

And at the end of a week you'll find a lot of butter money left in that little bowl on the shelf.

The password to-day in the war on high-priced butter is "Moxley's." Give your grocer the countersign and he will put you on friendly terms with Moxley's.

Chief Sweeney of Pennsylvania Bureau Explains New Net Weight Law to Philadelphia Grocers

In a Talk Last Monday Evening He Attempts to Explain the Law and the Attitude of His Department Concerning It. Thinks Laundry Soap Must be Marked With Number of Cakes Even if There is Only One.

At the monthly meeting of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association, at the Bourse last Monday evening, James Sweeney, Chief of the Pennsylvania State Bureau of Standards, which is to enforce the new weights and measures act of 1913, made an address, in which he was supposed to explain the law and announce the attitude of his department concerning it. In an effort to do this Mr. Sweeney did not go quite as far into detail as he might have done. A partial stenographic report of his address appears below. The meeting opened about 8.15 and Mr. Sweeney was at once introduced:—

The weight and measure laws of Pennsylvania are not intended to harass or interfere with the business of our State or the business people. The purpose of the law is to protect the consumer from those who might be dishonest, and we are glad to say that there is a very small percentage of the business men of Pennsylvania who are not honest.

For many years this State was without any legislation of this character and consequently a great many evils crept into the business life of Pennsylvania. For instance, there were a great many scales and measures that were inaccurate, that were not so intentionally, perhaps, but as there had been no official inspection of the weighing devices of the State, many men used inaccurate scales and measures without knowing it.

This law will protect the honest dealer as well as the consumer, because the honest dealer who gave 16 ounces to the pound could not compete with a man who gave only 12.

Your president, in stating to you that I had the enforcing of this law, or, rather, that I am vested with authority to enforce this law, is, in a measure, in error. The enforcement of this law has been placed in the hands of your inspectors of this city. They, of course, must be governed by the regulations; that is, they must be guided by the law itself.

I glean from the nature of the correspondence I received from your association that it was the purpose of the members of your association to ask several questions in regard to the requirements of this law, so if any of you want to ask questions regarding any particular provision of the law, I will make an effort to explain so far as I understand it.

But first I want to call your attention to some of the devices that have been used. There is a scale, called the family scale, which has a certain adjustment under the pan. The dealer, if he wants to be dishonest, has his finger on that adjustment when he places a commodity on the pan, making it weigh as much as he pleases by more or less pressure. This particular type of scale is not permitted to be used in this State, and they have nearly all been confiscated and condemned by the sealers unless a cap is put over that screw.

Every conceivable device by some people had been in use in weighing commodities in this State before there was official inspection. In this pamphlet (Mr. Sweeney had this literature with him) that we issue, there is one measure shown that is supposed to be a peck measure which is 116 cubic inches short, or nearly two quarts. We figured that a huckster who sell a certain quantity of potatoes in a year, would, by using this measure, cause a loss of over $700 to the people whom he served.

We have inspected about 700,000 scales, out of which 100,000 have been confiscated and several hundred thousand have had to be adjusted.

The law directs the chief of the bureau to fix the tolerance on goods that are to be put in package form. This applies to goods that are subject to losses owing to climatic conditions where they may be kept. That is, they have a certain shrinkage. If there were not some tolerance permitted and a commodity were examined and placed on a scale and a loss discovered, the merchant would be held responsible despite the fact that the loss was due to a natural shrinkage. The establishing of a proper amount of tolerance has not been a very easy proposition, because when we came to get some information we found that the packers themselves had very little knowledge of the amount of shrinkage on their particular products. It took us nearly a year to arrive at the tolerances.

Section 4 of the Commodities Act reads: "It shall be unlawful to use any measure unless it shall have thereon the capacity." For instance, if you are using a half-peck measure and it is not so marked, you are violating the law and subject to penalty.

A container is something in which you sell anything.

If you sell a commodity in package form, the container is considered a package. You must have on the outside the weight of any goods that are sold in any kind of a carton. Take a pound carton of butter; under the law this is considered a package, and it will be necessary to have it marked with the weight. A sixteenth of an ounce tolerance is permitted on butter. That is, if a package of butter marked one pound is weighed by the inspector in your store and weighs one-sixteenth of an ounce less than a pound, you are not subject to a fine.

Whenever you sell any commodity that is named in this law that has a standard weight, it will be necessary for you to ascertain the number of pounds fixed by law. For instance, we will take a bushel of potatoes—60 pounds. A half bushel must be marked 30 pounds, etc.

In fixing these weights we had to be governed by weights fixed in other States a great deal, and it may be possible that you men who have had wider experience than I have, may find some of the weights not what they should be on different commodities. If you will write me I shall be glad to investigate and have an amendment made before the Legislature convenes.

Members were then invited to ask questions, with the following result:—

Question.—If I sell a woman a half peck of potatoes, how should the potatoes be marked?

Answer.—You don't have to mark them unless already done up in packages for sale, when the number of pounds must be given.

Question.—I purchase a lot of bacon outside the State and it comes wrapped, but not marked, and I sell it in the wrapper. What redress would I have when the seller is outside the State?

Answer.—I know of this condition. I have had some correspondence on the subject, and the matter is now in the hands of the Attorney-General. He claims that that is under the head of "package." I believe that the best thing for you to do would be to write to the man from whom you purchased that and ask him to mark it as it should be marked or sell it to you without wrapping at all. I know they claim it is wrapped for sanitary purposes, but I do not know whether the health laws require anything of that kind or not.

Question.—In buying lambs, the big stick which is passed through the lamb by which it is hung on the scales weighs about a pound. We are billed for the weight of the lambs, including the stick. Is this right?

Answer.—If you will write me a letter and give me the name of the party or parties practicing this, I will communicate with them and explain what the law is and will also inform them that unless they comply with the law they will be subject to a penalty.

Question.—Even the people like Armour and Swift do this.

Answer.—I know the big people do this and they are the ones we are having the most trouble with.

Question.—Is it necessary to mark jars such as pint or quart jars containing peaches, cherries, eight-ounce glasses of jelly?

Answer.—If you sell them in a jar you must mark the quantity.

Question.—Should soap be marked by weight or count?

Answer.—As it is customary to sell by count, the package should bear the number of bars that the box contains, even if it is only one bar. It has been demonstrated that the people of Pennsylvania have been buying a great deal that they could not use, so this law was framed to protect them. Of course, it would seem unnecessary to mark "one bar of soap," but you cannot draw a line, so everything must be marked. (However, toilet soaps are exempt from the law.) Long bars of soap are sold by the pound.

Question.—Concerning the buying of nuts and the tare weight?

Answer.—The bag should have on the outside the net weight in pounds. You need not accept nuts that are not marked, as you could not sell them in this State. Of course, the California nut people are outside of the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania, but the Federal Department can take care of this, because it is in violation of the interstate commerce laws.

Question.—When does this law go into effect?

Answer.—On the first day of January, 1914, except as to certain packages prepared prior to July, 1913, which have 18 months more grace. The law is in effect on these goods after January, 1915.

Question.—What would be the condition of our stock now on our shelves?

Answer.—It will have to be marked. The 18 months have been given so as not to work any hardship on you as to goods packed prior to July, 1913.

Question.—In regard to the goods on hand after the expiration of the 18 months, suppose we have a can that contains, say, about eight ounces. Would we be within the law if we mark it "not less than seven ounces"?

Answer.—Mark it simply "seven ounces."

In connection with the question regarding potatoes, the thought comes to me, it would be best if all goods of that class were sold by weight and that measure be entirely done away with. An attempt along this line would meet with a great deal of opposition at present, so we will wait a year or two and then make some effort in this direction. There are some States in the Union where this system is used at present.

Question.—Is it permissible for a dealer to mark any package himself, stating approximately the amount contained?

Answer.—You must mark the net weight only. All extra words are meaningless in the eyes of the law.

Question.—I find that the majority of California dried fruits run a half pound short.

Answer.—The man who sells anything not correctly marked is subject to a fine, but we cannot catch the California people. You must refuse to buy from such firms.

Question.—Is there any redress for the grocer or butcher who has to buy provisions that are heavily wrapped, which is charged for along with the weight of the commodity bought?

Answer.—Take this up with the inspector in the district where these goods are packed.

Mr. Kaiser.—The Federal Department has decided that wrappings of hams and provisions need not be marked. Mr. Sweeney has told us that that question is now up to the Attorney-General to be decided upon.

Question.—Should sauer kraut be sold by liquid or dry measure?

Answer.—We have discussed that question at our sealers' conference. The best way would be to sell by weight, and I believe the inspectors in a good many places are insisting on this, but I cannot say definitely.

(Remark by one of the members.—I would state that I put that question to an inspector who said that it had to be sold by liquid measure, and took the dry measure out of the kraut.)

Question.—I find that there are some apples that do not weigh 30 pounds to the half peck, although that is the requirements, according to law. What about this?

Answer.—We have made quite a few tests and find that a half peck should weigh 30 pounds, so you will have to give the 30 pounds to the half peck.

Foot and Mouth Disease Seriously Threatening Supply of Cattle.

The Pittsburg (Pa.) Union Stock Yards at Herr's Island are under Government quarantine as the result of the discovery of cattle infected with foot and mouth disease. State Veterinarian J. Marshall, of Harrisburg; N. B. Hitchfield, secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, and Dr. George Diteg, representing the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Federal Government, are in Pittsburg in charge of the stock yards. The official quarantine will probably continue for several months and will put a stop to business at the stock yards during that time. While an embargo is on animals can be taken from the yards only for immediate slaughter. At the yards are about 2,400 cattle, 700 horses and 4,000 hogs that are en route from the West to Philadelphia consigned to the Allies in Europe. The horses will not be detained longer than a few days, but will be disinfected, put into sealed cars and shipped to the port. In Europe the disease is widespread and is fought only by quarantine and not by slaughter of infected animals. All the cattle affected in the Pittsburg yards are being put to death immediately. Cattle shipped into Pittsburg from the West are being sent right through to their destination whenever this is possible, though under ordinary conditions this is where they are taken off the cars for feeding and rest. The Chicago stock yards have also been closed for the same reason and the supply of cattle for food purposes is being seriously threatened.

Pop Corn and the High Cost of Living.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture, in a recent bulletin, says that fewer nickels would be spent for less wholesome knick-knacks if a supply of pop corn and a popper were kept in homes. Why not supply your trade?

A more delicious and wholesome connection than pop corn cannot be found. Whiteness and nutritiousness—a happy combination. Just think! You can eat pop corn until your desire is satisfied, and it will not harm you.

As a food pop corn has considerable value; it is superior to many of the breakfast foods now on the market. That statement comes from Uncle Sam's food specialists. Need any more be said of pop corn as a food?

For breakfast, popped corn is delicious with milk or cream. Add sugar if desired. In this an agreeable surprise awaits you. The parched unpopped kernels, when ground like coffee, make a nice breakfast food with milk or cream and sugar. Or, the ground kernels may be boiled and served like oatmeal.

These suggestions will be welcomed by your customers as a help in solving the high-cost-of-living problem. Pop corn in itself is very reasonable in price. A fair idea of its economy may be had when it is considered that it pops from 15 to 20 times its original bulk. Be sure to get good corn. The best is the cheapest and better results will be obtained.—Adv't.

What is the "Flavor" of Tea

The Flavor of Tea is a dainty Perfume, easily lost upon exposure to the air. That is why Bulk Tea cannot run uniform in flavor or aroma. It is impossible to retain the delicate fragrance of any tea that is handled in bulk.

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

WITH THE EDITOR

In another column the "Stroller" has an article on the inefficiency of merchants' associations as to getting anything for the business interests out of politics. The point is made that both Congress and State Legislatures pay much more attention to labor and farmers' organizations than they do to merchants' organizations, because the two former are solidly organized and go into politics to enforce their demands, while the average merchants' organization does not figure in politics at all.

When we read this article we had no idea that strong proof of what it claims would be received so soon. The proof comes from the Retail Grocers' Protective Union of Pittsburgh and vicinity, in the form of a printed address to business men which begins as follows:—

Merchants and Business Men:—

All candidates for the State Legislature from Allegheny County were interrogated as to how they stood and would vote (if elected) on the following bills, viz.:—

No. 1. "The Mitchell 10 Per Cent. Collection or Garnishee Law."
No. 2. "Repeal of the Mercantile Tax Law."

No. 3. "A law to license and regulate the selling and distribution of Trading Stamps, Coupons, etc."

In Allegheny County there are eleven districts, containing fifty-four members of the House of Representatives. Of this number twenty-two—nearly half—contemptuously ignored the letter of the Pittsburgh association. In the same county there are four Senatorial districts, from which ten Senators are elected. Of these, five—just half—paid no attention.

The only reason these servants of the people ignored pertinent and proper questions from the people they were supposed to serve, is that they thought the Pittsburgh association didn't amount to anything, and they didn't have to answer. Would they have ignored questions from a labor organization or a Farmers' Grange? The writer is very sure that they would not.

In a measure, the belief of these politicians that the Pittsburgh association amounts to nothing is correct. It probably does not amount to anything politically—in fact we don't know a merchants' organization that does. Even the Philadelphia associations don't even pretend to. This is particularly regrettable when it is remembered that there is not a merchants' organization anywhere but that could amount to a great deal politically if it would set about it.

Last Monday evening James Sweeney, Chief of the Pennsylvania Bureau of Standards, attempted to explain to the members of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association the new weights and measures act of 1913, particularly that part of it which has reference to the labeling of package goods. Most of his statements were undoubtedly supported by the act, but the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" does not agree with some of them, and believes that if the questions at issue get into the courts the department will not be upheld.

The chief devoted some of his address to telling what the law required as to the labeling of butter. He did not clearly show that he realized the difference between butter sold in cartons prepared by the manufacturer—there are several brands of this—and butter sold out of a tub or box. If when he says that butter must be marked with the net weight he means ready-packed carton butter, he is undoubtedly right. If he means butter sold in bulk from a tub or box, he is in our judgment wrong, because we believe butter so sold is sold in bulk and does not require labeling.

This paper particularly disagrees with the chief as to the requirements of the law as to laundry soap. He says it must be marked with the number of cakes, even though there is only one. In other words, the ordinary wrapped cake of laundry soap, according to him, must be marked "one cake of soap"! Not only is this absurd, but it is directly contradicted by the law, which says that package goods must be marked with a statement of weight, measure or numerical count, thus giving to the packer the option which to use. The chief makes it appear as if laundry soap must be marked with the numerical count and nothing else, while we believe that it must be marked with the weight and nothing else, if it has to be marked anything. We do not believe, however, that laundry soap needs to be marked anything. Whether this is true or not, we would willingly make a small wager that no court will compel a single bar to bear a statement so superfluous and silly as "one bar of soap." The courts have some sense if Mr. Sweeney has not.

He gave an amazing explanation of his belief that bars of soap must be marked "one bar." "It has been demonstrated," he said, "that the people of Pennsylvania have been buying a great deal that they could not use, so this law was framed to protect them." We did begin to answer this, but what is the use? The act of 1913 is a weight and measure law and just as sure as anything can be, it will never be tortured into an act preventing consumers from buying soap that Mr. Sweeney thinks they could not use.

In an article on price-cutting, contributed by John Allen Underwood to the last Leslie's Weekly, the following statement is made.

Not Quite Fair.

It is almost always heard in connection with price-cutting discussions:

When a retailer sells a dollar watch for 60 cents, or a cake of 5-cent soap for 3 cents, he necessarily loses money on this particular transaction. He has no desire to lose money. His reason for cutting the price on such articles is partly to attract customers to his store, but mainly to advertise himself to those customers as selling all of his other goods—which are not of a standard or known value—at similarly advantageous prices. This is a misrepresentation, for he does nothing of the sort. If he did, he would soon be compelled to go out of business.

We believe this to be hardly accurate. If true, it puts every dealer who offers a real bargain in the position of misrepresenting his business. Of course that is not so.

The real desire in many merchants' minds when they cut a price—and it is a perfectly legitimate desire—is to bring people into the store. There is of course a much better chance of selling a custommer who is actually in your store than of selling one who is not, and the merchant has a right to take advantage of that fact. If he can bring somebody in by the offer of a 5-cent soap for 3 cents, she may be inspired by the sight of other goods to buy some of them. That is a little fair statement of the case, we believe, and probably a little truer one. No merchant is fool enough to try and persuade people he is selling everything below cost.

It is regarded as certain that the coming Pennsylvania Legislature will be asked to amend the cold storage food law of 1913. Nobody is satisfied with it. It has cost the wholesale trade thousands of dollars by putting a ban on perfectly wholesome food products merely because they have been stored longer than the Legislature was told by some ignoramus that ought to be. It has surrounded the retail business with enormous difficulties and inconveniences, which it has not helped the consumer one particle. If he exercised his option to boycott cold storage food, the act of 1913 made it easier for him to do so, but he then paid more and got no better stuff. Even the Dairy and Food Commissioner, who is extremely loyal to the State and to the laws he is given to enforce, is reported as admitting that the law ought to be amended. So is the Legislative Commission appointed by the Governor to examine into the workings of the act.

The sense of any amendment which are made to this law should be that no arbitrary time limit can be put on any stored food, because such a limit invariably excludes food that is perfectly good and again admits food that is absolutely bad. The only safe criterion is the condition of the food when it comes out of storage. If it is good, what difference though it has been in storage years? If it is bad, what difference though it has been in storage only a month?

Of course the prohibition against selling any storage food for free should not be disturbed.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

Wants to Buy Store Equipment.

Another Scheme.

Berwick, Pa., Nov. 5, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—As a subscriber, would thank you for any information you can give me in regards to the Crown Gasoline and Oil Co. of Pittsburg. Their plan is to sell stock at \$100 a share and give you 100 gallons gasoline every year for the next ten years, you only to pay the transportation charges, which are about 2 cents per gallon. Also say that last year they paid $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. dividend. Kindly advise if this is a good investment or not, in your judgment.

Yours truly,
A SUBSCRIBER.

The Crown Gasoline and Oil Co. has a fair mercantile rating, but that does not make the writer think any better of its scheme. It looks fantastic to begin with, and it consists practically all of promise—what they are going to do for the next ten years, after they have your $100.

Here are four points which would lead the writer to turn the scheme down instantly if it was offered to him:—

1.—You could never count on the quality of this gasoline. Bad gasoline is worse than none. How could you be sure that the gasoline which this concern is to ship you for ten years was going to be of a quality or which you could compete with other gasoline? Also, that all this ten years gasoline will comply with legal tests?

2.—If the concern failed of course your shipments of free gasoline would instantly stop.

3.—One hundred gallons at the current price of 13 cents is equivalent to \$13 per year or 13 per cent. on the investment. If they are declaring in addition $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. dividends, the total disbursements are $17\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. We believe that no small gasoline company, forced to compete with the Standard Oil Co., is making any such profits to-day.

4.—It is foolish to invest any money in a small concern which has to compete with the Standard Oil Co. The latter concern, without going out of its way or violating any law, could destroy it almost over night.

We should never put money into any scheme that had so little tangible security to it as this.

A Good Stock-Taking Machine.

Atco, Bartow County, Ga.,

Nov. 2, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Having noted an inquiry in your issue of November 2d from F. A. Crabtree, Bland, Va., about a stock taking machine and your answer, please allow us space to say that we are using a machine made by A. E. Putnam, of Milan, Mich., which only cost about $10, which we have used several years with entire satisfaction, and which we are glad to recommend, not because we have any interest in the instrument, but because it is a good thing and we like to pass a good thing along.

We feel sure that Mr. Crabtree would appreciate this suggestion, and according to our memory, this machine can be tried out, without cost, and if not satisfactory returned.

If you mean gas tanks for light, the Prest-o-lite tank is considered the best. All supply houses sell it.

An Insurance Scheme.

—, Pa., October 31, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Can you give us any information in regard to the Keystone Underwriters' Co., 328 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Mr. W. A. Moore, president? Mr. Moore was here to see us, both in regard to selling stock and insurance. He claims he can save us 10 per cent. on our insurance and still give us the same companies we now have. Is their stock any good?

Yours truly,
C. S. P.

We have not been able to learn much about the Keystone Underwriters' Co.; evidently it is a new scheme. The statement made by its president, however,

The Cox Gelatine Co. ask their customers to co-operate with them in aiding the

RED  CROSS

By Special Permission

THROUGHOUT the civilized world people are pouring out money, labor, personal sacrifices, and even their lives, in the cause of the Red Cross. The work is non-partisan, non-sectarian, absolutely neutral, and merits the hearty support of every American. In order that we may make a substantial contribution to the Red Cross, and give every American woman an opportunity to share in the gift, we are advertising in the leading women's magazines the following offer:

Cut out the yellow label

Every yellow label appearing on the front of a package of Cox's Gelatine will be redeemed if presented before February 1, 1915, for 1 cent in cash, to be paid to the Red Cross. All labels are to be sent to the headquarters of the National Housewives' League in New York, who will send them to us each week and receive our check in return, payable to the Red Cross.

Grocers can help by passing the word to their customers. With proper co-operation a fund of several thousand dollars will be realized.

THE COX GELATINE CO.
100 Hudson Street, New York

that it can save this correspondent 10 per cent. and still give him insurance in the same companies he has now, is not particularly reassuring, for the only way he can do that is to have somebody rebate, which is against the law.

We should buy no stock in any new insurance company, for it is next to impossible to-day for new insurance companies, with limited capital, to gain any foothold against the large companies. Buyers of insurance want solidity, which they never feel they are sure of getting with a new company.

As to a Collection Agency.

When Mail Order Houses Ask Retailers For Credit Ratings

A Case in Point in Which a Pittsburg (Pa.) Mail Order House Asked an Oklahoma Merchant for a Rating on One of His Customers. The Form Used and Some Remarks About it.

A valued subscriber of this paper from Oklahoma sends in some matter which again brings up the question of the mail-order houses worrying retail merchants for a credit report on various customers of those merchants who have applied to the mail-order houses for credit. At once the mail-order house writes for the name of the applicant's local merchant, and when it gets it writes for a credit report.

The Oklahoma correspondent sends in a communication from "Spear & Co.," a mail-order house-furnishing house of Pittsburg, Pa. The form that Spear & Co. use is reproduced below:—

PLEASE USE THE BACK OF THIS SHEET FOR YOUR REPLY

The above is typical of thousands of inquiries which are constantly being sent to retail dealers by the mail-order houses. Some of them fail even to enclose a stamp. The retail dealer must stop in his work and painstakingly fill up all the blanks, and his exasperation in having to do this is increased by the realization that the whole thing means at least partial loss of a customer. This correspondent states that his local banker also gets requests for credit reports on local people, and charges 25 cents each. This, he suggests, the retail dealer might well ask also.

There is no obligation resting on a retail dealer to communicate credit information to a mail-order house, and the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" recommends that no attention be paid to the inquiries in the average case. Some-

A certain Western retailer boasts that he never answers any of these inquiries except where they relate to a dead beat, utterly worthless and irresponsible. In all those cases he gives the prospective customer a beautiful send-off, and then hopes that the mail-order house will ship him a lot of goods and get stuck. This of course is highly reprehensible and even criminal.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

The recently formed association at Nanticoke is making splendid progress. It now numbers 30 members. Regular meetings are held weekly. The members are interested and many trade evils have already been corrected. President J. W. Daly and Secretary Rees are working hard.

The Pittsburg association is making progress. This association has sent to each candidate for the Legislature asking an expression of their intention (if elected) on the garnishee act, the bill to abolish mercantile taxes and a bill to abolish trading stamps. Favorable answers have been received from almost all the candidates.

Merchants of Wellsboro have decided to organize and have taken up the matter with the organizer.

The following associations have recently affiliated with the State association: Catawissa, Sewickley, Ambridge, Beaver Falls, Elwood City, Farrel, Woodlawn and Greenville. Four associations were organized during the past week.

The merchants of Beaver Falls met on October 27th and organized an association. About 40 handed in their names. By-laws were adopted and a committee appointed to secure a secretary to devote his spare time to the association. Addresses were made by I. L. Smith and Organizer Smedley.

Beaver Falls is a prosperous town with wide-awake merchants. Several fruitless attempts have been made in the past to organize. It is expected that this will "stand."

The organizer addressed the merchants of Verona and Oakmont on October 28th. C. A. Bell, secretary of the Pittsburg association

E. C. Thompson, of Pittsburg, accompanied the organizer and made brief talks. A progressive movement is about to be organized in this association.

The organizer addressed the merchants of Brownsville on October 14th. There was a good attendance and considerable interest manifested in organization. The association has been lagging behind for some time past. At the meeting the merchants decided to put on steam, hire a secretary and make a useful organization.

On October 29th we visited the Ambridge association in an effort to have this organization affiliate with the State association. This matter will be decided at the next meeting. The Ambridge merchants have a fair association but it could be more progressive.

Mr. Sherrard Ewing, secretary of the Reading Chamber of Commerce, recently addressed the Pottsville Merchants' Association on City Building."

Next week Mr. Smedley will visit Carbondale, Scranton, Tunkhannock and Sayre.

Beating the Itinerant Jewelry Scheme.

Chicago Concern Loses Suit Against Pennsylvania Retailer Because it Neglected to Register as a Foreign Corporation Before It Did Business Within the State.

Readers hereof have been warned against the schemes of certain wholesale jewelry concerns, usually from the West, who send salesmen through the rural districts to sell blocks of jewelry to retailers of all classes. They have sold jewelry to grocers and they have sold it to shoe dealers. The argument is that a case of jewelry takes up no room, and the people who are constantly coming to the store are attracted by it and buy. If by the end of a certain time any remains unsold, it can be returned and a credit given for the full amount. These concerns always take the retailer's notes, which they promptly transfer to somebody else, who pays the retailer when they are due and collects. This he can do under the law even though the retailer could have a perfectly good defense if the jewelry concern tried to collect the note.

"MAZOLA is better than butter or fat for frying because it can be heated to a high temperature without burning."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

A Pennsylvania retail shoe dealer has beaten one of these jewelry concerns rather neatly. It was the "Commercial Jewelry Co." of Chicago, and it sent a salesman to call on Andrew Schatz, a retail shoe dealer of Danville, Pa. The salesman induced the shoe man to buy the jewelry, which was duly shipped.

Schatz refused to pay for it and the jewelry concern sued him. He defended on the ground that the Commercial Jewelry Co. was a foreign corporation which had not registered so as to do business in Pennsylvania, and therefore it could not collect on its contracts. The court held the point well taken and dismissed the suit.

Hardware—Tools—Specialties

Sales via the Wholesalers' Catalogue.

An average stock of miscellaneous hardware, such as the general storekeeper would keep on hand, is a good line, providing efforts are made in the right way and direction to keep it moving. Goods will not sell themselves, excepting in a moderate and generally unsatisfactory manner. Merchants, in order to circumvent the retail mail order house or meet keen competition, are inclined to favor the wholesalers' catalogue method. The plan is sometimes described as the syndicate catalogue enterprises. Often those catalogues list merchandise other than that usually handled by a retailer of hardware, although the latter has been advised to stock anything and everything—from ice cream freezers, nails, cutlery, etc., to millinery—if it sells. It is good judgment for a small town merchant to offer what is recognized as the legitimate lines rather than deal in fancy articles.

When a retailer sells through a wholesalers' catalogue it may prove successful or otherwise, according to the methods followed. The dealer figures on furnishing his customers with catalogues, accept cash orders and ship from the wholesaler's stock direct. This rake-off is a discount, generally a small one, and unless the aggregate of sales is of some account, not worth while bothering with. Where this question has come up for discussion at the association meetings, merchants who have given these schemes a try-out said they could not recommend them and were not worth bothering with. The wholesalers have a different line of argument, and when the merchant is dealt with fairly on a guaranteed price basis, the proposition works out successfully.

Preparing for Active Lawn Mower Season.

Lawn mower manufacturers are in their preparatory season. The road travelers are out and sales-managers are putting through the press their new catalogues, some of which will be notable productions in several ways. Every manufacturer of a mower with any pretensions to merit is of the belief the coming season will be the best on record. Orders either booked or being figured upon by national distributors and jobbers is the basis of this prediction, the European uprising and massacreing to the contrary notwithstanding. The publicity already in evidence strikes a new and convincing note, of which the following is a sample in dealer distribution: "Tell your customers how they can be happy though mowing the lawn. The real shearing action of the crucible tool steel, oil hardened and water tempered blades (every blade) reduces labor almost to the point of recreation." More effective efforts than ever will be made to reduce the harm done dealers by the retail mail-order houses in their offerings of inferior mowers at bargain prices. The aid of general merchants is being sought in the accomplishment of this purpose by the distribution of informing literature in their respective communities.

Instructions for Applying Ready-Mixed Paints. What the Dealer Should Know.

Up until the "snow flies" is always a good paint selling season, which the storekeeper should improve and make the most of. Granting the stock is selected—it will need replenishing right along, of course—to a customer desiring information how to apply paint the following will not be amiss: The correct application of paint is second only to the quality of the paint itself. The best paint, poorly applied, will not always insure satisfaction; whereas poor paint, regardless of how well applied, is never satisfactory. In the first place, so far as the paint itself goes, the colors should be clear, bright and permanent. Then it should be so made as to be absolutely impervious to moisture and dampness.

Stir the paint thoroughly before and after adding thinners, if that is necessary or desirable. Always empty the paint from the original package into a larger one, to be sure the pigments are thoroughly mixed with the thinners so the consistency of the paint is uniform throughout. Add required thinners slowly, a little at a time, and stir constantly until the whole mass is the same. Raw linseed oil permits of more thorough brushing out and produces a more elastic and durable coating. Proper driers are incorporated in all standard ready mixed paints, therefore never add more. Use a long bristle oval or wall brush and work the paint well into the wood. Priming coats on new work should satisfy fully the absorption of the wood. Do not try to hide the grain or color of the wood, unless so desired, by piling on the paint. Three thin coats are infinitely better than two heavy coats.

When a third coat is to follow add just enough turpentine to the coat to reduce the surface gloss. Glossy finishing coats do not adhere well to glossy undercoats. For the last or finishing coat, whether two or three coat work is done, apply the paint just as it comes in the packages. If it should be a trifle heavy add a very little pure raw linseed oil and nothing else. Be sure each coat is thoroughly dry and hard before the next coat is applied. At least forty-eight hours should elapse between each coat. Do not paint during damp, muggy, unsettled or threatening weather, during or soon after a storm; before the sun has dried up heavy dews in the morning or while plaster on the inside of a house is drying out. Be sure the surface to be painted is thoroughly dry. Apply a coat of shellac varnish over all knots, sappy or pitchy spots or streaks, and let it dry hard before paint is applied. Putty up nail holes, cracks and crevices before the priming coat is applied and dried.

Buying Hardware to Advantage. Hodge-Podge Stocks to be Avoided.

Excellent advice and many suggestions are offered by Murray Sargent, of the well known firm of Sargent & Co., in a paper entitled "Analysis and Concentration in Buying," of which the following are salient excerpts: The desire to jump for an attractive price should not lead the buyer of hardware to fail to analyze his purchases from another than price standpoint, remarks Mr. Sargent. "In my various journeys throughout the United States, in which I have visited several thousand stores—hardware and general stores carrying a hardware stock—I have observed that there are certain unwritten rules of buying, all of which some successful dealers and some of which some successful retailers follow."

For example it is evident that where a merchant is handling so many hundreds of items as an adequate hardware stock is supposed to contain, he must, to get the best results, focus his attention on items which run into money. If he endeavors to push a certain type of carpet tack, when another is in demand, he may lose more time than the effort is worth. Items of tools and builders' hardware, which are in themselves comparatively high-priced, may be demonstrated to advantage. It is on the general line of shelf hardware that the theory of concentration may be well put into practice. Do not mix the stock. Select a manufacturer's or wholesaler's line which seems the most complete of the grade wanted. If the merchant finds that a certain manufacturer or wholesaler makes or has in stock a wider variety of items than any other also that the product is well packed and the general quality of the merchandise is equal or superior to others, then why not handle these goods?

It is to the advantage of a general merchant to have his stock uniform, especially if his salesmen or clerks can be educated to know the numbers of manufacturer or wholesaler. Some manufacturers have a system in their labels by which a certain color designates a certain finish. This is a small point, but it helps to facilitate in handling stock to know by a glance at the shelf what is the finish. Some retailers' stores resemble a patch-work quilt in the variety of manufacturers' boxes. They may not realize it, but their stock is actually worthless by a considerable percentage than it would be if uniform. In matching up for size and finishes it is important to avoid a hodge-podge, particularly on building hardware.

The customer buying good hardware is generally inclined to be particular and the impression on his mind when he finds the old brass sash fastener supplied of one color, the escutcheon or knobs another, and the cupboard turns a third, is not altogether a favorable one. The next time the customer will remember the mixture he bought and may say nothing, but is more likely to chaff the merchant about, or more likely yet go to a store that carries a straight line when he wants to buy good hardware. Before grasping at the 5 per cent. opportunity offered on a line the dealer should compare the one he has been buying to the lower priced goods. Perhaps it will be found that the higher priced merchandise is a better buy at 10 per cent. higher.

Sometimes an extra 5 per cent. does not look so big to the retailer if he figures up his total sales on the line to which it applies. How much in a year's time would 5 per cent. be on bright wire goods, namely screw eyes and screw hooks? For it takes an astonishing amount of them to run into any money, and consequently it could not be very much. This is the kind of line on which the price consideration is secondary; and so in other goods.

There are many grades and many prices in hardware, but the merchant will often find on comparison that the cheap goods look the part and the higher priced ones are quality merchandise.

Pre-Inventory Sales for General Merchants.

A custom which has become a fixture in different parts of the country is the pre-inventory or special sales of merchandise by manufacturers and jobbers for the exclusive benefit of retailers. In St. Louis the dates announced for is event range from November 9th to 14th, and the houses participating in the sale include the following: Carleton Dry Goods Co., Curlee Clothing Co., Ly & Walker Dry Goods Co., Ferguson, McKinney Dry Goods Co., Gaier & Troh Millinery Co., Hargadine-McKittick Dry Goods Co., Herkert & Meisel Trunk Co., King-Brinsmade Mercantile Co., J. Kennard & Sons Carpet Co., Levis-Zukoski Mercantile Co., O. J. Lewis Mercantile Co., McElroy-Sloan Shoe Co., Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., Rosenthal-Sloan Millinery Co., Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. and the Brown Shoe Co. Merchants from the Middle and Southwest, principally from the small towns and rural communities, attend these sales in large numbers.

Buying Slow in Hosiery and Underwear. Unreliable Dyes Used in Cheap Stock.

Merchants are not at all eager in placing orders for hosiery and underwear. From the drift it was reported retailers in the Middle West were in the most amiable frame of mind and were buying steadily and liberally. The truth of the matter is they are acting as cautiously as other parts of the country. The financial situation is of weight, an authority declares, inasmuch as money is being held closely by the banks as well as by individuals; borrowing is expensive and securities of uncertain value. All this makes jobbers and retailers sail close to the wind with tight stocks and few commitments.

A demand for hosiery up to $1 per dozen is noticeable, including both woolen and cotton goods. Low end Southern hosiery has receded to a low price level. The foreign dyestuff situation has ceased to bother manufacturers in that section, who have turned from aniline to logwood blacks, and are quoting on the basis of the latter. Reports say this fact permits the offering of a stocking at a low figure which is not only attractive to buyers, but that can be held by manufacturers for some time to come. In this logwood dye statement it is perhaps well to remind merchants that the use of such material is a reminder of other days, when blacks turned green and other undesirable shades, much to the disappointment, profanely expressed, of the consumer. It is apropos to quote W. Evan Chipman, of the Chipman Knitting Mills, who wrote the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" on the same subject as follows:—

While vegetable dyes, that are not absolutely fast, may be used on some lines of goods, on hosiery it is absolutely necessary to have colors that will not crack, or, in other words, rub off.

The buying of underwear by merchants and jobbers is slower than for a long time. The mild weather accounts for this to some extent, and probably a turn for the better may now be looked for. At least general storekeepers should not neglect purchasing their customary stocks, as the tendency is toward higher prices for several reasons familiar to the observant. It is urged that the spring opening for underwear should not take place until January, when the price for raw material will be a fixture and quotations made accordingly. Retailers have not given a great deal of information, also as to their "carry-over," and this is likewise a factor in the present quiet market, and accounts for the prevalent indifference.

Revision Downward in Carpets and Rugs.

A great many general stores carry sizable and diversified stocks of carpets and rugs in keeping with the call on their resources and enterprise in handling these goods. Prices have recently been revised downward in floor coverings, including velvets, Wiltons, Axminsters, ingrains and granites. This development is not in accord with the views of some manufacturers, who naturally are opposed to any revision of prices, excepting upward. A well-known carpet and rug maker last week said: "I do not believe a cut in selling figures will stimulate buying by the retail merchant. At any rate, the effect will not be felt in the home. We manufacturers do not have the backbone of the retailers, who hold out for prices that leave a fair margin of profit, and get them. We will not sell a yard more, and the housekeeper will not pay a cent less. In other words, the merchants realize on the cuts, and probably it is right in the long run."

Differences in Underwear Scales Causes Trouble.

Apparently there is a difference in the underwear scale as between that adopted by the jobbers or Knit Goods Association, published in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" a few weeks ago, and that known as the Economist standard sizes. A member of the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers' Association contrasts the two, and remarking on the variations, says: "We are thoroughly convinced that the Economist is the correct standard, as it covers buyers from the best retail stores in the country, who really are the most particular buyers. We think this would be a good matter for the association to go into, and try to eliminate these different standards, as they cause considerable trouble. In a case which we have in hand we made our merchandise according to the Economist sizes, while the jobber happens to have a jobbers' standard, and of course they do not agree." Merchants in the small towns are very much interested, also, as to the most correct scale to be guided by in placing orders and making selections.

The Flexible Contract and Cancellations.

If jobbers and wholesalers complain—and properly—of the over-indulgence of the returned goods practice on the part of merchants, it appears manufacturers are now objecting strongly against the so-called "flexible contract" as employed by the former in cancellations. Of this the "Knit Goods Bulletin" says:—

Cancellation of an order placed with a manufacturer is nothing short of repudiation of a contract. It is an evil that has been so freely indulged, that, among some buyers, it has become part of the unwritten business law. It is a self-assumed prerogative that never was contemplated by either buyer or seller, and in the disturbed condition of business, antedating the European war by many months, has been resorted to with so much freedom as to imperil the seller and arouse suspicion as to the buyer's good intentions.

The cancellation evil is attracting more attention, probably than at any time in the past, and the attitude of manufacturers seems to warrant the prediction that it soon will be relegated to the junk heap of overworked and abused privileges. Tolerance has been stretched to the limit, and the sooner the issue be met squarely and forever disposed of, the better will it be for trade in manufactured goods. It has been held by some astute financiers and commercial men that an order to cancel is tantamount to an acknowledgment of inability to pay. Without adopting this harsh view, we may be permitted to suggest that it isn't fair.

As in returned goods, when they are shipped back without justification, there is only one way to check the cancellation abomination—enforce any contract between buyer and seller, remarks the same authority. In merchandising honor is at stake. That forfeited, credit goes with the sacrifice.

Cottons at Lower Figures. Retailers Waiting for Bottom Prices.

For fine fancy printed cottons for next season the demand is still of a relatively satisfactory character. The white goods buying by merchants is also very satisfactory. The attention that is being given to the booming of the use of cotton goods for dress wear is helping retailers to move the fancy and novelty merchandise that has been on their shelves for some time. It is also true that many fine staples in cotton dress goods are receiving more attention at retail counters. Domestic houses in the primary market handling the best-known brands of prints and white goods are doing a better business than concerns selling the less well-known lines. Buyers of all goods seem disposed to commit themselves in the strongest way on merchandise that is best known in quality to the public. Fine class staples are being favored by dealers from the small towns, a really new departure in its way, here—tofore the lower or medium grade being preferred, but now a better kind is in demand. A very wide range of goods is being bought, and the only common characteristic of merchandise now is its tendency to sheerness and fineness.

Lower prices are being named on towels and quilts for future delivery. There has been an increase in the desire of buyers to place orders for goods of this class where revision was made. This is particularly true when lower quotations are named for the best standard lines. This tendency of the market was foreshadowed in this department of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" right along for some time past. In fact, so far as cottons are concerned, the disposition to delay the placing of orders is attributed largely to the extensive publicity which has been given to the decline in raw material, putting every jobber and retailer from Maine to California in a frame of mind where he is looking for lower prices, and holding off until he is sure the bottom of the market is reached.

Laces, Linens and White Goods Selling.

Not much enthusiasm is noted in the Middle West, as viewed by Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, who say: "Retailers have been busier this week as a result of cooler weather, but wholesale business has not had time to respond to any great extent. The effects are being noticed somewhat in the volume of daily shipments. Wholesale business is showing good volume in such lines as laces, linens and white goods. The many uses to which printed drapery materials can be put in making home beautifying accessories suitable for holiday gifts is increasing the sale of this class of goods. Novelties in ready-to-wear neckwear and costume adornments are adding interest to retail selling."

Why the Jobber is Essential as a Distributor. Result of Prize Contest.

Some time ago the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association, whose membership includes leading firms in all parts of the country, offered a series of prizes for the best article or essay on the "Value of the Wholesaler of Dry Goods as a Distributor, and Reasons Why He Is Essential." At the time when the contest was instituted considerable criticism of the jobber and his methods was heard. It was in his defense that the awards were to be made. The association also desired the co-operation of the salesmen and department men connected with establishments of the members. The final result is announced as follows: First Prize—W. C. Alward, with Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., Chicago; Second—Frank N. Culver, with Edson, Moore & Co., Detroit, Mich.; Third—Bentley P. Neff, with F. A. Patrick & Co., Duluth, Minn.

Honorable mention was accorded eight others, as they were of a very high degree of excellence and were seriously considered by the judges for a place among the prize winners. Among the latter was the paper submitted by Geo. A. Weinman, advertising manager of Lord & Taylor's wholesale department, New York, whose reputation has been established by the "Onyx" trademark. As it is brief and to the point, the full text is used herewith, as follows:—

The present status of the jobber is as a "guardian angel" for the manufacturer on one side and the retail dealer on the other. He often finances the first and is a bulwark of strength to the second, providing him with carefully selected and complete ranges of standard products assembled under one roof, facilitating the selection and conserving the time and money of the dealer. He is a depository of complaints and kicks, an adjuster of more or less reasonable claims. He accepts calmly the unloading of surplus stocks, comes to the rescue when special offerings are in demand, helping the dealer at critical moments, and is at all times a friend to the retail dealer in prosperity or distress.

The trade could not exist without the jobber. Consider for a moment the elimination of the middle man and the placing of dependence on the manufacturer, very frequently the maker of only a single product of limited range, not an assembler of complete classified lines, such as the jobber presents.

Think of the dealer going from one manufacturer to another and picking up a line here and there until a range were finally completed. Think of the waste of time. Think of the irregularity, lack of stand-ardization, the added cost. Think of the manufacturer illy equipped to cope with retail conditions. Where would he be on the claim question, the return goods question, the time extensions, the advertising assistance, the interest charges for carrying stock, the demand for donations and the thousand and one annoyances which are to-day contingents inevitably following in the wake of his daily business experience with the retail trade?

Just as people go to a central depot to take a train to a given point, so the jobber gathers his wares for the dealer—standardizing, elevating and advancing all in his efforts to help all. Manufacturers have been led to believe by interests seeking their own selfish ends to go out and sell direct to the dealer, to kill the middle man, would result in great benefits in reduced costs and larger profits. This is the big argument advanced, an utterly impossible accomplishment. The manufacturer not being equipped to handle dealer conditions would find, on account of the reasons above stated, that he could not afford to sell profitably to dealers without advancing the cost.

Jobbers carry stocks for dealers, finance them, thus giving them a chance for a big "turn-over." Interest accounts are expensive, as many a manufacturer has found out to his cost. There is a big difference in having a jobber advance you money to keep you cheerful, and piling up a big reserve stock for the dealer's accommodation, subject to his many whims. The jobber or distributor has his pulse on the country's wants even the world over. He finds the market. The information given to the manufacturer is invaluable in defining his production, his output finding its best outlet through the jobber.

The jobber, or middle man, or distributor, whatever you please to call him, exercises his best ability in the assembling of his wares. He eliminates whatever is unworthy until his stock represents the best efforts of the manufacturer. His establishment is a college from which any buyer could graduate, as every article represented has its place because it is worthy of it.

The middle man or jobber becomes an expert, and he is well qualified to give expert advice which if followed by the retail dealer's representative, invariably leads to success. The middleman or jobber is a concentrator, and concentration eliminates expense, reduces cost, aids business by making selling easier and in the end is influential in elevating the standards.

The injection of the manufacturer who only represents a limited line into the direct field of selling to the retail dealer invites a hazardous and expensive competition. Anxious to get his part of the business, he will give price inducements to influence the business, thus starting a ruinous competition, which finally ends in the debasing of the standards and lessening the profits of all.

Of the retailer, or general merchant Mr. Alward, the high prize man, this to say: "The retailer is becoming an expert in things pertaining to business, such as knowing what to select from the wholesaler's stocks as being especially suited to his patrons' ideas, in methods of accounting, advertising, window trimming and general store management. The knowledge, experience and incentives of the big department stores have been finding their way into the smaller towns. The retail merchant is a bigger man in every way and a better risk. The wholesaler has helped in his education. He needs the jobber quite as much as the jobber needs him."

Chain Stores in the Shoe Trade Methods Merit Study at Times

Perhaps other lines are more prone to chain stores than the retail shoe business. In some branches of trade the influence is baleful, to say the least, from their large number and questionable methods. Shoe manufacturers are not strongly inclined to this way of merchandising, and the chain store, and simple in a large way is represented by the following concerns: George Keith Co. (Walkover), 11 stores, with a capital of $6,000,000; Regal Shoe Co., 47 stores, with a capital of $5,000,000, and the W. L. Douglas Shoe Co., capitalized at $2,500,000. A number of manufacturers sell to only one store in a place, while others get around the point by marketing the different brands of the same shoe. A few small chain stores also exist, but not enough em to cut much of a figure. The gains mentioned are all in the large cities, where the manufacturer has found it difficult to market his product on account of the opposition of the regular dealers.

Broadly speaking, the success of chain stores depends on adequate capital. Good methods and experienced store managers. Next to the capital the effect of the chain does not become appreciable until profit turning plans are perfected and dependable managers developed. The essentials are also necessary in the conduct of every successful store, whether devoted exclusively to shoes or the stock is part of a general merchant's establishment. It may therefore be said that storekeepers who neglect the handling of their shoe stock not only lose the mark in the way of a profit turning proposition might study the methods of the chain store to advantage without indulging in unbridled condemnation of this system of marketing shoes.

Repair Outfit a Marginal Investment.

A merchant with a shoe annex, as has been made clear before in this department, can install a repair outfit with profit to himself and convenient service to his trade. A shoe repair kit may be obtained from either the manufacturer of these specialties or the shoe findings house. From the latter can also be obtained soles, heels, etc., already cut or ready use into any desired shape, width, thickness or grade. Of such a department an expert says:—

Enterprising shoe dealers all over the country are now installing special repair machinery as a part of their regular business and investigations demonstrate that in almost every case a department of this kind proves very profitable for the merchant, not only because of direct money profits, but also because it brings into his store and gets him acquainted with a great many people whom he otherwise might never have met.

In many of the smaller towns, shoe dealers have combined to support a repair shop and divide the profits. Still other shoe men buy the machinery themselves and put in departments in the rear of their stores. Big city retailers have their own special shoe repairing machinery and seem able to keep it employed right along. Such a department as this represents an investment of only about $500 in machinery and the fact that more leather is used than by ordinary cobblers give the dealers a better credit basis when replenishing supplies of leather.

The present higher prices of leather has given an extraordinary impetus to the shoe repairing business, because people are nowadays more reluctant to throw away shoes which show signs of wear when they have to pay anywhere from $4 to $7 per pair for them. People to-day are taking shoes to be repaired and resoled who rarely before did so and they certainly would be particularly interested in any regular shoe store maintaining a repair department.

Then there is another point in favor of installing special machinery of this kind. It would simplify the problem of customers' complaints when they return shoes which have not properly stood the test of wear. There should be no difficulty at all for the shoe dealers operating a repair machine to compete with the most firmly established cobbling shops of his town, primarily because modern repair methods assure the preservation of the shape of the shoe and unquestionably prolong its life for the wearer.

Use of Infringing Shoe Brands Enjoined.

A final decree was recently entered in the United States District Court, Southern District of Ohio, restraining the Maris-Kiley Co., Cincinnati, from using the trade-marks "Mac-Ki" and "M. & K." on shoes. Suit was brought by the Macdonald & Kiley Co., of the same place, who had been manufacturing and marketing shoes under these brands for some years. In 1910 William M. Kiley, who was an officer of the plaintiff concern, severed his connection and has since been an official of the Maris-Kiley Co., who were charged with using the mark "Mac-Ki" and similar brands on their shoe products.

In its decision the court found that the plaintiffs' trade-mark had been colorably imitated and therefore the defendants had been guilty of unfair competition and would be enjoined from further employing the trade-marks "Ma-Ki" or "Maki" or any similar combination in connection with the manufacture, sale or advertising of men's shoes. The injunction specifically stated that the defendants were not lessened or abridged in the use of their own individual names or corporate title in the same connection.

White Shoes for Men Coming Sellers.

With the winter season still before them, manufacturers and retailers are already figuring on next summer's style tendencies. The winter deliveries are about closing up and the factories are already looking over the designs for the spring. The retail trade looks for a craze for white shoes for men in the summer of 1915. While their lower price may be a factor, dealers believe the greater demand will be due to style. A prominent merchant in the line said: "Men follow women in shoe styles. After women wore cloth tops a season or two men took to them. Women have popularized white shoes and now men feel they must have them."

These remarks, a manufacturer observed, must be taken with reservations. Women's models not infrequently follow those of men, as near as natural differences will permit. For example, the low, flat heels on all kinds of footwear were originally an exclusively man's property, but the spring, summer and even fall wear for women adopted that heel in all but dress patterns. Coming back to white shoes, I may say the higher classes of white shoes will be buck, retailing at $6 to $6.50; new buck, a split leather, at $4.50 to $5.50, and canvas, at $3 to $4 a pair.

At these prices canvas shoes will cost about one-half as much as good calfskin; and for this reason alone will be among the best sellers. Leather continues to soar in price, and by spring calf and kid shoes may be higher than at present. Economy may, therefore, in a measure, rather than style, contribute largely to the coming popularity of white shoes for men.

Increase in Sale and Output of Shoes.

Evidently the shoe business has not been affected as much as other lines. Retailers have reported no curtailment in their sales and manufacturers advise an increase quite remarkable in the output. A. H. Montague, advertising manager of the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., when requested for an opinion on the current status, said:—

Our salesmen left for their fall trips August 15th, and for the two weeks in August and the entire month of September our future orders have been something over 25,000 dozen gain over the previous period of 1913. The leather market has been advancing for a number of years, and the war has only added to this advance; and merchants in placing their future orders knew they were running no risk in doing this, for, regardless of war in Europe, people would continue to wear shoes.

So far we have given our salesmen no increase in prices, and this has, of course, been one of the major reasons for our increase in business. We are receiving many letters every day from merchants who originally countermanded their orders or asked us to hold them for a short while, requesting us to ship the shoes as quickly as possible, as it seems people are buying shoes before they are buying anything else.

We have endeavored at all times strongly to impress on the minds of our representatives to talk business in place of war and to try to convince the merchants that business will go on just the same, war or no war. Frankly, this policy has brought splendid results.

Fancy Footwear and Handsome Hosiery. Profitable Lines.

So many fancy shoes are being displayed by dealers that dainty hosiery to match is in order. From what road salesmen report, goods of this description are not confined to the shops of the large cities, but are to be found in the stores of the small towns. For example, to match the gold colored shoes there are some very lovely and daintily pale gold silk stockings. They are embroidered over the instep, generally in a long diamond shaped pattern made of sprays of flowers. One design has wheat done in pale gold silk, mixed

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Qualify for a Better Job.—Most of us fill the very job that we are mentally and physically capable of filling for the present. We may not all think so, we may fail to understand why it is that bright, hustling fellows like us are not selected to hold down some swell position.

They say the law of selection applies to mice and men, except in politics, and that "luck" generally comes to the chap who is ready for it.

"Ready for It."

That is the condition, and the only condition—being ready from the heart out.

I like the term wholesome dissatisfaction, and have referred to it often in "Straight Talks." It means that you are not to be satisfied with present conditions, but that state of mind must not in the least hinder you from doing your work thoroughly and heartily.

Any employer of broad observation will tell you that the more ambitious the clerk the better his service.

If you have made up your mind to remain a clerk the rest of your life, in all likelihood you will remain one. But in doing so you are putting a limit on your ability to rise and your work hasn't that vigor and snap that is created by holding ever to the certainty of a brighter future.

Qualify for this future. Do you know what the first condition of this qualification is? It is doing your work more thoroughly, more conscientiously each day than the day before. It is mentally putting yourself in the boss's place and asking yourself constantly how should I act in this particular case if I owned this business.

That's ideal service and ideal service is qualifying.

The minor points follow, and this consists in knowing your business. The food business is a big field for study. None of us have reached the point in this field where we can command a diploma that reads 100 per cent.

But you can undoubtedly learn something every day if you keep eyes and ears receptive.

You can learn values, grades, market conditions, causes of advance and decline, where goods come from, how they're prepared, etc.

The more you try to qualify the oftener your opportunity to do so will present itself.

A good, noble thing in which we desire to excel we find means of doing so constantly presenting themselves. Such is the law.

"Who does the best in his circumstances allows, Does well, acts nobly, angels could do no more."

with gold threads, part of the wheat pointing up and the rest down, so that the design forms an elongated triangle.

Another design has little star-shaped flowers, gold spangles, combined with padded silk embroideries. This is also a diamond shaped design. Still another has little, round, rose-like embroidered flowers, with elongated stems. The centers of the flowers are overlapping spangles. This dainty hosiery harmonizes perfectly with the footwear, which is reflecting the metallic decorations of the gowns now in vogue. Other patterns of stockings for shoes to match are equally striking. Merchants are realizing that it is an excellent adjunct of the shoe department to carry hosiery in silk, lisle and more elaborate styles for both men, women and even children. The two lines fit in admirably and profitably.

for the same goods was from 40 to 42 cents per dozen.

Already it is claimed that the result of the election in this State, which the whole world knows now, has greatly improved business; especially is this said to be the case as to the dry goods business. The entire State of New York was carried by the Republican ticket, and this is supposed to reflect a general demand for the restoration of the protective tariff which the dry goods industry has always greatly depended upon for prosperity. So hopeful are the principal factors in the dry goods market here over this development that they are loosening up, and much more confidence is being felt and expressed both among manufacturers and selling agents since last Tuesday.

News has developed during the week that Norway is after large quantities of American apples. The usual large Norwegian apple crop is not available this year because of unfavorable growing conditions. There will be, according to reliable information, almost no Norwegian apples, and as a result Norway is out for 25,000 barrels of our apples. The terms are cash on bills of lading. Apples imported into Norway must pay a tariff of $1.46 per hundred pounds.

The advertising of beer as a food still continues and is arousing much interest. The points made in it are that beer contains a large amount of nourishment; that it is palatable and an aid to digestion; that it is a food which is very rapidly assimilated and sorbed into the circulation and provides a source of energy; and that it is produced under perfectly pure and wholesome conditions. Considerable money appears to be under the process of expenditure for this advertising, and a very keen comment was heard upon it during the week, namely, that it could hardly have any effect for the reason that a man who already likes beer would not need any instruction of this sort through advertising, and the man who does not like beer would certainly not be induced to drink through advertising of this or any other sort.

The trade was considerably aroused during the week by news

The New York Letter

Cause of High Prices of Eggs Shown at Investigation Into Mercantile Exchange. Election Helps Business Feeling. Norway Buying Our Apples. Enormous Foreign Demand for Our Wheat. Has Not Yet Affected Prices. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, N. Y.,

November 6, 1914.

At the investigation in this city into the alleged manipulation of the butter and egg market by the New York Mercantile Exchange, it was developed that one cause of the high prices of eggs in New York in September was that many Western farmers held back their shipments in the generous expectation that the war in Europe would enable them to get one dollar a dozen. Still another factor was the stringent rules and regulations enforced by the local Board of Health. Some of the testimony taken in the investigation showed that there was a difference of from 13 to 15 cents per dozen between the prices paid by New York wholesale dealers to country shippers and the prices charged the public. Some country shippers testified that they received from 27 to 29 cents a dozen while it was shown that the retail selling price that France had placed an embargo upon all shipments of 1914 walnuts. This would have had an immediate effect upon business of this country. Later in the week, however, cables were received that the embargo was practically lifted, and the business will proceed as before.

One of the features of business here has been the enormous demand for American grain, principally wheat and oats. Within the past week seventeen steamers have been chartered to carry over wheat and oats, and some others to carry over corn. The amount of export business appears to be limited only by the amount of freight room available. Some days as much as two million bushels of wheat have been sold for foreign account and many days insuccession showed sales of over one million per day. The export sales of corn during the week amounted to about a million bushels and the sales of oats probably were twice that. It is the opinion of everybody here that this tremendous and bona fide demand for our grains is certain to advance prices. The difference in advances that come now and the advances that came when the war broke out is that the present advances will have a solid basis of fact, while the former advances had nothing behind them but speculation. In spite of this tremendous demand the spot wheat market has not shown any particular advance as yet, and in fact has not shown very much tendency to advance.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet; demand light; prices fairly steady.—Coffee stagnated; very dull and weak. Everybody buying from hand to mouth.—Codfish strong and higher.—Prunes a little stronger on the coast on active export demand from England. Spot market quiet and dull.—Peaches and apricots quiet and unchanged.—Raisins fairly active at unchanged prices.—Currants weakened by pressure to sell large quantity of off-stock.—Canned vegetables all unchanged. Fairly steady with the possible exception of tomatoes.—Wheat quiet and dull in spite of large export demand. Receipts very heavy.—Flour dull and inclined to be easy on account of light demand.—Provisions slightly higher as the result of a disturbance in the live hog market.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. The demand is comparatively light, because most buyers filled up during the war boom and have not sold out yet. Low grade teas are somewhat firmer, owing to continued good export demand. The better grades feel the effect of this somewhat, but nothing is quotably higher for the week.

Coffee.

The coffee market continues very sick and weak. For the man who has coffee bought some time ago the situation is about as bad as it can be at the moment. This refers particularly to Rio and Santos, which are feeling the effect both of the bad financial conditions in Brazil and the lack of demand in this country. There are a few exceptions—good roasting grades of Santos which are scarce on spot. Mild coffees are also quiet and easy in sympathy with Brazils. Maracaibos is about the only exception—scarcity on spot has strengthened the situation somewhat. Java and Mocha are unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

Sugar is weak and likely to grow weaker. Raws continue about on a basis of 3.51 cents, and granulated has dropped to 5 cents. It should and probably will go to 4½ cents, which would leave quite a good margin between raw and refined. There seems to be plenty of raw sugar in sight, and it would not be surprising if the market returned to its before-the-war basis, which would mean about ¾ cent drop from present prices.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is quiet at ruling prices; demand not yet fully opened, on account of continued warm weather. Sugar syrup and molasses are both unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

The mackerel situation is very uncertain. Prices are about unchanged from a week ago. The Norway combine is getting plenty of mackerel in here, but considerable of it is poor quality, and the demand is not heavy. The independents and the combination are selling at about the same prices. Irish mackerel are scarce and inclined to be firm. Shore mackerel are hardly wanted at all. Cod, hake and haddock are inclined to be easier; demand light. Domestic sardines unchanged and quiet; imported sardines steady to firm and fairly active. Salmon shows no change anywhere and no immediate demand.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged on last week's basis, with a very light demand. No figures are available as to the 1914 pack, but it is believed by some to be between twelve and thirteen million cases. This would be inadequate to a normal demand, but if the demand is no better than now it will be plenty and more. Maine corn deliveries are about complete, ranging from 55 per cent. as high as 80 per cent. New pack Maine corn is offered by some second hands holders at about 10 to 15 cents above the opening of 90 to 95 cents in a large way. Peas are unchanged and quiet. Apples are still very dull and weak at $1.85 to $2 for New York State gallons. Some packers say they cannot get out whole at these prices and have withdrawn from the market. California canned goods show no change and quiet demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The butter market is firm on the present basis. Fancy fresh butter is very scarce, and medium grades are also cleaning up. The market is healthy on the present basis, and no change is looked for soon.

Eggs.

Fresh eggs are still very scarce and the market is very active on the fancy grade. The demand is exceeding the supply and prices are nominal, showing an advance of about 1 cent for the week. It is a case of eggs rather than price, however. Storage eggs are also firmer at an advance of about 1 cent per dozen, due chiefly to the large demand from Europe.

Cheese.

The cheese market is fairly firm on an unchanged basis. The consumptive demand is normal for the season, and the supply is about normal. Stocks of cheese in storage are about unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans have advanced sharply during the week on reports of short crop, and the present quotation in a large way is $2.62. Marrows are unchanged at $3.50 in a large way, which is a comparatively high basis with pea beans where they are. California limas are unchanged and quiet. Green and Scotch peas are being held around $2.30 in a large way; demand light.

Provisions.

There has been the usual fall decline in all cuts of smoked meats, and a fair consumptive demand. Lard is steady at an advance of ¼ cent, due to better consumptive demand. Compound lard is dull and irregular. Dried beef is steady with a seasonable demand, and the same describes canned meats and barreled pork.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes appear to be steadily weakening, both new and old fruit. The demand is very light; and it looks like still lower prices before anything like activity will ensue. Peaches are still remarkably cheap, but dull; apricots unchanged and quiet. Raisins are selling to some extent, but there is still a large supply of 1913 raisins about, and they are interfering with the sale of 1914. Currants have dropped a cent and the price in a large way in cartons is now 7½ cents. The situation in Greece, however, is critical, and the outlook is strong.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple market continues firm, with a steady demand for carload lots from some of the European markets and for a fair demand for small lots from our domestic trade. Sales of export prime, in carload lots, have been made at 5 cents per pound, with small lots of strictly prime moving out every day at 5½ to 5¾ cents, all in 50-pound boxes.

While the output from the evaporators is increasing, stock does not accumulate as fast as it might, and this is giving a firmer tone to the future market.

Choice grades are quotable at ½ cent per pound over the above prices.

Raspberries continue steady at 21½ to 22 cents, f. o. b., in barrels.

Standard Canned Goods.

Killing frosts have brought the tomato canning season to an end. The small quantity of the fruit remaining on the vines is hardly worth the picking, and the factories will now shut down until the next season rolls around, except the shipping end of the business. The number of actual working days was equal to the average of the last eight or ten seasons, but in the first half of the season the unfavorable crop conditions largely reduced the output, and the market prices stiffened up in anticipation of a short pack. In the middle of September, because of favorable weather conditions, the plants which were set out late in the season, to replace those planted early in the spring, but which were killed by late frosts or washed out by heavy storms, commenced to bear large quantities of fruit which enabled the canners to almost overcome the shortage up to that time. Meantime the European war broke out, causing a depression in the money market, and, consequently, a general weakness in canned tomatoes, from which the market is just beginning to show signs of recovery.

At the opening of this week the utmost efforts were made, apparently to force down the prices to still lower levels, and rumors of sales made at ridiculous figures were spread broadcast. The steady buying reported last week at the going prices continued, in lots of one to three carloads, and during the last three days the orders became more numerous, and increased in size, besides being scattered over more States than at any time during the month. As a consequence, there is a firmer feeling that the decline in the market prices has run its course. It looks safe to buy tomatoes.

The buying of the other lines of canned vegetables during the week was light, for the month of October. Orders for straight carlots of any one article was scarce. There was the usual run of small assorted orders coming in daily, but they fell off in point of quantity. There were no leaders among them, and no recessions in prices worth special mention. The canners seem to be willing, if not content, to carry the goods rather than cut prices to force sales. Some few string beans and sweet potatoes are still being canned, but those crops are about over now.

In the line of canned fruits, pears continue to be the only article that shows any activity, and they were in demand again this week. In the face of the existing dullness in other fruits, the Baltimore canners have no complaint to make about pears. Unpeeled pie peaches and seconds peaches are fairly active in small lots, but the tiny orders for berries, cherries and pineapples were smaller than they were in the week previous. Apples are no exception to the general dullness in fruits.

The canners of cove oysters have opened the fall season and their quotations are attractive enough to merit attention.

Salmon.

Chums are still being packed. Market 85 cents; rather weak. Offers asked for round lots. Some halves and flats being packed.

Pinks, 1-Pound Talls.—Market decidedly firm. Small quantities obtainable at 90 to 95 cents. Packers generally insisting upon some chums or other grades being included.

Red Alaska.—A limited supply remains at $1.45. Practically no flats. Some halves offer asked.

The foreign war and the world's financial condition is temporarily having a sobering effect on business generally, though on food products general advances can be expected. No doubt banks of rediscount will give relief to the cotton factors and sooner or later the foreign demand will set in that may cause even a runaway market in America.

Trade have bought largely. Not much domestic business anticipated now before spring.

Transportation.—Thirty cent water rate to New York—low rates to Charleston. Possibility of steamer November-December to gulf port if sufficient cargo offers.

PHILIP J. BRADY.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Things are decidedly dull in our line. We could do a lot of business if we had any Holland herring, but unfortunately we have not, and no shipments are coming forward. Prices of Holland herring are so very high over there that we are afraid to import them. In the meanwhile Scotch herring are doing quite nicely, and are selling rather freely, although prices are not any higher than they were last week.

In regard to sardines, we beg to report a firm, steady and good market. The demand keeps up very well, and although buyers are not buying in a speculative way they are buying for their immediate need, which is a preferable business under present circumstances. Norway reports a very poor catch and higher prices. France reports that the catch on their coast has stopped. From Belgium, of course, no reports come forward. From Portugal there are reports that they have no fishing at the present time, and the little that has been shipped over here of well known brands has found ready buyers. It looks rather gloomy for further supplies of sardines. If troubles continue and if the North Sea should be closed to navigation, then we certainly should be in a very fine fix. We should not be able to get any of our stuff over here. Then again, if Italy should go to war and Greece, as it is expected, further difficulties will be created for us, as we shall be unable to import any goods from there, or if we do get them from there, it will be at a very high cost and connected with a great deal of trouble.

Mackerel are being sold in a hand-to-mouth way. Good parcels from Norway are steadily looked for, and prices are rather firmer than they were last week. Of course the poor Norway mackerel can be had at almost any price and holders are very anxious to clear them.

Our agents in Ireland report total shipments to date of 1913 Irish autumn mackerel, 29,269 barrels; 1914 Irish autumn mackerel, 1,659 barrels. Total shipments last week were 1,033 barrels both to the United States and Canada.

Rice.

A more optimistic feeling prevailed during the past week in all trading circles, but it could scarcely be said to indicate any marked improvement in the general status of business conditions. Cotton is still the potential factor in the commercial world, but it begins to look as if the complex situation had reached its crisis and was nearing a favorable solution, which must give all classes of trade a decided sense of relief in anticipation of a renewal of former activity in all lines of merchandise. Buyers of grocery stock still refuse to increase their present holdings, owing to the undoubted fact that there must have been more of a carry-over from last year's crop in the hands of traders than has been confidently believed, and this has impelled the trade not to add to their holdings until their present stocks are further reduced in the hope also that prices will continue to recede and enable them to hedge against the higher cost of their old crop holdings.

Besides this, it is well known that the month of October cannot be classed as a month to excite or stimulate speculation, as it is generally regarded as the high water mark in receipts of early rough, while the quality of the early river crop is superior to the later country receipts, the trade are inclined to go slow in purchases in expectation of lower values. And yet, though it is clearly evident that the market is on a really safe merchandising basis for enlarged operation, it is conceded on all sides that the demand has fallen down to a material degree, and does not give encouragement to any special activity in carrying any full stocks. In most sections, however, there is an increasing belief that the situation is in a sounder condition, and, therefore, actually improving.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast are trading still continues on a hand-to-mouth basis, with no large business, the planters still holding off awaiting better prices.

At New Orleans American Java and new crop Japans are in decided demand and moving at advanced prices. Mills report inability to fill orders for quick delivery and are booking freely for future shipment. Honduras in fair demand and prices holding firm.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, conditions are toning up. Millers in some sections report inability to supply the demand. Prices are very strong, with indications pointing to a somewhat higher market.

D. TALMAGE'S SONS Co.
New York and New Orleans.

Spices.

The market is less active this week, though the grinding is fair. Supplies are getting very short, even considering the smaller demand from the consuming trade. The question of supplies is becoming more acute every day. Under existing conditions, it is well to be fairly supplied for some time to come.

Pepper.—Market firmer. Prices being nominal due more or less to the great uncertainty as to further Eastern shipments coming, though indications point to fairly steady and possibly much higher prices during this and next month.

Red Peppers.—Stocks are very short. Market prices firm and the demand very fair.

Cloves.—Quite steady and scarce at present. Indications point at this time to an unchanged market.

Pimento (Allspice).—Low and unchanged. Demand small at present.

Mace.—Better grades are scarce. Market steady, but unchanged.

Nutmegs.—Unchanged in price, with steadily decreasing supply. Present prices we consider safe.

Cassias.—Saigon scarce. Both China and Batavia are in reduced supply and steady as to price. Ceylon cinnamon is very scarce at present and high prices are prevailing.

Gingers.—Are in small demand, except for Jamaica, which are scarce on spot, but at generally unchanged prices.

Tapioca.—Declined, then reacted, and is now firmer. Demand very good at present.

Paprika.—In fairly good demand. No changes in prices of Hungarian grade. Spanish varieties slightly higher, due to new arrivals soon to come in.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Caraway hold firm, present prices being under foreign quotation. Other seeds generally unchanged. Thyme herb declined steadily during the week. Marjoram and savory unchanged.

MARKET NOTES.

California Tokay grapes are winding up—prices are 75 to 90 cents.

Florida grapefruit is also coming green and sour and the best is bringing only $2.

Florida cucumbers are coming North and selling at low prices—$1.50.

Florida eggplants are selling at low prices because nearby eggplants are still about. The average for Floridas is $2.

California is commencing to ship strawberries East, and they range from 25 to 30 cents per pint. The quality is fair.

Savannah (Ga.) Grocers Going After Parcel Post Business.

Reports come from Savannah, Ga., that the grocers there have made a rather unusually energetic effort to get parcel post business, which has been successful. No less than nine boxes of groceries, including butter, lard, cheese, ham, sausage, rice, meal, soap, flour, bread, etc., were received by the Savannah post office one day for dispatch into the country. The boxes were for points in Georgia, South Carolina and Florida, within a radius of 50 or 60 miles of Savannah. The weights ranged from 42 to 49 pounds. The edibles were all nicely packed in wooden boxes, with the covers nailed down. Postmaster Lucas declared that this record was due to the fact that folks in the country are not only appreciative of the successful operation of the parcel post service, but that Savannah merchants for the most part have learned the art of properly packing goods for shipment by parcel post.

Big Oil Companies Indicted in New Jersey for Cutting Prices.

The Hudson County, N. J., Grand Jury during the week voted indictments against the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey and the Gulf Refining Co., as the result of a gasoline war that has been waging in Hudson County. In the early summer George E. Blakeslee organized the Mutual Oil Co. and began to cut the price of gasoline, which then was 22 cents a gallon. By July prices had dropped to 10 cents a gallon. The Crew-Levick Co., an independent concern of Jersey City, charged that the Mutual Co. was simply a subsidiary of the Standard and was organized to drive the independent company out of business. These allegations were presented to the Grand Jury several months ago, a court inquiry decided that the above was not a violation of the new anti-trust act.

Wheatena's Method of Advertising

For years the Wheatena Co. has specialized in its method of creating consumer demand, and for them it has proven highly successful. At this time in Philadelphia, they have two trained crews of men going from house to house leaving samples and explaining the merits of Wheatena (and they are many), telling how it is made and the different ways of cooking.

This method of advertising has always and is now producing a good strong consumer demand upon the retailer.

To back up the consumer work the call on the retail trade, making for their window displays and interior decorations and supplying them with advertising material.

You buy Wheatena under the broadest guarantee.—Advt.

What Delicious Butter"

Exclaimed Mrs. Blank, while partaking of an evening meal at our house recently. Of course, this remark made the hostess feel quite proud, for the reason that the article of food so highly praised was

Moxley's Oleomargarine

and it was generally known that Mrs. Blank had always been very much opposed to the use of oleo (as she expressed it), but when we had convinced her that it was surely that she had enjoyed so much, she decided right there to throw her past prejudice to the winds and in the future intends to use which can be used for all purposes as a substitute for butter and costs about one-half the price.

Moxley's Oleomargarine

Think of this when counting the high cost of living, and remember that

Why Do Ants Keep Little Cows?

This may seem a strange question, and at first thought difficult to comprehend.

It is probably just as hard for you to realize—that the day is very, very near at hand when the American nation will have absolutely no use either for little cows or big cows, except for a milk supply, and that will be U. S. inspected and certified. And the antiquated butter product will be a thing of the past.

YET IT IS UNMISTAKABLY TRUE

This is in line with the march of progress, and Moxley's Special Oleomargarine is in the front ranks.

In Times Like These Save Money

Does it seem like real, good economy to pay from 36 to 40 cents or more for butter when wage earners are being cut down? Is it necessary to have butter simply because it IS butter when you can obtain at about 20 to 30 per cent. less? This great food product is actually far superior to a great proportion of butter, both as to palatability and nutritive qualities. The nutritive parts of pure milk and cream go to make Warning Against This Year's Currants.

Moxley's Oleomargarine

American Consul at Patras, Greece
Sends State Department Warning
Against Large Percentage of Rain-Damaged Fruit. Says Many Shippers Will Put Some of it in Wagon Good Fruit.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

November 5, 1914

The American Consul at Patras, Greece, has sent to the State Department here a warning to the American grocery trade against the quality of a large part of this year's crop of Greek currants. His statement is as follows:—

American takers of Greek currants would do well, this season especially, to acquaint themselves in advance with the exact condition of the fruit they are proposing to purchase. As already stated, the currant crop suffered heavy damage from rain while it was upon the drying grounds. As a result the larger part of the entire crop for the 1914-15 season is more or less rain-damaged.

The damage is most serious in those districts from which the American market has been accustomed to draw its chief supply—the districts furnishing the genuine Amalias, so-called Amalias (really Pyrgos), and Provincial grades. The rain-damaged fruit in these districts is estimated to be two-thirds of the entire crop of the districts. Responsible local shippers state that a large part of this damaged fruit is so badly affected by the rains, having been thoroughly soaked upon the drying grounds that it is only a question of a few months at most until it will be unfit for food. The effect upon the currant of getting wet is to cause fermentation in the fruit; once the currant has been thoroughly wet it is difficult to dry it.

Although there is a fair amount of fruit not rain-damaged, it is difficult to get and costs three or four shillings ($0.73 or $0.97) per hundredweight (112 pounds) more than rain-damaged fruit of the same district. Some of the responsible exporters of Patras have stated that they are experiencing much difficulty in securing undamaged fruit of the Amalias (both genuine and so-called) grades to meet their advance contracts, the English market being especially insistent upon having the undamaged fruit.

It is stated that some sellers are making a blend of slightly damaged badly damaged and undamaged fruit in the districts which have suffered from rains in order to get an article which approaches the "American staple" as usually sold from these districts. The "American staple" is generally conceded by the trade to be inferior in grade to the English staple from the same districts.

Whats the Matter With a Business Men's Party?

Well, the election's over and the good old Republicans has triumphed once again. Hurray, Hur-roo! Everybody's got theirs but the tired business man, as you might say. Of all the new fellows that have been elected, and of all the old ones that have gone back, there ain't any of 'em so far as I've seen who are tumbling over themselves to promise the poor tired business man anything.

Ever think of that? If you'll take it from me, it's time to think of it.

No matter who's being elected, the labor people always have a say. So do the good old farmers. The labor people always butt in with letters and things about John Smith, candidate for U. S. Senator, being an enemy to the cause, and Bill Jones being a friend, and the farmers' granges get all worked up over the same things, and so on.

And the politicians sit up and pay attention, too, don't forget that. They try to squeal out of it when the labor people and the farmers soak 'em, and they understand right off the bat that if they ain't good and go along, why there's a big bunch of votes going slap against 'em at the polls.

Every word of that's as true as I'm telling you. Why is it? Because the labor people and the farmers are all massed up in their societies and all, and when they say they'll do something, they can do it. I don't mean they can swing elections, understand, although they might when you think of it, if it was close. But whether it's close or not they always have a look-in, and the politicians know it.

Now where's the tired business man come in? He pipes his little say about what he wants, too, but not a blamed one of 'em pays any attention. If they do pay attention, it's all forgot inside of a minute. Why do they sit up and take notice of the labor people and the farmers and don't pay any to the tired business man? If you'll wait till I push in a fresh wad of spearmint, I'll tell you.

There, she's in and now I'll tell you, if you'll excuse my speaking with my mouth full.

It's because the labor people and the farmers have got their organizations, and because the tired business man's organizations ain't any more good in politics than a family of fish worms all down with the mumps.

Some of 'em are all right for business, but they don't cut any more ice in politics than a hairpin.

That's the reason why these mangy politicians don't pay any attention to us—they know nothing'll happen to 'em if they don't.

My proposition is to make something happen to 'em. We can do it—we've got enough men—and we've got enough votes. Suppose all the business people in the State got together to soak some special candidate—he might not be soaked to the skin, but he'd be damp right.

We ought to make "blood" countersign and spill it right left if we have to. I myself would be tickled to death to see some brother spill some out of two or three politicians I'd point out. spill it myself? What are you talking about? I'm captain, can't expect me to do all the work. I got this scheme up, didn't I? right, then you fall in line and shut up, or I'll cut your head off!

I ain't got my nickname "bloody demon" for nothing, betcha!

We ought to get up a platform that's what we ought to do. when an election's coming we ought to fix up a statement of what we want and serve it on all the candidates. We ought to give 'em five minutes to say whether they'll do as we say. If they won't—kill 'em right then and there. As we've killed a dozen or so times, we won't be any more trouble. M.

CCLXXXIV.—A Buyer's Rights When Part of an Order Has Not Been Delivered Within the Contract Time.

In one or two recent articles I have discussed the question when an order for goods was a binding contract between the seller and the buyer which could not be cancelled by either without the other's consent. From the editor of the "Dry-goodsman," of St. Louis, Mo., comes the following pertinent inquiry upon a phase of the subject which I believe I have never touched upon:—

We would be very glad if you would discuss, as a corollary to a recent article with relations to the status of orders as contracts, these points:—

Back orders; that is, merchandise that is ordered but not shipped at the same time with the first delivery of goods. How long after the original shipment has been made should a retail merchant be expected to accept the back order? Who should pay the carriage charges under these latter conditions and also when has a merchant a moral or legal right to cancel back order merchandise?

An article on these points, we believe, would be of interest to all retailers and we know that we can make use of it if you can include it in your series at an early date.

I understand this inquiry to mean substantially this: A gives B an order consisting of several items, perhaps, to be shipped at a certain time. At the proper time B ships a part only. The time to ship expires and still the order is in part unfilled. What is A's status as to the balance? Must he accept it when B chooses to ship it, or can he cancel that part of the order?

Generally speaking, when a seller has failed to deliver according to his contract, the buyer has a choice of two remedies. He can either cancel that part of the order which has not been filled, or he can accept it and hold the buyer responsible for any damages which he may have sustained because of the delay.

But the first question which arises in such cases is, has the seller failed to deliver according to his contract? This will be settled by the contract or order, which may be drawn so as to hold the seller strictly to delivery by a certain time, or it may be drawn so as to give the seller more latitude as to time of delivery. If an order for merchandise definitely names the time of delivery, the seller is held to it absolutely. If it says "delivery by March 1st," then the law says time is the essence of that contract, and if the seller holds over even one day beyond March 1st, he is in default and the buyer can pursue either of the above-mentioned courses.

But the contract may not so definitely limit the time of delivery. It may say "delivery about March 1st," which is a very different proposition. Or it may not name any date at all, merely stipulating for "prompt" delivery, or "immediate" delivery, and so on.

Where the contract or order does not positively fix the delivery date, the law says time is not the essence of the contract, and the seller gets more leeway in his delivery. For instance, in a well-known case goods were to be delivered "about November 1st." The court held that delivery on November 10th was good. In another case delivery was to be made "about the last of May or June." Delivery was made June 30th and was held to be within the contract. In a third case delivery was to be made "about June, 1906," and the court said any time in June or within a reasonable time thereafter was a good delivery. Naturally there is no rule as to what is a reasonable time in such cases, or what is "about" such and such a date. The court considers all the circumstances, and is usually pretty lenient to the seller, unless the goods in question are seasonable goods and are worthless after a certain time, when the rule becomes stricter.

Where no time for delivery is named in a contract, or a time is named but vaguely, delivery must be made within a "reasonable" time, which as I have explained, is a question for the court to decide under all the circumstances of the case.

Where a contract provides for delivery "immediately," the law holds that it must be made without delay and as quickly as circumstances and the usual course of business will permit.

Where the contract is for delivery "as soon as possible," or "earliest possible" delivery, it does not mean instantly, or that the seller must drop everything else. It means as soon as the seller can possibly ship under the circumstances.

"Prompt" delivery means practically nothing more than delivery within a reasonable time and without undue delay.

If a buyer intends to take advantage of the seller's failure to deliver, he must act promptly at the time, or he may lose his rights. For instance, suppose a contract provides for delivery by March 1st. Only part of the goods are shipped by that time. On March 2d or 3d the buyer, if he intends to cancel the undelivered portion, should notify the seller—by registered mail if he is out of town—that the undelivered portion of the order is thereupon cancelled. If the seller persists in sending the goods in spite of this notice, the buyer can take them in with all his right intact to deduct from the price all the damages he has sustained.

There are several ways in which a buyer can lose his right to object at late delivery, or his right to cancel a contract on that account.

If he takes the goods in when they arrive, tardily, with full knowledge of their lateness, and without objection, many cases hold that he must pay for them as if they had been delivered in full accordance with the contract.

If he takes the goods in and objects to the goods on other grounds than their lateness, he cannot afterward object on the ground of lateness.

If he takes the goods in and asks for more time to pay "because the goods were late," he forfeits his right to reject because they were late.

If after the delivery date has passed, and when he could cancel he chose to, he demands delivery, he must take the goods in when they come.

The law looks a little differently at the buyer who takes late goods in under stress of circumstances—because he needs them for some immediate and pressing purpose. He does not so easily lose his right to claim damages by the mere act of accepting them.

Where a buyer decides not to cancel the undelivered portion of the order, but to accept the goods and claim his damages, the measure of his damages will usually be the difference in the value of the goods when they were actually delivered, and the value when they should have been delivered. For instance, flour bought at $5 per barrel, to be delivered not later than March 1st. On March 1st the market was $5, but it declined shortly afterward. A part was not delivered until March 15th, when the price was $4.50. The measure of damages would be 50 cents for every barrel not delivered until March 15th, provided the buyer had acted promptly and in none of the ways set out above, had waived his right to object.

If after failure to deliver part of an order the market for the goods looks weak, the best plan is to instantly cancel the undelivered part. That keeps you safe on a declining market. If the market looks firm, of course you will probably not wish to cancel at all. If it is stationary, and it will not be difficult to buy at the contract price, I should also cancel, as you lose nothing by it and have put yourself in a position to protect all your rights in the case.

(Copyright, November, 1914, by Elton J. Buckley.)

Question: B. B. Crompton, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.—I had a peculiar case come up just recently and would like to ask your advice in the matter.

A party was dealing with me for about a year and always paid cash, just occasionally leaving a bill stand for a week or so, the wife contracting the bills.

About three months ago the husband went away and the wife kept on dealing with me, having the goods charged. Of course I did not worry as our dealings had always been pleasant and she said she would pay the bill as soon as her husband came back.

Then I did not see her for some time, and as she often went home for a week or two at a time, I still did not worry until some one came in my store and told me the party had moved to Canton, Ohio.

I at once inquired where he was working and found that he held as good a position there as he had left here. I then sent him an itemized bill of their account and received a reply stating that his wife had paid the bill to one of two clerks, not knowing exactly which one.

This of course I knew was not true, so I wrote again, explaining to him in detail my talk with his wife about the bill, thinking in that way that perhaps she would remember the circumstance. He again replied that they never left any bills stand and that they did not owe me anything.

I then wrote the third time and told him that the bill had not been paid and asked him to send me a check for it, and if I did not hear from him within a reasonable time I would be forced to place the matter in the hands of his firm.

As yet I have received no reply and would appreciate it very much if you would advise me as to further procedure.

Answer.—Are you absolutely sure that this woman did not pay the bill to one of your clerks? Of course if she did, she owes you nothing, for in all ordinary businesses the clerks have authority to take in money, and I assume that yours did.

If you are sure that the woman is lying, I should put the matter in the hands of the Canton (Ohio) Retail Grocers' Association if there is such an organization, and particularly if it has any plan for forcing delinquents to pay their debts. If there is no such association, I should place the account in the hands of some lawyer in Canton for collection. You will probably collect the claim without difficulty, for in Ohio they have a law allowing the attachment of wages.

I have received a batch of newspaper ads. from J. McGown & Sons, grocers, of Clinton, Mass. Most of them appear to have been used some time ago. I don't know whether they all are clipped from the same newspaper, but some indicate more than others the fact that the paper was very badly printed. A great many publishers of newspapers in small towns and cities fail to remember that cheap paper and poor press work do to the reputation of their newspapers exactly what a shabby suit of clothes does to their own reputation. "Assume prosperity if you have it not" is a splendid maxim for newspapers, merchants and everybody else.

Mr. McGown has taken pains and care with his advertising, that is very apparent. He uses various sized spaces, ranging from nine inches single column up to 9 inches across three columns. I have reproduced two of the best. The advertisement, "All Aboard for the Picnic," filled a space of eight inches double column, and the one, "Back to the manufacturer. I wish that Mr. McGown, sometime when he has a minute, tisements he has used very heavy and elaborate borders, usually with large corner pieces. A border ought to do nothing more than set an advertisement off—it ought never to attract any attention to itself; you aren't trying to sell borders. Mr. McGown's borders not only do attract attention to themselves, but they use up a lot of space that might be better used. I recommend a plain border, not over 1-16th inch wide, with no curlicues and no big corner blocks. I also notice a tendency all through his advertisements to clutter them up with a lot of rules and boxes, many of which don't help at all. For instance, in one of the advertisements I reproduce—"Back to the Real Thing," the rule box surrounding the headline is of absolutely no use. The printer put some considerable work on that, but it just clutters the advertisement up.

This advertising, generally speaking, is enterprising and good, and I have no doubt got results. The advertisement "Back to the Real Thing," is better, in my opinion, than the other. The latter is crowded, and I don't like the way in which small type, without any boldface, has been put into those little boxes. There appears to have been no reason to separate those goods by rules, as they are simply a part of the same kind of a list. There is too much matter in this advertisement, and it isn't well designed.

How the Winners In the Advertising Writing Contest Can Get Some Free Advertising.

Their Local Newspaper Will Doubtless be Glad to Publish the Fact of Their Competing and Receiving a Prize or Honorable Mention.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" wants to make a suggestion to the winners in the Ad-writing Contest which we are sure will enable them to get some valuable free advertising in their local newspapers.

This applies to those who receive the three capital prizes and also to those who received "honorable mention."

If each of these will take his copy of this issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" to his local newspaper and will explain that his track paper has been holding an Ad-writing Contest in which he was a contestant and that the advertisement which he submitted received a prize, or an "honorable mention," as the case may be, the local newspaper editor will almost certainly be glad to publish this as an item of news. Any of the activities of local citizens, particularly a local business man, usually has some new value, and local newspaper editors are as a rule, quick to see this.

It is also likely that the local newspaper editors will be glad to reproduce the advertisement which won the prize or which obtained honorable mention. This part of the article is by no means unlikely to bring actual returns, for it is to be presumed that everybody who wrote an advertisement for "Moxley Oleomargarine" kept it in stock, and the grocer will therefore be in the position of receiving free advertising, in new form, for a product which he regularly handles.

The fact that a retailer is not an advertiser in his local papers should not deter him from attempting to get the fact of the contest in the paper; for purely as a matter of news, it is worth of publication.

Will any contestant who follows these suggestions and gets results, send copies of his local papers to this office?

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Do Women Say This to You?

"Oh, no, I don't want to bother with it—it spoils too easily."

This is the spoken or unspoken reason hundreds of women have for not using Rennet regularly in their homes. All such women will buy James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet, for every bottle is guaranteed. We can safely guarantee it because its making is as scrupulously clean as anything can be.

We also guarantee it to do its work with milk in three to five minutes—that's another point to use with women who haven't been using rennet.

And here is the argument to use with you—Shinn's Liquid Rennet pays you 100 per cent. profit.

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to see why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

How English Grocers Have Handled the War Problems

Grocers' Federation Combined With the Government at the Outset to Keep Down Food Prices. Nevertheless Granulated Sugar Reached Twenty Cents Per Pound. Butter Also Got Very High. Situation Now Settling Itself.

On the morning of August 4th last, which day followed the realization of the English people that they were actually at war, when grocers opened their shops they were through that and the two or three succeeding days inundated by the most prosperous section of the wealthy and of the working classes. Demands were made for supplies of goods in abnormal quantities; ladies drove to the grocers' shops in motor cars, asking for a case (100 pounds) of cube sugar, for one or two sides of bacon, for sacks (280 pounds) of flour, and other things on a similar scale. It seemed to this sort of purchaser that we were to be in a state of siege, that our supplies would be cut off and that it was necessary for the shrewd who had the means to lay in large stocks.

This panicky state of things naturally alarmed every storekeeper. The more thoughtless acted as if the millennium had arrived and that they were to make fortunes in a day. They parted with their stocks at the normal prices in most cases. The shrewder ones, however, put up prices to such an extent that 20 cents per pound was paid for white granulated sugar, 24 cents per pound for lump sugar, 36 cents per pound for bacon, 48 cents per stone (14 pounds) for flour and similarly wild charges.

In anticipation of some such state of things the Grocers' Federation submitted a proposal to the Cabinet that a committee of prominent grocers should be formed, who, out of their experience, should make recommendations to the government as to maximum prices. This voluntary action was gladly accepted and a strong committee, including the proprietors of the principal "chain store" businesses and members of the Grocers' Federation, was formed within two days, and on August 8th the government issued, on behalf of this committee, the following announcement:—

To meet the position caused by the abnormal conditions, the following prices are recommended as maximum retail prices for August 7th, 8th and 10th. Further announcements will be made on August 11th. It is hoped with the assistance of the Government that the difficulties in obtaining supplies may be speedily overcome.

This statement was published in all the daily and weekly press throughout the United Kingdom and had a wonderful effect in allaying the anxiety of thrifty housewives, and still better, in stopping the looting of grocers' shops which had already commenced in certain working class districts in both London and the provinces.

This advisory committee to the government continued to meet twice a week throughout the whole of August, issuing its recommended prices regularly. These were adopted very generally as the maximum. The fierce competition between the "chain shop" stores and the co-operative societies, however, brought a lower margin of prices in ordinary business, and generally speaking in the great commercial centres retail prices were at least one-third less than the maxima above quoted. As the days went by and the various shipping routes were declared safer public anxiety was allayed and trading in groceries and provisions assumed a much more normal condition.

It was discovered very soon, however, that the article concerning which there was most anxiety was sugar. Prior to the war the normal consumption of sugar was 35,000 tons weekly and as two-thirds of this came from Germany, Austria and Russia, it was evident that there must be a shortage as these sources of supply came to a dead stop. About July 26th Germany and Austria had forbidden its exportation and quantities of sugar which were actually loaded into vessels for dispatch from German and Austrian ports were detained and have never yet crossed the sea. This led to great confusion among the retail distributors. Some were, of course, well bought; others, who were dependent upon their contract supplies found that they had no sugar forthcoming in August. Every one tried to get his August contract deliveries, but in vain and this caused the wholesale prices to rise very rapidly, as much as $15 per cwt. (112 pounds) were asked and obtained for white refined sugar. Obviously, to retail such sugar at 9 cents per pound was a very unprofitable proceeding. The government promptly realized this danger, and to meet it went into the market and became buyers of unrefined sugar on a very large scale, so that by the end of August the government were the largest holders of unrefined sugar in the United Kingdom. They then set up a Royal Commission on Sugar Supplies, through which the government could be advised as to the prospects of the sugar markets and also as to the arrangements necessary to keep British refiners supplied with the unrefined article, so that they might work at full time and turn out refined sugar for home consumption.

Unfortunately the capacity of the British refiners is only equal to the supply of about two-thirds of the normal quantity required by the consumer. These high prices, however, have attracted some sugar from America, from Italy and from Spain, but even these new sources of supply were quite unequal to the normal demand. The government therefore arranged for British refiners to turn out granulated sugar at from $7.50 to about $9 per cwt. and fixed the minimum prices at which sugar should be retailed at 7.5 cents for granulated and 8.5 cents for lump sugar, this being an endeavor to check the consumption by raising prices. To accomplish this, as will be imagined, is a huge task and it says a great deal for the retail storekeepers that, generally speaking, this minimum price has been adopted and is maintained at the time of writing. The result has thus far been a very satisfactory decrease in consumption, which may enable the trade to tide over the period until the end of October when foreign supplies of sugar may come in in larger quantities.

It will thus be seen that sugar has been the one cause of anxiety and has necessitated very great efforts to cope with the difficulties thus created.

Both butter and bacon, however, have likewise been very difficult articles, inasmuch as the chief source of supply for the great industrial districts of the north of England particularly is Denmark. The dangerous condition of the North Sea has made it difficult to obtain regular supplies, with the result that the wholesale price of butter ran as high as $44 per cwt., with the improved safety of the North Sea these prices have somewhat decreased.

A comparison of prices in the second half of July, i. e., before the war, and the first week in September shows that bacon has increased in the wholesale price of from 3 to 4 cents per pound, butter (in all sorts but Danish) an increase of 1 cent per pound, cheese an increase of 3 cents per pound, lard an increase of 2 cents per pound, margarine an increase of 2 cents per pound. Sugar shows an increase of from 4 to 5 cents per pound. On most other articles in general consumption the increase has been about 10 per cent. It will thus be seen that in the early period of the war prices, generally speaking, were higher, but now the nation seems to be settling down to a more regular condition of things and on the whole it must be said that the British nation has, so far, not very seriously suffered in the matter of prices.

Financial difficulties became evident in what may be called the higher branches of commerce and the action of the government in proclaiming a moratorium, where the payment of debts exceeding a certain amount was suspended for a month, has proved very useful, generally speaking. It has been of great assistance to bankers and on the whole it must be said that the bankers have behaved very reasonably.

in the facilities which they gave to the trade.

Employment has been fairly good, although in certain trades there has necessarily been much unemployment. But this is being met by the network of committees that has been created and which reaches into the remotest country village and into the lowest slum of the densely populated districts. By means of these committees serious want has been relieved, large sums of money having been raised. Already the Prince of Wales' relief fund, which was started at the opening of the war, has reached $11,000,000, whilst other funds, such as the Red Cross ambulance, the Queen's fund for the relief of unemployed.

The retail storekeepers of the nation have not been behind in the general display of enthusiasm. In every town are to be found grocers who have both contributed themselves and collected sums of money towards the various national funds that have been established. Their action at the outset in advising the government as to prices has proved a national benefit.

Week's Canned Goods Sale That Moved a Thousand Cases in Two Moderate Sized Stores.

Something From Actual Experience Which Shows What a Trade-Bringing Feature the Annual Canned Goods Sale Can Be. Philadelphia Retail Grocery Firm's Four Years' Experience.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has been furnished with some matter which shows conclusively what a big trade bringer a canned goods sale can be for the retailer, even for the retailer of small or moderate size. Canned sale lots if made to see that it pays them to do so.

The matter referred to above was issued by Kerr Bros., proprietors of two stores at 3530 North Seventeenth street and 3100 North Sixteenth street, Philadelphia, to ex-

A similar campaign for the sale of highest quality canned goods has been launched each succeeding year with even greater results, and we now call to your attention for the season 1914-1915 the following catalogue, combining a large assortment of various brands of canned fruit, vegetables and other delicacies, all carefully selected with a view to quality, purity and consistent economy. We suggest comparison of prices for goods of equal quality. The purchase of a few dozen assorted cans at this time for the winter's use would, we believe, prove a wise and profitable investment.

KERR BROS. MARKETS.

Any plan of merchandising that can move—in two moderate-sized stores—a thousand cases of canned goods in one week is a good thing. The publication from which the above was taken contains eight pages and is very finely printed on extremely good coated paper. The front page bears the photograph of the four members of the firm, and the inside is devoted to canned goods offerings. A typical page reproduced above in about one-third the original size.

Largest Food Adulteration Fine Ever Imposed Just Paid by Ohio Wine Company.

Amounted $1,500 and Covered Several Violations. Cleveland (Ohio) Police House Also in the Toils of Several Counts. Government Brings Many Other Prosecutions Under Federal Food and Drug Acts.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
November 13, 1914

The largest fine so far imposed under the Federal Food and Drug Act has just been imposed on Sweet Valley Wine Co. of Sandusky, Ohio. It was $1,500 in costs, and covers a number of different shipments of adulterated and misbranded wines from Ohio to various other States.

A fine of $200 and costs was imposed on H. Kohnstamm & Co., Chicago, Ill., for the interstate shipment of yellow egg shade coal color which was adulterated. The product is used as an ingredient in the preparation and manufacture of confectionery products. Samples of the product showed that arsenic had been mixed and packed with it so as to affect its quality injuriously.

A fine of $100 was imposed on Vincenzo Marrone and Rocco I. faro, of Utica, N. Y., for the shipment in interstate commerce of goods sales originated with the department stores, and were efforts to induce consumers, at certain times of the year, to buy canned goods by the dozen or case. A discount from the price of one can was always offered. The canned goods sale is now an established autumn feature with the large stores, and with a constantly increasing number of small stores. The experience of all of them has been that a considerable number of consumers will buy in whole-plot their fourth annual Canned Goods Sale on November 2d to 9th. The growing importance of the Canned Goods Sale as a business institution is revealed by the following statement which this firm make:

Had it been suggested a few years ago that in a retail store doing a fair suburban business, 1,000 cases of canned goods could be sold and delivered within a week, we confess that we should have regarded the accomplishment of such a feat well-nigh impossible. That during the week of October 3 to 8, 1911, upwards of 1,000 cases were actually disposed of at our stores is an actual fact.

alled olive oil or cottonseed oil, which was adulterated and misbranded. The product was alleged to be adulterated because its label represented it to be pure olive oil, cottonseed oil, whereas it was not, and misbranding was alleged, among other reasons, because the label might lead the purchaser to believe that it was a product of foreign manufacture, when in fact it was a product of local manufacture.

A fine of $60 and costs was imposed on the Schorndorfer & Eberhard Co., alias the Miller-Eberhard Co. of Cleveland, Ohio, for misbranding of preserves. These preserves were called "Pure Blackberry and Apple," "Pure Cherry and Apple," "Pure Pineapple and Apple," "Pure Strawberry and Apple," and "Pure Raspberry and Apple." The different brands of the preserves contained phosphoric acid in amounts varying from .23 per cent. to .83 per cent. Phosphoric acid is not a normal constituent of "pure preserves."

A number of small fines have recently been imposed on individuals in Washington, D. C., for offering for sale a quantity of so-called butter which was adulterated and misbranded. The penalty in each case was imposed, not because oleomargarine, an imitation butter, was offered for sale, but because it was substituted in whole or in part for butter and offered for sale as butter.

The following individuals, or pairs of individuals, have been fined $10 each for selling or offering for sale adulterated and misbranded butter: John Nacos, Chas. B. Georgian, William M. Burt, Wesley L. Sadler, Thomas Stathes, Charles B. Simmons, Roy B. Snauffer, George Zagors, Hugh Hanger, Samuel Augenstein, Charles H. Fred, Bert H. Brockway, George M. Lefas, William Assimack, Geo. Lambros and George Wen.

Other cases of adulteration and misbranding of food products noted in recent Notices of Judgment of the Department are as follows:—

Cider—National Fruit Products Co., Memphis, Tenn. Adulteration and misbranding; $75 and costs (3 cases).

Scuppernong wine and Catawba unfermented grape juice—The Bay View Wine Co., Sandusky, Ohio. Adulteration and misbranding; $25 and costs.

Salad dressing—Miller-Eberhard Co., Cleveland, Ohio. Adulteration and misbranding; $20 and costs.

Tomato catsup—The Schorndorfer & Eberhard Co., Cleveland, Ohio. Adulteration and misbranding; $20.

Confectionery—Candy Bros. Mfg. Co., St. Louis, Mo. Misbranding; $10 and costs.

Sugar butter—Marshalltown Syrup and Sugar Co., Marshalltown, Iowa. Adulteration and misbranding; $10 and costs.

Preserves—Castleman - Blake-more Co., Louisville, Ky. Adulteration and misbranding; $10.

Oysters—Rollie H. White, Washington, D. C. Adulteration; $10 (2 cases).

Oysters—E. H. Hammond & Co., Washington, D. C. Adulteration; $5. HOLT.

Filthy Horse Meat Scandal at Louisville, Ky.

The agitation in Louisville, Ky., over the sale of horse meat to consumers has been further intensified by the exposure in the affidavit of Al Koch, one of the convicted butchers, that dogs were also served to the public under the guise of "coons" or "shoats." Charges and counter charges of official incompetency that let such affairs exist have been made, and a shake-up is promised following the prosecution of the meat sellers. The convicted men declare that they have been made the "goats" for others higher up who are protected by their influence and standing. The Butchers' Protective Association protests to the public that its members are not slaughtering or selling bad meat. The Retail Grocers' Association also declares that such meat is not being sold by association grocers. It appears that meat inspection in Louisville failed to detect this imposition upon the public until it had become flagrant, and the newspapers, while urging the adoption of a meat inspection ordinance, recommend the study of the Federal meat inspection law passed by Congress about eight years ago.

If You Read Nothing Else in This Paper, Read Ivins' Advertisement.

In its generosity, it is one of the most remarkable advertisements ever published by a cake and cracker manufacturer. Messrs. J. S. Ivins' Son have prepared a "Grocery World assortment" of their choicest specialties, at a total price within everybody's reach ($6.12). They send a display case free, prepay the freight and guarantee the sale of the assortment within 45 days. It is a splendid offer and should be accepted by a large proportion of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" readers.

Messrs. J. S. Ivins' Son, Inc., use the highest grade materials in their crackers and cakes which it is possible to buy. Their products are very fancy. —Advt.

National Selling Service

National Biscuit Company advertising renders a high-class selling service. It promotes repeat business for every grocer who carries National Biscuit Company goods. It is a steady producer of results.

Successful grocers are always ready to take advantage of new goods introduced by National Biscuit Company. They know that the quality of the goods is beyond question and that they will be widely advertised.

WITH THE EDITOR

There is food for thought in a statement made by "Printers' Ink" in a recent article on "How the Chains are Taking Over the Retail Field."

After demonstrating that there are five hundred chains of grocery stores in the United States, comprising 8,000 stores, and that in all lines there are 2,788 chains totaling 30,549 stores, "Printers' Ink" finds that in eleven years in Greater New York chain stores have increased nearly seven times as fast as single stores! In 1903 there were 8,750 retail grocery stores all told, of which but 215 were chain stores. In 1914 the total number was 13,513, of which 985 were chain stores. The percentage of increase in all stores was 54 per cent. and in chain stores 360 per cent.

The figures are not compiled as to other cities, but doubtless they would show about the same—in cities where chain store concerns have established themselves. There are no chain stores in some cities, notably those of the West and South, but in all cities like New York and Philadelphia, where the chain stores are a feature of the trade, they have doubtless grown faster—much faster—than the regular stores.

Why have they? Because with every new branch store that opened for a chain grocery establishment, there has been so much less incentive to open a single grocery store—less incentive because of less chance for profit. Most of the chain store concerns are headed by shrewd, far-seeing merchants. They spend money lavishly to get the best brains in the business around them, to advertise largely, to do everything else to attract business to themselves. With many of the chain stores, even if they sold at higher prices than the single stores that competed with them, they would stand a better chance of getting the business, because they are better exploited. William Smedley, of Philadelphia, who has been secretary of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association and secretary of the Acme Tea Co., spoke truly when he said recently that the big chain stores are constantly putting out ideas that the single storekeeper could adopt with profit.

The following is from a daily paper published a day or two after the recent election:—

Congratulations to the Merchants of Four States.

Thirteen States now have laws prohibiting the sale of alcoholic beverages as a result of Tuesday's election, on the face of to-night's returns, which show that prohibition was adopted in Arizona, Washington, Oregon and Colorado.

The States which prohibit the sale of liquor are: Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Georgia, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oregon, Tennessee, Washington and West Virginia.

Alabama at one time adopted a prohibition amendment, but later rescinded it. Part of Oklahoma that was formerly Indian Territory is also prohibition and South Carolina is largely so under various acts. A score of States have local option laws.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" congratulates the merchants of Arizona, Washington, Oregon and Colorado upon their entrance into a happy state into which the rest of us will inevitably come, sooner or later. They have rid themselves of the greatest destroyer of business that God ever allowed to encumber the earth. Men who can buy no liquor will not only buy more necessities, but they will be able to earn more to buy with.

The war of words over the proper status of specialty orders continues, and seems as far from being settled as the war in Europe. Last week somebody came into this office burning alive with a story he had just been told by a retailer. He wanted it published, and it will be. It appears that the retailer in question had just made the statement that he gave an order to every specialty man that came into his store.

When those orders finally reached the jobber through whom they were to be shipped, however, they encountered a standing instruction which the retailer had given, that no attention whatever was to be paid to any of them—they were to be forthwith thrown away!

The person who brought this story to us thought it was a most vicious example of the view some merchants take of specialty orders. And so it is, but the person most to blame for it was not, we believe, the jobber—as our informant contended—but the retailer. Surely no jobber is to be blamed because he discards orders which he is told in advance will not be accepted.

No retailer has the slightest shadow of a right to treat signed orders in this way. It is despicable, it is unfair to everybody, particularly the salesman, who is usually a deserving young fellow, working hard for what he gets. His house blames him when his customers cancel orders.

The answer this retailer would make is probably the same that the writer has heard other retailers make in similar cases: "What am I going to do? These salesmen come in here by the dozen and try to sell me what I don't want. They won't take no for an answer, and they bother me to death. The only thing I can do with some of them is to sign their orders and cancel them afterward."

In some cases there is something in this. The writer has seen salesmen who were offensively persistent and who almost literally had to be kicked out of a store before they would go. But they are the exceptions. The average specialty salesman is a gentleman and can easily be gotten rid of. A firm and positive statement "I don't want the goods" will almost always serve—it is cowardly to sign and cancel merely to escape being firm.

Foot and Mouth Disease Hits Pittsburg Meat Trade.

Many Cows Have to be Killed and Small Retailers Suspend.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 13, 1914.

Since the outbreak of foot and mouth disease a week ago more than 200 cows have been killed in Pittsburg and vicinity and a large number of herds suspected of being infected are under quarantine. A large corps of government inspectors and agents of the State Health Department are at work in this end of the State. No cattle remain in the Herrs Island stock yards, one of the biggest in the country.

Pittsburg's small meat dressers and butchers are rapidly being forced to suspend business temporarily because of the quarantine on cattle. West Virginia is the only channel through which cattle may be shipped into this State, as all other States touching upon the borders of Pennsylvania are under quarantine. It is likely every county in this State will be placed under quarantine. Then the small independent butchers will be forced out of business, as most of them get all their cattle for butchering in the immediate vicinity.

American Investors Invited to Invest in Canned Lobster.

During the year ended November 30, 1913, 9,249,796 pounds of canned lobster were exported from the Maritime Provinces of Canada. Prince Edward Island, the smallest of these Provinces, provided $986,364 worth of this product, while the total amount exported from these Provinces was valued at $3,408,992. The output of the lobster canneries this year will be about the same as that of last year, and the largest portion of it has been sold to dealers at very high prices, ranging from $18 to $22 per case of 48 pounds. About one-third of this is yet in the hands of Canadian dealers, 25,000 cases of being at Halifax alone, while 30,000 cases shipped to France by local dealers cannot find a market. England and France consumed two-thirds of last year's production of Canadian lobster. This year there is hardly any sales of such luxuries in Europe. This has affected the market in Canada the small quantities offered at $10 per case have not been taken. Large quantities are not offered for fear of breaking the market. But thousands of cases could be bought at very low figures. Canned lobsters will keep for years consequently this unprecedented depression in prices affords a good opportunity for American investors, according to the American Consul in Prince Edward Island.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

A Good Idea.

New York, Nov. 7, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—My attention has been called to an article in your issue of October 12th, in which a list of food products advertised in the October magazines is printed, with a view to interesting retailers in articles for which the manufacturer has created a demand.

Wouldn't it be a good idea to print a list of food products advertised nationally in the newspapers, for which, owing to the localized character of the advertising, an actual demand is created upon the dealer's store?

This organization, working through the newspapers of this country and Canada, has been interesting retailers in National products handled by them and advertised in the newspapers. During the week of October 19th-24th this interest was crystallized into a gigantic general window display plan. Probably 20,000 dealers in 300 cities made special displays during that week of newspaper advertised products.

I think there is an important significance attached to this willingness of the dealer to push products advertised in the newspapers, and I think that some mention of it would be of interest to your readers.

Yours truly,

WILLIAM A. THOMAS,
Director American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

We think this is a good idea, but it is not easy to see where we could get a list of what is being advertised in newspapers all over the country. Without much trouble we can read all the principal magazines, but it would be impossible to keep in touch with all the newspapers.

Usual Fee For Selling a Business.

Philadelphia, Nov. 12, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly inform me through your valuable paper what the regular commission is for selling a grocery stock, fixtures and good will. I sold my business for $2,000 and there is a doubt about the fee the agent should get. I got the buyer and he transacted the business.

Thanking you for an early reply, I remain,

Yours truly,

E. F. K.

Fees for selling a business do not appear to be as uniform as fees for selling real estate and such property. Perhaps the majority of agents charge 5 per cent. where the selling price is less than $5,000 and 3 per cent. where it exceeds $5,000. There are agents, however, who will charge only 2 to 3 per cent.

As to the American Grocers' Society.

Parryville, Pa., Nov. 12, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—About two months ago I read a letter from the American Grocers' Society, a letter, "How would you like to buy Ivory soap at $6.73 instead of $7," and mentioning other articles and prices accordingly. Last of all they said send for booklet, "Quit Working for Others."

Some of their prices appealed to me and I sent for it. About four weeks afterwards I received the booklet I am inclosing and also a letter in which they say to get these prices I must buy four shares of stock at $12.50, or $50. Then they will send me 200 articles from which to buy.

Now, to make the story short, I have been caught napping before on just such schemes and would like to know whether you or any one else knows anything about the American Grocers' Society of Newark, N. J.

As I am preparing this a specialty man comes into the store and I gave him an order for merchandise through a first-class Philadelphia house. When he asked me whether I knew anything about the American Grocery Co. of Newark, I told him what I knew and he said in all his travels he had received one order for goods to be shipped through the American Grocers' Society, and that was in Palmerton, Pa. I have since found out their agent in Palmerton is advising quick action, as stock would advance in two weeks.

Yours truly,

J. D. P.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" does know something about the American Grocers' Society and has advised its subscribers not to invest in it. The result of some investigation into this scheme were published in this paper of October 12th, copy of which has been sent this correspondent.

Cost of an Oleo Department in Pennsylvania.

Williamsport, Pa., Nov. 12, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Could you furnish us with a rough estimate of the approximate cost of starting an oleomargarine or butterine department? Also the names of good reliable refrigerators firms that make coolers to keep the same in.

Yours truly,

SIMON'S GROCERY CO.

It Paid.

Conshohocken, Pa., Nov. 11, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I put an ad. in your paper that I had an electric coffee mill and a paper baler for sale. I have had three calls for the coffee mill and have shipped it to Lancaster, thanking you for your assistance in disposing of same. The paper baler I still have for sale, and am willing to sell it for $10, instead of $12.

Yours truly,

An Error Corrected.

North Wales, Pa., Nov. 10, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In your issue of this week's paper, in Mr. Sweeney's remarks, we noticed the article about the weight of apples to the half peck. Your article says that a half peck of apples should weigh 30 pounds. Is this correct? We think it should be 30 pounds to the half bushel, as we do not know of any apples that would weigh 30 pounds to the half peck.

Your article was very interesting and we enjoyed it very much, as we do all of your news, and we hope to receive an answer to this concerning the apple question. Awaiting your reply, we are,
Yours truly,

DE HOUTP'S GROCERY, INC.

The statement which we put in Mr. Sweeney's mouth that "a half peck of apples should weigh 30 pounds," was a reporter's error. A half peck of apples weighs only 12½ pounds, as there are but 50 pounds in a bushel under the new law and four pecks.

We have also received another inquiry on the same subject.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association.

The committee in charge of reconstructing the Pennsylvania plan in use by the above organization have submitted the following report:—

To give every association an equal chance to win a prize, $2,000 will be divided into 23 prizes and $500 divided pro rata among the associations sending delegates to the convention, making a total distribution of $2,500.

Fifteen hundred dollars of merchandise listed in the Pennsylvania Plan, between August 1, 1914, and July 31, 1915. Awards will be made only on reports obtained by sales to retail members of local associations, certified to by local secretary on forms provided. These reports must be in the hands of the committee by August 15, 1915. Prizes will be awarded by dividing total sales by number of members of the local association handling the Pennsylvania Plan products.

More Talk About Retailers' High Fruit Profits. Mercantile Exchange Inquiry Begins to Bear Fruit. Free Flour Storage Cut Down. Foods Wanted For Export. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, November 13, 1914.

A writer in a local paper during the week made an interesting comment on prices at which some of the large local department stores were selling fruit. He reproduced some of the advertised prices on apples, mostly those packed in boxes or baskets, and demonstrated that the department store advertising such prices was making more than 100 per cent. profit. An extract from the article is here reproduced:—

An advertisement placed by one of the larger department stores of New York appeared in a noon extra of an afternoon paper to-day and read as follows:—

HALLOWE'EN APPLES.

| | No. in Box. | Box. |
|----------------------------|---------------|--------|
| Delicious apples | 113 | $3 00 |
| Spitzenberg apples | 113 | 3 00 |
| Winter Banana apples.. | 96 | 3 00 |
| Rome Beauty apples.... | 96 | 2 90 |
| | 5-qt. Basket. | |
| Large King apples..... | | 38c. |
| Fancy Crab apples | | 45c |
| New Pippin apples | | 34c |
| Fancy Greening apples..... | | 34c |

Compared with local jobbing prices for the varieties listed, both in boxes and barrels, this department is making better than 100 per cent. profit. Boxes of the varieties and sizes referred to may be had ad infinitum here at $1.25 to $1.50. for the fun of making out a sale ticket and delivering these apples along with calicoes, ribbons and millinery, the modest fee of 100 per cent. does not shock these merchant princes.

Look at those prices on barreled fruit! Reckon 20 five-quart baskets in a barrel (approximately correct), you can see what the profits are when retailed at 34 to 38 cents for Kings, Pippins and Greenings. Assuming they use strictly "A" grade fruit and pay $3 a barrel and allow 50 cents a barrel to take the fruit to the store and make it up into baskets, it only requires a little mental arithmetic to see how patriotic these department store people really are to put out this fruit and charge a little more than 100 per cent. for their time, trouble and ingenuity.

To my mind, it is perfectly clear that retailers here as well as in all other markets all over the country, ought to be awakened to the fact that they are extorting too much money for their part in purveying apples to the consuming public. A great many fruit stands are charging a nickel a piece for 96s and smaller of Jonathans, Spitz, Delicious, Winter Banana, etc., and many of them have tickets up offering six for a quarter. At $1.50 per box, for which these retailers can buy this fruit on every side, the cost to them is about 1½ cents a piece, and selling for a nickel a piece they make 3½ cents gross profit. Assuming the selling cost is 1 cent each—which it isn't, or shouldn't be—it is evident the fruit stand keeper is pulling down his little 100 per cent., too.

Personally, I have interested four or five of these stand keepers to change their prices and sell sizes 72 and smaller, which they can buy around $1.25, and charge 5 cents a piece, three for 10 cents and eight for a quarter. I believe they find it enables them to sell more fruit, and thus come in line with others in the trade who are looking to increased volume for their profits instead of holding for 100 per cent.

This matter should be taken up all over the country, and where retailers persist in this practice they ought to be reprimanded through the press or by some other effective means.

Retailers generally will be especially interested in that part of the article which criticises them as a class for also getting an excessive price for their apples.

A large retailer with a prosperous fruit department thus expressed himself upon the subject the other day:—

"It is perfectly true that the average retailer who sells fruit, meaning especially perishable fruit, charges what appears on the surface to be a rather large percentage of profit, but I contend that it is no larger than it ought to be for a perishable product. Not only is the loss on all kinds of fruit apt to be rather heavy, but the retailer is obliged to protect himself against this loss beginning with the first sale, for after his entire lot is sold and the loss is ascertained it will be too late.

"When he starts to sell a barrel of apples he must calculate that the loss upon it may be heavy and act accordingly. Not only must he protect himself against the loss, but in most lots of fruit there are grades which the average consumer will not buy readily, and which, therefore, must be sold at considerably below the prices for the best. This also has an effect upon the apples for the best grades in the lot."

The Export Company of America, 60 Broadway, is advertising for goods at once for export, particularly canned beef, dried vegetables, beans, lentils, peas, pea flour, bean flour and fine dried salt in glass jars.

Acting under the recent decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission the railroads have notified the local flour trade that the free storage on flour of ten days, which has been the rule here for a long time, will be reduced to five. Behind this is the suggestion of the Interstate Commerce Commission that one reason why the railroads are in such an unfortunate financial condition is that they have been giving too many gratuitous favors to shippers.

The local trade are advised that the same curtailment in the free storage period has been put into operation in Baltimore, although in that city the original storage period was four days, which is now reduced to two.

More evidence has been taken during the week in the investigation into the methods of the local Mercantile Exchange. Several members of the trade were examined, among them C. H. Vanneman, of T. S. Long & Brother wholesale butter and egg dealers. Mr. Vanneman was formerly presi-

Getting After "Gallon Business."

The inconvenience of shipping and delivering by wagon gallon goods with brine, caused the writer to buy a couple dozen one-gallon oak kegs, with watertight covers.

Instead of filling orders as they came in these were filled with the following goods and placed on display, name and price on each keg—sweet mixed pickles, sweet pickles, cucumbers, sweet melon mangoes, sauer kraut, sweet relish, pickled onions, queen olives, stuffed manzanilla olives, chow chow, sour plain pickles and prepared mustard.

Figure in the cost of your keg, but deduct 15 per cent. a gallon from your pint or retail price.

It's one way of "doing things different." The package appeals to the restaurant and boarding house people and in this case quite a few were sold the first week to families.

Any move you make that increases volume with profit is good.

The more people have in the house the more they eat—especially a luxury. For instance, the whole family, especially the girls, will be dipping into the little keg of olives at all hours so that the gallon wouldn't last much longer than a quart bottle.

Make the Showcase Pay Its Way.

—Four spaces in it divided off with beveled thick glass with the following: walnut meat, salted peanuts, Jordan almonds and Valencia almonds. Four-foot case is long enough.

The after dinner salted peanuts is a splendid seller and a good profit getter at 25 cents a pound.

An article like this is seldom on her list. It's one of the things that must be displayed under her nose.

Still, nuts are merely mentioned because of personal experience with them. A good idea is to fill the case with one thing—shredded (loose) cocoanut, for instance. By doing this you will surely twice double your regular sales.

Food display is certainly a study.

A certain brand corn flakes stuck, and stuck hard, until a package was opened and dumped in a glass jar surrounded with the goods. Cleaned up the whole shipment at the 10-cent price.

Maple Sugar Experience.—"What's wrong with our maple sugar business now-a-days," said the buyer.

Nobody knew—but one.

That "one" stripped two or three of the wrappers off the pound cakes and off she went.

The trouble was that the words "Maple Sugar," beautifully printed in the wrapper, didn't do the trick.

It seemed as though everybody was from Missouri that ate maple sugar.

But they didn't say a word.

And that's how hundreds of sales are lost. People knew of course what was under that wrapper, but the wrapper didn't stimulate anything. It took the real sight of the sugar itself to bring the taste into the mouth and make the teeth water.

Law upon law insists that we either hide things or live in glass houses. One inspector said, "These tomatoes must be taken indoors away from the flies."

When we explained to him that inasmuch tomatoes are raised in a field where no naughty fly ever appears and where no horrid dust blows and no filthy insect ever creeps, we would remove them as directed.

lent of the Mercantile Exchange. He testified about the practices of the organization as to the making and posting of quotations, and in the course of a considerable amount of testimony which did not appear to bear directly upon the question at issue, said that as a wholesaler he figured his net profit on a dozen eggs should be 1½ cents, or 45 cents per case. Other witnesses who testified as to the business methods of the Mercantile Exchange were Fred. C. Trimble, local manager of the egg department of the Fox River Butter Co., and Henry Dunkak, a member of the wholesale butter and egg firm of Zimmer & Dunkak. He also was president of the exchange at one time and had been a member of the various committees. He justified arbitrary quotations of the exchange on butter and eggs by the plea that the members were best qualified to form opinions of market conditions and their judgment would be beneficial to the trade generally.

The Government is not raising any question as to this, but it is contending that the quotations which the exchange did make were not fair reflections of the market.

Swift & Co., which had raised the question of the right of the examiner to require them to bring their books into court, announced during the week that they had decided to allow the examination.

The first real glimpse into the methods of the exchange was given on Thursday when James Pettitt, a local wholesale butter and egg dealer, testified. Mr. Pettitt demonstrated the fact that a member of the exchange who had an axe to grind could either raise or lower the price of butter and eggs by manipulation. As an example, he said that if the given member wished to raise the price all he needed to do was to offer a high price for a larger quantity of eggs than could be obtained in the New York market. He would be perfectly safe in making such a bid because nobody could accept it, while at the same time his excessive quotation would be considered the market, and all sorts of manipulation would be possible upon that as a foundation.

Mr. R. S. French, business manager of the National League of Commission Merchants, with headquarters here, sent a telegram dur-

Partners

ONE of the heaviest advertising campaigns in the world has put "Wrigleys" into the mouths of millions of citizens of the United States—it has joined every retail merchant in the United States to our organization as a partner—it has proven him to be an important half of the partnership. We have endeavored to make this partnership—what every partnership must be to succeed—pleasant and profitable to both sides. We believe we have succeeded.

We have joined the PENNSYLVANIA PLAN because it is a movement on the part of the retail merchant who is already our partner; because we appreciate the important factor which his good will and co-operation have been in our success—because we consider it a privilege to reciprocate and be a partner in his organization.

Our ability and resources are at the service of Pennsylvania merchants and are constantly directed toward securing bigger business and greater profits for us both.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet with little change. Low grades very firm and scarce.—Coffee dull and easier; market very unsatisfactory from holder's standpoint.—Sugar firmer and higher. Raws selling at 4.14 and granulated at 5.10, because of large orders from abroad.—California seedless raisins firmer and more active on account of the entrance into the war of Turkey, the chief source of supply for Sultana raisins. Other dried fruits unchanged. Prunes and apricots slightly firmer on the coast.—Canned goods quiet. Tomatoes firmer.—Wheat fluctuating; slightly firmer as week closes by reason of large export business.—Flour quiet and unchanged.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The Philadelphia Post Office is now at work on the plan to get farmers and consumers to use parcels post. They are now at work on the farmers. It will take about three weeks or so to get all the farmers' lists in and have them compiled, at which time they will begin work on the consumers. They would then make up a little booklet, listing the various commodities, and under each article there will follow the names of the farmers or producers having the product for sale. They do not intend to give any prices. The list is merely to show where the commodities can be bought; it is up to the housewife to get in touch with the parties she selects to find out prices.

The "United Coffee Growers' Corporation of Brazil" has been incorporated under the laws of Delaware during the week with $500,000 capital.

Dry Goods—Notions—Knit Wear

Cottons Still Have Downward Tendency.

Irregularity in prices of cottons is due to the inability to revise colored goods values while there is such a scarcity of dyestuff supplies to contend with. In some low priced staple ginghams reductions are reported, which is also true on a few lines of denims and tickings. The standard lines have not been disturbed. Later advices are to the effect that colored cottons will be revised downward. In fine cottons prices are lower. There has been some call for fancies, which include everything in sight, so to speak. Mercerized yarn sheer fancies appear to be well thought of, and there is also considerable business reported on roving yarn fancies on both crepes and voiles in the primary markets, with retail merchants still holding off. Silk striped poplins and fancy piques are being sold. Most of the new business is on the sheer cloths still, and fabrics of soft finishes are preferred.

The Retailers' Relations With Wholesalers and Manufacturers. Clearing House and Selected Stocks.

Why the jobber is essential as a distributor of merchandise, as considered by members of the affiliated lines of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association, and reflected in essays recently awarded prizes, has led to many pleasant words being expressed about the retail merchant. Bentley P. Neff, Duluth, Minn., who "pulled down" third prize, has also, in addition, a few pertinent things to say about the mail order houses, and why the modern, progressive merchant is holding his own against their increase, as follows:—

The large mail order houses apparently take the position that the retail merchant is not an economic factor in the distributing field; and yet, when we consider the status of the retail merchant in his community, the convenience of his store for local distribution, we commence to realize that and appreciate the comforts and conveniences of living are increased and the identity of the community preserved by the important function performed by the local merchant. Carry out the mail order house idea entirely and you will find a depreciation in the price of farm lands, a decrease in the clearing up of new lands on account of the lack of credit facilities and the inability of the pioneer to pay cash (which the mail order house demands in advance), a lack of home markets for farm products, a tendency to congregate in the cities, thereby increasing a problem which has already become acute. The mail order houses have made wonderful strides, but the retail merchant is more than holding his own, and as he accustoms himself to this new competition and prepares to meet it intelligently, he will not only hold his own, but will largely increase his business, keeping at home a big share of the trade, which now goes to the larger centers.

It is with the retail merchant the same as with the wholesaler, a clear case of the survival of the fittest. The fundamentals of each line of activity are economic, but some of the methods in the past may have been entitled to criticism. There is a re-adjustment period going on, as is natural and proper with the evolution of business under ever changing conditions. The wholesaler is confining his lines to tributary territory and is not attempting to cultivate far away districts, where the expense of operation eats up his profits.

The wholesaler is the outgrowth of modern business conditions. He is the great connecting link between the manufacturer on the one hand and the retailer on the other. He is the convenient depot for both and serves as the clearing house for all. He gathers merchandise from all sources; buys in large quantities and gets goods at a price. He assembles, places his guarantee upon his purchase, sends his salesmen to all tributary towns, looks up the needs of the adjacent communities and distributes his wares on a margin of profit so small as to be the wonder of the investing world.

The wholesaler places at the disposal of the retailer an organization of trained men of splendid ability. This consulting bureau is worth a great deal to the merchant, as it places at his command and within easy reach reliable information on all subjects vital to his business. This information is not confined to the merchandise and of his activities, but he can consult on credits, sales promotion, advertising, commercial law and many other topics of deep and vital interest to him.

The retailer in concentrating his accounts to a few carefully selected houses greatly simplifies his book-keeping. He makes two or three remittances a month against several hundred, if he was buying from manufacturers direct, and from this very condition he has the good will and assistance of his group of houses, who have an object in carrying him in dull periods; whereas, on the other hand, the multiplicity of manufacturers having only a small account each, and not having any particular interest in the account, naturally think their bills should be paid, press the issue, and the aggregate of such claims in times of depreciation makes it embarrassing for the retailer. Again, in placing his business with a local concern, the retail merchant is keeping his money in his own territory, helps build up the section in which he is interested and both directly and indirectly benefits himself.

Wholesaler buyers select only what is adapted to the locality they intend to supply. They may look over a hundred lines and only select one, which, of course, will be the best one for their trade. It can be readily seen what an immense advantage this is to the retail merchant over any purchases he could make direct. To secure equally good results he would have to take his time, which is worth big money to him, and look over hundreds of lines, and then in making his selection use his own individual judgment, educated to his locality alone, against the judgment of perhaps 20 wholesale buyers, who, through their salesmen, are familiar with the needs and demands of not only the district in which this particular retailer may live, but in all tributary territories as well; so that in securing the selections from his wholesaler, he is buying merchandise that is not only adapted to his own locality, but in a position to take care of visiting trade from other communities. This factor alone has saved the merchants of the country thousands of dollars and has enabled them to have just what the people wanted at the proper time.

The wholesaler, through his connections, both foreign and domestic, keeps his pulse on the commercial situation to such good effect that the merchant in Northwestern Montana, 20 miles from the railroad, may have upon his shelves merchandise as authentic in style and correct in construction as the big retailers in the largest metropolitan centers.

Why Merchants Are Backward in Buying Foreign and Domestic Dress Goods.

Strange as it may seem, considering the nearness of the holiday season, domestic dress fabrics continue to be in slow demand. Even the weaves that were considered highly desirable are difficult to obtain a few weeks ago are moving in a spasmodic manner. A prominent wholesaler said to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" the other day, "merchants are not buying as was expected and orders are coming in unusually slow, both direct and through our road men. We cannot wholly account for this; and while the weather has something to do with the backward attitude of retailers, the financial uncertainty must also be considered quite an important factor. Banks are not inclined to be accommodating just at present, and private capital is also over-cautious. We are buying goods right along and paying for them, as we are obliged to, and it would please us to have the merchants loosen up a little with orders."

Other sources of information likewise state unfavorable weather conditions are largely blamed for the lack of interest in suitings; but the past week was seasonable, with no perceptible change in the attitude of retailers either toward suitings or dress fabrics. In the large stores of the cities many merchandise men have forbidden department heads to buy any more goods. A similar state of affairs exists among the cutters-up. Shipments of French dress goods have been lately received in the primary markets, and while ready for immediate shipment to jobbers and retailers, orders are not materializing owing to business conditions generally. Orders are also being solicited by German manufacturers, but buyers are not disposed to operate. German goods are coming via Scandinavia and Holland.

Buying Healthy and Not Speculative

Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say: "The warm weather continues to retard retail business and has its corresponding effect on wholesale business. Merchants are cautious placing of orders for merchandise for spring delivery, which indicates that stocks for next season will be on a very healthy basis and not speculative in any sense. Annual sales in novelty goods and fancy goods, including ribbons, are showing very good volume."

Towelings, Quilts and Spreads Lower.

For spring delivery some grades of Turkish towels are reported to be offering at about as low values as any noted in recent years. In fact, it is the prices named have discounted cotton and possibly a lower price. As to quilts the market is much unsettled. Reports from the West state that the very low prices have been made by jobbers to retailers on goods selling popular figures in order to induce business. Low-grade crochet quilts can be had for quick or late delivery and in some instances at the buyer's own price. More finer than coarser grades are moving out into the trade for retailing. In some parts of the country reports say the wealthy or well-to-do people are buying more carefully than has ever been known. So much so that merchants who handle the best grades are not getting their customary trade in this class of merchandise. The tendency to use finer and lighter bedspreads is growing steadily.

Why Known Brands of Hosiery are Selling.

Here is a funny paragraph from the "Knit Goods Bulletin," the contribution of a supposed expert on "Conditions in the Knitting Trade," as follows:—

Trade-marked goods, it is stated, are feeling the effect of the long slump to a greater degree than lines not branded. The explanation given for this is that manufacturers relying upon the popularity of widely advertised brands adhered to prices, while mills doing a wide-open business on merit rather than mark, cut under and took some new business.

Manufacturers of branded goods that are known to the public as well as the trade, say they have not experienced any diminution in the demand for their goods. In fact, in many instances, the demand from dealers is more insistent than ever. Several mill men whose products have been marketed solely through National and trade paper advertising, and who have recently been in the primary market, declared their plants are engaged on orders so far ahead they will not bother with any export trade, now the sole hope of a bunch of hosiery men, the goods of whom are known as "phan merchandise." Possibly the "green-eyed monster" has had something to do with the above-quoted one-sided statement, to express it mildly.

Status and Current Cost of Knit Goods.

So far of the different lines of knit goods the ones that are definitely opened for future delivery are sweater coats; and many leading makers have not sent their road men to call upon the tailors. From reports turned in it is concluded by the trade at large that the salesmen already out with sweater coats have not yet booked many orders. Buyers, as a rule, are not apparently ready to purchase stocks for next season. No important changes as to prices are expected in sweater coat lines, though it is claimed that goods made almost wholly of woolen yarns will have to be advanced somewhat over last year because of the higher cost of such yarns. Garments made almost wholly of cotton will be slightly cheaper. Styles have not been greatly changed, the trend being toward a fewer variations in collars, the V-neck, according to most reports, returning to larger favor.

Price-Cutting in Underwear Realized. Featuring the Line as Holiday Gifts.

Rumors that a tumble in underwear of all kinds was imminent, though strenuously denied by the "high brows," has materialized nevertheless, according to the "Textile Manufacturers' Journal," which says: "Underwear mills seem to be falling all over each other in a rush to cut prices, despite the two very clear facts that goods will not sell in volume from the mill to-day at any price and that jobbers themselves are opposed to weakness on the primary market. The most radical change has been in balbriggans, particularly of New York State mills, which have cut prices 5 cents per dozen, more or less. The same manufacturers who were represented in a meeting in New York two weeks ago, at which time they strongly expressed their intention of holding prices, are now, practically without exception, all on a lower price basis."

The balbriggan incident is characteristic of the spread of price-cutting in the underwear market. One after another of the mills have cut prices. Since November 1st there have occurred several important changes in the prices of heavy-weight cotton underwear, says the same authority. Southern rib manufacturers are reported to be offering 10-pound garments at $3 and 11-pound at $3.15 for the remainder of this season. No attempt to secure business for next fall is so far recorded. Certain 13-pound fleeces have been reduced to a basis of $3.12½. It is also stated on the market that the reduction in balbriggan prices for next spring is not as general as reported early in the week.

An idea of featuring underwear as a Christmas gift, the same as hosiery, talked of a year ago, is being revived. One drawback is lack of knowledge on the part of the prospective giver of the proper size and the sense of propriety in making such garments a holiday present, especially the female portion. As hosiery is one of the best selling items of a retailer's stock during December, the featuring of underwear in the same line is worth the trial.

New Combination Rubber and Wood Heel.

A new heel, made of rubber and wood—a combination which eliminates all surface nails and permits the fastening on the heel from the inside, is a novelty of a practical kind to be displayed on the new lines for both men and women. In reality it is a rubber heel, as the wood part does not show at any point when it is on the shoe. The heel can be made in any height, from the lowest up to the 16-8. One of its desirable claims is that after a heel is worn down on one side it can be evened up with a knife, as there are no nails to interfere. With a low heel a new one can be put on any time by the wearer of the shoe. There are no nails to scratch a floor, tear a carpet or rugs or work up into the foot.—Retailers say that there has been less trouble with wood heels falling off than with any other kind, which comes from its being attached from the inside, the same as this combination affords.

Filling Shoe Orders in Quick Time. Regular Seasons No Longer Count.

Perhaps merchants in the small towns who also include shoes in their regular stock would be surprised at the many changes constantly going on in that line. Wholesalers in all lines speak of and write with unconcealed admiration of the up-to-dateness of the general merchants and of the kind of goods they are demanding. Not back-number patterns, models or material, but the latest productions in the various lines they handle. As a fact, they are on the "firing line" all the time, so as to compete with the city stores and keep their own trade at home by offering the latest in everything. In shoes this is becoming more and more evident. Manufacturers are affording every convenience and facility for a rapid turn-over in stock. Quick production of shoes is a very important factor in the shoe industry to-day. The manufacturer who can get the new style shoes first in the market is likely to win business, just as the general who gets the most troops on the battle line first is likely to win the battle.

Selecting the Rubbers Stock. Cheap Lines of No Account.

With the approach of winter weather the merchant should look after and stock up on his rubber footwear. Unfortunately, all rubber footwear does not deserve the name. For this reason it behooves the general merchant with a shoe department to take care in buying his stock of rubbers, whether the regular line, sandals or high boots.

There is more downright dishonesty in the marketing of rubber footwear than in any other merchandise that comes into the shoe stock. Many merchants, without knowing it, are cheating their customers by handling goods that are not worth the money. There is no looking at this matter in any other way than the right way. A lot of shoe stuff that looks well is sold with discounts and at extremely low prices.

In rubbers it pays to buy the best. The wear is the acid test which develops all imperfections. The fact that a competitor may be having a seeming good trade on shoddy rubbers—bought at the cheapest possible price and with the largest discount—should not persuade the reliable dealer to switch to an equally disreputable brand. When the wear test is applied customers will fall away, never to return. To meet such competition it would perhaps be advisable to carry some of the cheap merchandise to meet the ideas of those who buy for a price; but it should never be claimed that such goods give satisfaction. In the long run truth will come to and stay with the merchant who gives service.

Satisfaction is not always, in fact, rarely determined by price. Satisfaction is in service. Merchandise plus proper fitting will give satisfaction in rubber footwear. The heels of the shoe must set well into the heel of the rubber. If the heels of the shoe are run over the customer should be told the rubbers cannot give satisfaction as though the heels were straight and in good condition. Manufacturers of rubber footwear vouchsafe so little information in their general or trade advertising—the few who are brave enough to grasp the wisdom of creating a demand for their goods in this manner are ineffective of all methods of merchandising—that neither the retailers or public know anything to speak about quality or desirability of any particular brand. Something may be said from a hygienic standpoint, but little, if anything, about the make-up or construction quality of the merchandise. This may come from the proverbial New England reticence. A little more light would be welcome.

The Kind of Paints That Sell Best.

It must be said that some paint manufacturers devote much time and attention to getting the public familiar with their products. Others little, if anything, their dependence being placed entirely on the intermediate selling agencies. The best-known goods in the line are the most persistently kept before the buying public, and the result is effectively summed up by Adrian D. Joyce, general sales distributor of a widely known company, in an address on "Advertising as an Economizer of Selling Expenses," in part as follows:

It does not take as much time to sell an advertised article as it does an unadvertised article. A salesman traveling without advertising to help him wastes valuable time and much expense and produces only a small volume of sales. Backed by advertising he can double or quadruple his sales volume while his fixed expense remains practically the same.

Advertising developed for us a market for a line of goods for which our salesmen had been unable to find an outlet. It increased sales by leaps and bounds. Hitherto our principal business was in the spring. Now, thanks to advertising, it is all the year round. In time of business depression it is the advertised, trade-marked goods that keep going.

Why a Dealer Should Favor Complete Lines in Shelf Goods.

Last week, in this department, reference was made to the practical remarks of a well-known hardware manufacturer made on the selection of goods; and why cheap goods were not always the profit producers quality merchandise is. It is true a great many merchants, indifferent to the appearance of their hardware department, are firmly convinced the customer is just as well satisfied with a poor article, so the price is low, rather than stock and demonstrate the advantages of higher cost but infinitely better lines. Murray Sargent, of Sargent & Co., goes further in his argument urging the purchase of quality goods, why one grade should be given the preference of others, why certain lines are more satisfactory, the convenience of complete packages and the question of presentable boxes, as follows:—

With many grades of hardware to select from and an equal lot of prices to consider, the dealer will not infrequently find that cheap merchandise may be easily identified. In a line like cupboard turns there is a good example of this. You will find all grades from the clean finished, neat-appearing turn, with a smooth acting bolt, down to the rough looking affair, no two alike, with the hard-working bolt and the jagged sides of the case. If you have not done so, make a point of comparing cupboard turns of different makes and see which you think is the best to buy. Naturally you would not expect to pay the same price for the two extremes, nor would your customers in buying them from you. It is your problem to decide whether you would prefer to pay a little more and push a high-grade article or pay less and push a cheap one.

Your profit in either case would be about the same, as the consumer can tell the difference. If it appears to you as a toss-up, why not favor the line which is most complete? If you can educate your customers to know the product of one manufacturer on a great many lines, it will simplify matters for you. After a time the mention of the name will signify quality to the minds of your customers, as it does to you. This is made the easier if you select a manufacturer who has the reputation of years behind him and an advertising propaganda to assist you in your educational campaign.

If you follow this policy consistently for a period of years you will be surprised how your reputation for high-grade goods will help you in keeping your trade and getting better prices than your competitor down the street who has been blinded by price alone, and who therefore must sell on price alone. Whatever may be your source of supply you can always get what you want if you insist upon it. Specify on your orders the manufacturer's name.

Have you been offered a very low price on a line like sash fasteners, and when you have tried the goods, found that they were not packed with screws? You had, perhaps, always carried another make of these packed with screws, each fastener and strike with the screws that go with it in one paper; the screws further wrapped in a bright colored paper so that they would not be easily lost. On comparison you will find that the cost of the screws represents about the difference in the prices at which you bought the two lines, while a comparison of the goods is decidedly in favor of the fastener with screws.

Aside from this there is the convenience of having the screws right with the goods. Have you ever noticed how much time may be lost looking for screws to match while your customer grows impatient, or while other customers await attention impatiently? Mark up a long credit mark for the manufacturer who has the foresight to assist so much in the marketing of his product. Don't be under the impression that sash fasteners "packed with screws" always means packed each fastener with screws that belong to it. It saves time, which means money for the manufacturer to dump the screws loose in the box, but it costs you more time, which means money, at your end to fish the screws out and perhaps include too many or lose some.

Then there is the question of boxes. You don't want a lot of boxes in your stock with the goods forcing their way through and a temptation to some one to pick up and carry them off to some place where they don't belong. You can't afford to have your stock looking at sixes and sevens. It gives the impression to the prospective purchaser of careless management. Have you ever noticed how readily coat and hat hook boxes seem to break?

These do not run into money fast, so it does not seem worth while to pay 5 per cent. for a poorly packed article. Should not the preference be given to the manufacturer whose boxes seem to stand up the best?

If you know of a concern who makes all the lines mentioned the way you want them, and many, many times more lines the way you want them, why not concentrate on the goods of that manufacturer and build up a reputation that will be of mutual benefit?

Big Jump in Paint Brushes.

Dealers selling paints also handle a stock of brushes and similar goods as allied lines. In fact, a merchant's brush stock is no inconsiderable item in the paint annex, and doubtless by this time he has been made aware of the sharp advance in these goods. An authority on the subject says brush manufacturers have generally advanced the prices of all grades of brushes from 15 to 50 per cent. This is a serious proposition for the paint jobber and dealer and one to which they should all give serious consideration. There is every reason why brush manufacturers should advance their prices. The war came so quickly it did not give them any time to import bristles beyond the general amount which they would require under ordinary circumstances. As the manufacturers depend entirely upon foreign markets for the bristle supply, one will appreciate the justice in advancing prices. For example, long stock, used in kalsomining brushes, has gone up from $3 to $9 a pound.

The great bristle market of the world is Leipsic, and every one knows the situation there, so it is not strange the American brush manufacturer, with his supply of raw material shut off, should advance his prices on the finished goods. Some of the largest and most important brush wholesalers have already advanced their lines from 10 to 15 per cent., while some of them have found it advisable to make a general advance of 15 per cent. Doubtless before another 60 days has passed they will find it necessary to make a further advance. As the brush manufacturers are wholly dependent upon the warring nations for their bristle supply, there is every reason for these advances taking place, and the retailer, unless unusually fortunate in having a good stock—a rare exception—will be obliged to follow the same course.

Paints have in no wise been advanced in price. The manufacturers of ready-to-use goods are always in a position to protect themselves should raw material increase in cost, as it has, by using innocuous substitutes; but in the case of brushes it is a question of raising the price of quality goods or using inferior articles, poor economy at any time. Some of the brush houses have adopted a cutting down policy on orders as a result of the involved and uncertain state of market conditions; while the question of credits with retailers is also a factor in curtailing inclination for too liberal buying cover future contingencies.

New Lawn Mower Catalogues.

Tuesday evening last Walter Graham, president of the Philadelphia Lawn Mower Co., was elected a member of the Union League, of Philadelphia, by the Board of Directors at its final meeting for the fiscal year. Apropos of this, mention may be made of the company's new catalogue just issued to the press, which is a compendium of lawn mower information. It is profusely illustrated, carrying the latest improved and standard models, with adequate description of each pattern, some twenty odd; and the company is justified in referring to their interesting publication as "Forty-sixth catalogue of these celebrated goods, which have become the standard of the world."

The Clipper Lawn Mower Co., Dixon, Ill., in referring to their season catalogue, says: "We have brought out new reel lawn mower with some improvements; and have, we think, overcome about all the objections to the old style mowers. We have also brought out improvement in a side-cut hand pony clipper for cutting alfalfa. So you see the world do move, as the darkness says."

Experience of a General Merchant With Known Merchandise. Percentage of Profit.

In making up a hardware stock a merchant, unless he has years of experience, is often puzzled the lines to buy. Admitting many comparative unknown brands have merit, the retailers will find, as a general proposition, that the merchandise which sells most rapidly is that well known to the general public. Cutlery, saws, edge tools, washing machines, farm and garden implements, hammers and what not—and the list is long—which have been nationally advertised or through trade class and trade papers, will be called first and will move off the shelves and out of the stores quicker than the goods that the dealer may know, but of which the customer be in profound ignorance. A firm of general merchants who have bought out a concern long established but not progressive, after inventory, decided to close out the old stock, largely made up of unknown brands, which were moving slowly. It was found, on investigation, that this class of hardware required too much time, energy, explanation and introducing to make them go. The discarded merchandise was replaced with leading advertised brands and on that foundation the new firm has built its successful business of to-day.

Speaking of the change and its consequences, one of the firm said: "We figured that as a rule people were better informed on the best selling line of hardware, from every point of view than in former days. So much literature or, rather, information, is furnished any one who is at all interested through the magazines and newspapers of every description, that they know what they are talking about when certain article—whether hardware or something else—is asked for in a store. You know, a number of hardware and specialty manufacturers in the line have been acquainting the public with the merits of their goods. We therefore came to the conclusion, following our experience in buying out the property we now own, that it would be excellent judgment to carry known lines. The brands we stock and sell are widely advertised, and the manufacturers give the service and quality to back up the advertising. I could name a list of articles, machines, apparatus, devices, tools of every kind, knives, lawn mowers, general cutlery, etc., with which our customers are familiar and ask for when in need of anything in that special line.

"As I said, we have tried both, but now we carry only the well-known, advertised brands. It is so much easier to sell the latter than the unknown that, to use a trite expression, comparisons are odious. Further, our customers want good machinery, good tools and good things for the home. Newspaper advertising is and has been educating them to buy goods for service rather than for low price. The advertising is a great factor in creating the demand, and we do our share in making good. As I remarked, it is easier to sell a brand a customer knows. You can make more sales in the same time and on the same effort than it is possible on brands they do not know. Many merchants fool themselves on the question of profit. Give me the brand that sells readily and pays a fair profit every time in preference to the goods which have to be introduced and pushed hard to make move, no matter what percentage of profit the unknown brand may pay. Percentage of profit does not mean much if the merchandise is a slow seller."

Government Amends Renovated Butter Regulation.

The United States Department of Agriculture has amended Regulation 21, governing the labeling of renovated butter, to read as follows:—

All coverings or wrappers of prints, bricks or rolls of renovated butter, whether paper or cloth, must have the words "Renovated Butter" in one or two lines, marked, branded, stenciled or printed thereon in black or nearly black upon white or light ground, in full-faced gothic letters not less than three-eighths of an inch square, so placed as to be the only marking upon one side or surface of the parcel so packed.

All packages of renovated butter shall have the weight of the contents thereof plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed under the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week, except that low grades are somewhat firmer, though not quotably higher. Scarcity, aggravated by heavy demand from abroad, is responsible. There is practically nothing in Congous under 13½ cents in a large way available now, and even to come forward, a month or six weeks in the future, these teas are quoted at 12½ cents, which is 1½ cents above the opening. Other grades are unchanged and quiet, the market being fairly steady.

Coffee.

The coffee market shows no improvement for the week. All grades of Rio and Santos, with the exception of the finer roasting grades of the latter, are low and easy. Mild coffees are unchanged and quiet, Bogotas being comparatively firmer than the others. Java and Mocha unchanged and dull.

Sugar.

Sugar is somewhat firmer for the week. Raws have advanced about ½ cent, and granulated is up 10 points, to 5.10 cents, which is 20 points above the lowest price reached last week. Large sales of refined sugar to go to France are mostly responsible for the advance, and the reopening of the Federal Refinery also had something to do with it. Refined sugar ought not at the moment to go higher, as there is a generous margin between raw and refined, even at the advanced price of raws. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is selling fairly well at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup dull and unchanged, the better grades comparatively high. Molasses quiet and unchanged.

Fish.

There has been no change in mackerel during the week. The Norway mackerel situation is still unsettled and uncertain because of the factors which have been mentioned from week to week. Irish and other mackerel quiet and unchanged. Cod, hake and haddock steady and in fair demand. Salmon shows no change and comparatively light demand. Domestic sardines are unchanged, steady and quiet. Imported sardines unchanged from a week ago.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are about 2½ cents higher, and 67½ cents in a large way, f. o. b. factory, is the best that can be done now for Maryland 3s. The cause of the advance appears to be that the holders of the cheap tomatoes are all sold out and for the present all other holders appear to be able to hold. The demand for tomatoes at the moment is light. Corn and peas are dull; the market on corn is steady to firm, but on peas is in buyer's favor. Apples are still very cheap and the market is dull, as buyers are afraid of it. California canned goods unchanged and dull. Small Eastern staple canned goods ditto, except spinach, which is weak.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are gradually weakening. The lowest basis price which has been heard on new fruit is 4½ cents in a large way, f. o. b. This is a decline of 1½ cents from the highest. The demand for prunes is light. Peaches and apricots are unchanged and dull. Raisins quiet at the moment and unchanged in price. Currants are now ruling about normal, with no change for the week. The entering of Turkey into the war is expected to affect the supply of dates and figs, but no radical change has occurred as yet.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are about 5 to 7½ cents per bushel cheaper, while marrows are about 15 cents per bushel higher. The two have not traveled together for a long time. The market has a steady undertone on both grades, with a fair demand. California limas are coming East by water and are being quoted as low as 5½ cents in a large way. By rail shipment the best price is about 5.95 cents. Green and Scotch peas are firm and show an advance, green being quoted at $2.30 in a large way and Scotch at $2.50. The demand is light.

Butter.

The butter market is active and firm at an advance of 1 cent per pound. Stocks are lighter everywhere than usual, and there is a good consumptive demand. The market is healthy and no radical change seems in sight.

Eggs.

Fresh eggs are very scarce and the market is up 2 to 3 cents per dozen. No relief as to supplies is looked for for sometime. Storage eggs are steady and in ample supply at unchanged prices.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady, with a better consumptive demand, and with prices about unchanged. Stocks are about normal for the season and there is no reason to expect any material change.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged, with a fair consumptive demand. Pure lard is firm at an advance of ½ cent per pound, owing to the foot and mouth disease quarantine. Compound lard is steady, unchanged and in light demand. Family pork is scarce and $1 per barrel higher, dried beef and canned meats are unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

The pressure on the part of the small country banks to compel sales of tomatoes, mentioned in our previous letters, has ceased, and their loans to the nearby canners have been paid in full, or nearly so. The heaviest payments fell due around November 1st, and that period was safely passed by those canners who "bend the pregnant hinges of the knee" through necessity, not from choice. The money market is decidedly more favorable in this section, and the outlook for business is encouraging.

In the face of a dull market, the prices of canned tomatoes advanced 2½ cents per dozen at the country factories, and 5 cents per dozen at the Baltimore city canneries, with less inclination on the part of the canners to part with their holdings until the market prices reach the cost of canning, at least. Orders received from Western and Southwestern jobbers show that this market continues to be the cheapest source of supply for tomatoes, and an increase in the demand from that direction would be considered a forerunner of a general demand for the goods. There is much talk about the possibility of a large demand from abroad in the near future, based upon inquiries about tomatoes by responsible houses in the export trade. Regardless of any export business, the goods are a safe purchase at to-day's prices.

There was no increase this week in the buying of other canned vegetables. No one article was active enough to be designated a leader during the week, and the price fluctuations were nil. String beans and sweet potatoes were a little bit more active than the other vegetables, but there was no snap nor ginger to the market. The prices continue firm because the stocks held by the canners in this market are much smaller than they usually are at this time in the season. When the buying of vegetables is resumed on a normal basis there will be some higher prices registered.

The same character of buying, though on a smaller scale, prevailed during the week in canned fruits of all kinds. Pears, pie peaches, seconds peaches and blackberries were in demand in a small way, but the remainder of the fruits were neglected. There were no fluctuations during the week in the market prices and they ended where they started the week.

On November 1st the fall canning season for cove oysters, under the Maryland laws, opened up with some of the best stocks in many years, and the Baltimore canners will be at work full blast on them during November and December, or as long as they can get the raw stock at reasonable cost.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Our correspondents in Holland report that the situation on Holland herrings has improved somewhat during the last week, as there have been some arrivals, and some shipments to the United States. We expect a shipment by steamer arriving next week. The total catch to the date of the report of our friends in Holland show arrivals of 339,054 barrels in 1914, against 568,197 barrels at the same period last season. This is an enormous shrinkage, and naturally accounts for the higher prices prevailing this season against last, and owing to the scarcity of Holland herrings, Scotch herrings have been selling better, and Norway herrings continue in good demand at slightly advancing prices.

Our Irish agent reports shipments of 959 barrels of Irish mackerel during last week. This brings total shipments of 1913 Irish autumn mackerel to 29,389 barrels, and shipments of 1914 Irish autumn mackerel to 2,498 barrels.

Mackerel of all kinds is somewhat neglected. This refers to both Irish and Norway. Only a hand-to-mouth business seems to be had.

Business in sardines is fair only, and really nothing to brag about. Sprats are getting scarce. Our people in France write that as long as the war lasts their supply of sprats, and they also write that as long as the war lasts there will be no possibility of packing any sprats for the United States. Besides, there is no catch of sprats at the present time, and is not likely to be until the beginning of next year. From Belgium, of course, no sprats can be had. Stocks here are almost exhausted. Consequently the little that is held in first hands is held at high figures.

There were reports published of the closing of the North Sea by the English to even neutral navigation, but so far we have heard nothing from our friends in the north of Europe confirming this report; in fact, we are advised of further shipments, so it seems that our people in Norway, Denmark and elsewhere are still able to ship, although it is very likely that all ships will have to pass through the strait, and there be subject to the examination by the English patrolling vessels. In our opinion there is no reason to fear that further shipments from the north of Europe may not be forthcoming.

Spices.

The market is more active, with good demand from grinders and higher prices in foreign markets. Prices here are generally firmer and we have experienced some advances. The market has a very firm undertone, due more or less to decreasing supplies.

Red Peppers.—In better demand, and higher prices. Still further advances are expected over the winter months.

Cloves.—Steady and in better consuming demand. Higher prices are now being quoted in London, where stocks as well as here, are small.

Nutmegs.—In better inquiry. Stocks continue small and prices generally firm for all grades.

Sell Magazines.

With the December number of the magazines and periodicals many new serials begin, and many people will start to buy them at this time.

The sale of one copy means a regular customer, one who can be induced to buy other goods, thus supplementing the profit on the magazines by the profit on regular goods.

Start that department to-day by writing to the American News Co., of New York City, for their price list and particulars.—Advt.

J. A. FLESCH & SON, 115 Adams Street, CHICAGO, ILL., General Agents for United States

Leading a House to Water: But—

He! He! He!

I ain't such a mutt as some people think.

Last week I had to make a part of my trip in company with a specialty salesman. He was a new man to me—I never saw him before. My house made some kind of a deal with his house to introduce a new line, and they were to send a man around with me to work up orders for the new goods out of my customers. I was to introduce him to everybody and then fall back and see him sweep in the business.

I was some sore on the scheme at first. I'm held responsible for the business I get and I didn't want any stranger pushing in and mussing it all up. But I said I'd do it on one condition. He wasn't to open his mouth until I had got through with the trade. After I had my order cinched he was to go as far as he liked.

They sent this fellow out from New York. As I've told you before I don't look like I came from New York. I don't even look as if I'd ever heard of it. So I suppose he sized me up as a common country salesman, which between you and me, is what I am, and he laid out to show me.

We started around last Wednesday morning and he got an order from the first man he tackled. I could see after that he thought he had 'em going, and he began to swell up and talk patronizing to me.

While we were eating some lunch at noon he started in.

"If you'll pardon me, old man," he said, "I don't believe you're quite aggressive enough in your methods. That fellow Jones I'm sure would have given you twice the order he did if you had gone at him a little harder. You saw how easy he fell for me, didn't you?"

He had, there's no doubt about that. Jones hadn't wanted the goods, but this lord of all salesman just rode all over him—wouldn't let him talk. As soon as he started to tell why he didn't want 'em that little tin god would butt in and interrupt, and pretty soon Jones signed the order.

Then he did something else that my young friend—he wasn't much more than half as old as I am—didn't see. Jonesy winked at me.

Did I know what that wink meant? Answer, yep, I did.

So I grinned in my corn beef and cabbage when the young fellow mentioned about Jones.

Well, on paper when that day was over he had made a big killing. He had copped orders from about 75 per cent. of all the people we had called on. A great day's work, believe me—on paper.

You've heard that old saying that a specialty order in the store is worth a dozen on paper, ain't you? That's a pretty wise old saying.

He had to leave town that night on the 9.45, and I had to stay over. We had supper together and he was so swelled up he could hardly sit in his chair. All through supper and up to 9.45 he talked steady about what a big salesman he was, what a bunch of big jobs he could get, how all the big people had their eyes on him, and how you had to be aggressive—that word again—no days when you started out to sell goods.

I remember one thing he said. "You have to be better than the other fellow," he said, "and you have to show him right at the start you're better."

Another thing he said was that he thought I had the makings of a good salesman if I'd only be a little more "aggressive." (!!!)

"You let 'em master you to-day," he said. "I don't know whether you caught on all right, but I had a method all through what I did to-day. I wanted to impress all those fellows with the idea that here is a big New York salesman such as you don't often see calling on small stores. He's done me an honor to come down here and explain these goods and he knows what he's talking about. Did you see through the scheme at all?"

We Expect More Contestants in the Ivins' Purity-Guarantee Contest Than Ever Before

¶ That purity guarantee of J. S. Ivins' Son, Inc., is such a splendid theme for a six-inch advertisement to consumers that we expect it to interest a very large number of contestants. We reproduce it again:—

We guarantee that our products are not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Pennsylvania Food Laws approved May 13, 1909, or the Act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale or transportation of adulterated, misbranded, poisonous or deleterious foods, etc."

Although the above laws permit the use of the following materials under certain conditions, we, in addition, further guarantee our products to be free of lard-compound, cotton-seed oil, adulterated chocolate, imitation honey, desiccated or frozen eggs, preservatives, benzoate of soda, alum, artificial colors, or any harmful or unwholesome ingredient.

We use selected candled shell eggs only.

J. S. IVINS' SON, INC.

¶ For the best six-inch advertisement of this guarantee, addressed to consumers, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will pay $20; for the second best $10, and for the third best $5. We don't care a rap about literary polish—we want advertisements that would make consumers want Ivins' products.

ing some more. I got half a notion to do the thing. I dunno—I'm still thinking it over. If I come in to see you some time and call you the first crack out of the box, I know I've decided to do it.

he shook hands with me when he got out of his train and said:—

didn't hear another thing about him and his orders until I got back on my own last Saturday. The first thing when I went into the office of the firm said:—

Say what's the matter with your orders down there, anyway? You're all cancelling those orders for the new line. What were they for?"

I sat down on the nearest chair and bleated until the boss got sore and the stenographer got anxious. Didn't—didn't you hold any of them?" I said, between fits.

Three or four," he said, "out of twenty-five or thirty. What is so funny about it?"

Well, when I could I told him the whole tale and he began to see the error too.

Oh, I hope I see that big New York salesman again some time.

I hope I do! I'd be willing to wait four trains to see him.

Attorney-General Peterson accepted the request, backed up, it is stated, by a showing of alleged irregularities. The Attorney-General was acting on behalf of the State Board of Health, which appointed Wallis. Readers of this paper will remember that recently Wallis prosecuted the Calumet Baking Powder Co. for the alleged illegal use of egg albumen. It developed at the trial that he had allowed himself to be misled by the Jacques Mfg. Co. and its counsel.

CCLXXXV.—When an Order Given to a Salesman is Binding on Both Parties, and When it is Merely an Offer, Binding on Neither.

Rather singularly, I have three inquiries this week from readers of these articles in widely separated sections of the country, all of which ask for a solution of the same problem. Since it is of general trade interest, both to manufacturers who sell, and to jobbers and retailers who buy, I shall devote this article to it, and the correspondents in question (they are in Pennsylvania, Kentucky and Michigan) will please consider this an answer to their letters.

From the three inquiries I have stated the following composite question, which contains everything raised in all the letters:—

A salesman calls upon us for an order, and, we will assume, gets one from some member of our concern who has authority to give orders. As we understand it, this becomes from that moment a contract binding upon us. In other words, the firm to whom the order is given can make us take the goods. But when does the order become a contract binding upon the other party—when the salesman accepts it or when it is sent in to his house and accepted there? Suppose the latter is the case, but we are never given any notice of its acceptance, have we a right to consider it a contract, and if so when?

The answer to this question depends upon several considerations, most important among them being (1) what does the contract say, if it is a written contract; (2) what is the authority of the salesman to accept orders; and (3) what has the particular firm been accustomed to do in the past; in other words, what has been its "course of dealing"?

With many firms employing salesmen, the latter have authority merely to accept orders tentatively and to submit them to the house. They represent nothing more than the messengers between the buyer and the seller. This lack of authority is usually communicated by a clause in the order form, which reads something like this:—

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The salesman or representative of this house to which this order is given has no authority to accept it, and does not accept it except for forwarding to the undersigned. All orders must be accepted by the undersigned and notice of acceptance or rejection will be mailed to the customer within a reasonable time after the receipt of the order.

JOHN JONES & Co.

The buyer who signs an order blank with this in it is bound by it whether he reads it or not, and he can never hold a firm responsible on an order of this sort unless he has received their notice of acceptance. It would save a lot of lawsuits if everybody employing salesmen would do this, for it would make the transaction absolutely definite, instead of indefinite, as transactions are now when they depend on the exact moment when they became a contract.

The buyer who signs an order like the above is in the position of a man who has merely made an offer, which may be accepted or not. If the firm accept it, it is a contract and he can hold them responsible. If it is rejected, he has no redress, and if he never receives any answer at all, he has nothing he can go on.

But many firms employing salesmen are not willing to do this, because they want to bind the buyer right away while the salesman is in his store. Where the order is not binding on the seller until accepted by him, it is likewise not binding on the buyer until it is accepted, and he can cancel it up to that time with perfect freedom. One of my correspondents is wrong when he assumes that the minute he gives an order to a salesman it becomes a contract binding upon him whether it is on the other man or not. That is not the case and under the law of contract it can never be the case. Both parties must be bound or neither is bound.

Now let us suppose a case where the contract says nothing about the salesman's authority to accept contracts. In all cases like that it is difficult to know the status of the order. Questions as to its status usually arise on an advancing market. A salesman will get an order, for instance, on January 2d, when the market for the product purchased was 5 cents per pound. The salesman mailed his order on the night of the second, and possibly it did not reach his house until the fourth; certainly not before some time on the third. After the order was given, but before it actually reached the house, the market advanced to a point where the house could not accept it at 5 cents. The house declines to fill the order, and the buyer must go out in the market and buy goods to take the place of those ordered, at a considerably higher price.

Now that house may have had a legal right to refuse that order, and it may not have had. If it had no right to refuse it, the buyer can hold it responsible for his loss. If it had a right to refuse, he is without redress.

Its right to refuse of course depends on whether the salesman had authority to accept orders, not for forwarding only, but to accept them then and there. If he had, no matter whether the authority was express or implied, the order became a contract when he got it, and the house cannot refuse to fill it. How can it be told whether the salesman had authority or not? If there is nothing in writing, it can usually be told only by considering what the salesman has been in the habit of doing. If he has always apparently accepted orders, and if the goods have always been shipped, then the law would say that the buyer has a right to assume that the salesman had authority and the house was bound. If on the other hand anything had happened in the dealings to show that the house did not mean to give the salesman authority, a different situation would be presented. I mean, for example, if the house had rejected any orders a buyer had previously given the salesman, and he (the buyer) had accepted the rejection, the law would say that the buyer had been made to clearly understand that orders were not binding unless confirmed by the house. In such a case the house would not be bound.

Question: J. W. Shipley, Macon, Ga.—Some time ago I ordered a barrel of paint from the Continental Paint Co. There was forty gallons of paint in the barrel. When it came to the freight station I got notice to come after the paint. I also got a letter from the paint company with the bill for $37.75 for sixty-eight gallons in the barrel. I, as you will see, ordered 40 gallons and the bill was to be $22.00. I notified the paint company, also the railroad company, that it was wrong and I would not accept it. I have my clerk as a witness as to what was said. They wrote me to take the paint and the forty gallons and hold the balance for further orders from them. I did not want to be bothered with the extra paint, which I did not want, by getting someone to haul back to the station and sending it back again, or to be bothered with it at all as I only had use for forty gallons. They have put it in the lawyer's hands. I have had the lawyer's letter from him. I answered the first letter and explained all to him. He still writes to me and threatens me with a suit if I don't pay. I have not answered any more of his letters and don't intend to. What is your opinion on this?

Answer.—If you ordered a barrel of paint, to consist of forty gallons, neither the Continental Paint Company nor anyone else can force you to take sixty-eight gallons. Nor can they force you to accept a contract for sixty-eight gallons, and subject yourself to the inconvenience of storing or returning the balance. My advice is to send their lawyer a flat refusal to do anything about it.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"When you buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR you can be sure that it is clean and dry, not lumpy and dirty; we would rather sell it to you than sugar we have to buy in a barrel, because we are sure it will give you better satisfaction."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

spond to a toast. This organization is exceedingly active.

Mr. Smedley, by invitation, addressed the Lancaster Chamber of Commerce at a luncheon given at the Stevens House on November 5th. The attendance was good and the guests included the business men in the town. Addresses were made by a number of the members and a motion was carried that the directors be urged to affiliate with the State association. Merchants of Lancaster have it in their power to make a powerful organization.

The Chambersburg association, which has been inactive for some time past, has decided to resume business on an active basis and at a meeting held on November 6th it was decided to go forward. The organizer was present and was warmly received. After Mr. Smedley's address committees were appointed to solicit the membership of every merchant.

Mr. I. G. Baird, secretary of the Waynesboro association, made a splendid talk at the Chambersburg meeting. Mr. Baird is bending effort toward making the Waynesboro association a big power; he has about completed arrangements to hold a "Home Trading Week."

The St. Clair association expects to be one hundred per cent. organized in a short time. Secretary Bausum is a hard worker and he intends getting a good award under the Pennsylvania Plan. Plans are being made for an Old Home Week to be held early in 1915.

Mr. Smedley will spend November 16th and 17th at Bradford; November 18th he will address a mass meeting of Pittsburg grocers; November 19th Latrobe; November 20th at Rochester.

This week Mr. Smedley visited the associations at Carbondale, Scranton and Tunkhannock.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find one of the many circulars I distribute. This one in particular brought the best results of any I have circulated. Will ask you to kindly make any criticism you would suggest as to this ad.

Thanking you in advance, I am,
LOUIS B. GOLDSTEIN.

Mr. Goldstein is using large circulars—12 x 18 inches, which I always advise is probably too large for a circular. If you are issuing a store paper and want to fill a page, it is of course a different proposition. For a circular I believe it pays best to stick to a smaller sheet. Here is the much reduced reproduction:

I should expect to get results from this circular, for the prices appear to be low. It is well printed, though the paper is poorer than it ought to be. It isn't even a good grade of newspaper. I should nudge my printer up on this, if I were Mr. Goldstein—he certainly ought to give him a better grade of stock, although it may be that Mr. Goldstein—advertisers do this sometimes—insists on his printer giving him his lowest possible price. As I have frequently explained, the users of printed material seldom save any money in this way, for the printer simply cuts down the quality of his paper when he has to cut his price. In printed matter you usually get just about what you pay for.

The chance is that Mr. Goldstein would have gotten as much and perhaps more results from a circular this size if he had arranged store plays of the articles he would have off the smaller circular, and put only choicest offerings in the advertisement. I say he might even have gotten because some people will read a advertisement that won't even begin a large one. This is not theory; actual fact. They say, "Oh, I wade through all that," and they undertake it. Mr. Goldstein will probably find it an interesting experiment issue smaller circulars and watch results. If he gets only as much as got from the large circular, then he saved a considerable part of the cost of his advertising. If he gets more and I repeat, this is by no means possible—then he has not only saved the cost of his printing, but has made it more productive.

I should make one rule for myself. I were Mr. Goldstein: I should have nothing in my advertising that I did not have room to root for. At least one word or two. He has found something to say about many of the articles advertised here, but with a lot of them has merely mentioned the name and price. This is all right if it happens to be a well-known brand of something offered at an obviously low price, with "new dried peaches," or "bottled vanilla or lemon," it is different.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Trying to Make the Physician a Friend of Coffee

Cincinnati Coffee Man Presents Plan to National Coffee Roasters' Association in New Orleans. Physicians Should be Kept in Touch with All Modern Coffee Developments.

At last week's convention of the National Coffee Roasters' Association in New Orleans, Charles Lewis, president of the James Heekin Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, presented a paper with a novel theme, viz., the need of educating the physician about the good points of coffee so he will favor it as a beverage instead of condemning it to his patients, as many physicians do now. Mr. Lewis has sent a copy of his address to this paper and some extracts from it are here presented:—

The thought comes to me that we have heretofore rather shirked our duty towards the important profession of medicine, which influences and even controls very largely, the dietary habits of the world. Certainly some of the members of this most valuable profession have given the enemies of coffee an advantage by their antagonistic attitudes towards the world's beverage; and these enemies have made use of this in a very broad way by advertisements in our daily papers, magazines, billboards and other means of publicity, all of which has without question worked an injustice on coffee.

The ablest physicians—the top notchers in their profession—when questioned, invariably place coffee where it belongs—in the category of auxiliary foods, valuable for its stimulating effects. We have no defense to make when approaching the big men of the medical world, for they agree that coffee taken in the pure state in proper amounts is stimulating and most healthful for the individual, and they all use it upon their own family tables.

We should lose no opportunity in getting before the physician full information as to the great care we take in the preparation of our various proprietary brands of coffee.

The physician has had no reason to investigate and learn that for the past 20 years the coffee roasting fraternity has been steadily raising the standard of cup quality of coffee. It is only a few years since the most popular of all coffees consumed in our country was that coffee which comes from the port of Rio Janeiro, known as Rio coffee. To such an extent have we pursued the policy of producing the best quality for the price, that Rio coffee to-day, notwithstanding the extremely low price at which it can be bought, is used only in a limited way.

Unbiased physicians and chemical scientists agree that coffee taken in its natural state is not unhealthful, but beneficial, and that it does to a degree preserve the tissues and satisfy the longing for a stimulant without causing a collapse; that the only objection that has ever been made to the stimulating quality of caffeine is that form which has been extracted in a chemical way. I have never found one to state that caffeine as nature distributed it in coffee when taken in moderation as a food is harmful, but on the other hand, they declare it is actually beneficial to the human family.

I do not undertake in this paper to suggest anything to the physician that I know nothing about, nor do I desire to intrude on his professional field. I understand neither medicine nor chemical science. But I earnestly desire that this association should get before the physician the actual work that we are doing to raise the standard of coffee, not only coffee itself, but the methods for making the infusion. It is our part, duty and privilege to bring these facts before the physicians of the country, and when it has been explained to them and they understand the work that we are doing, I believe they will indorse coffee as the most valuable stimulant and food drink that the human family is heir to. This will assist us materially in setting aside false impressions in regard to coffee.

We must give the physician the facts as we have found them in our experience covering a period of many years in handling the product.

We want them to know that no two seasons bring forth the same drinking value in coffee, and that no matter of what growth the coffee is, there are so many grades that it is impossible to distinguish the cup value of the various coffees by location, sight or district; but it must be done by testing each individual coffee with which we come into contact. The physician is not interested in the appearance of the coffee; neither does he care in what country it grew. What he is interested in is the particular cup of coffee he is drinking, and which his patients are using. Is it good? Is it pure? Is it healthful? Does it contain the proper amount of essential oils above mentioned?

We all agree that roasting coffees is an operation of the greatest nicety; that by excessive roasting the aroma of the coffee, being volatile, is soon lost; by under roasting the flavor is not developed, and the coffee has a raw, thin taste. The physician should know that we roast the coffee just right to conserve the greatest amount of caffeine and aromatic oil, and that we take great care in the handling of the coffee after it is roasted, for we realize that it quickly absorbs any foreign flavor with which it may come into contact, and in this way the natural flavor of the coffee is often interfered with, if not lost.

We must take up this subject with physicians and inform them as a unit that we know by experience that the more finely coffee is ground the more thoroughly are the cells opened; that coarsely ground coffee is coffee thrown away; that with pulverized coffee the fully released caffeine and aromatic oils are quickly soluble when totally submerged in and intimately mixed with boiling hot water. He will also be interested in the fact that there have been wonderful improvements made in the machinery for grinding coffee, that the members of our association have spent large sums in perfecting the grinding of coffee, and in ascertaining the degrees of fineness to be used with the different methods for making the infusion.

Now that we know most positively and without question that from pulverized or finely ground coffee results can be obtained that it is impossible to produce with any other degree of granulation, we should impart this information to our co-laborers, the physicians.

Physicians should be informed that needlessly poor coffee is very commonly prepared by people unacquainted with its nature as a decoction, for by them it is boiled for some time under the mistaken notion that the strength is not extracted unless it is boiled, when the fact is just the reverse. The fine aromatic oil (the flavor) is dispelled by boiling. A large percentage of coffee consumers, especially in the country, retain often times the old grounds from one meal to another, adding at each meal a little fresh coffee. Some persons even soak the coffee in the evening in cold water, so as to have it ready for the morning meal. Neither of these processes is correct.

We should get right down to the basic principles to solve the problem, which is: To bring boiling hot water and finely ground or pulverized coffee into intimate contact, in other words, to totally submerge the finely ground or pulverized coffee in boiling hot water, to get the soluble matter out of the coffee, and then to separate the liquid from the grounds in the most simple, quick and economical manner, so as to obtain all the natural aroma and basic principles from the coffee. It should be drunk as soon after the infusion is made as possible.

When the physician has all this information I am sure that those who now think differently will have a greater respect for coffee.

Which is Right, the Jobber or the Specialty House?

Both Sides of a Debate That Went on in Philadelphia Within the Week. A Jobber After Accepting Orders, Filled Them too Slowly to Suit the Specialty House. The Latter's Charge and the Jobbers' Answer.

Much has been said against the jobber for his alleged neglect of specialty orders. Not against all jobbers, but probably against the majority. Very few jobbers, apparently, handle specialty orders to suit the specialty man.

During the last week a local jobber has become engaged in a controversy with a specialty house. The latter sent salesmen through the jobber's territory and picked up quite a number of orders to be filled through this particular jobber. They were accepted by the jobber, that is, most of them were, but were filled but very slowly. Thereupon the controversy arose. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has gotten the two sides of this argument and here presents them as typical, perhaps, of the controversy which is being constantly waged between specialty manufacturers and wholesale grocers. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" does not express any opinion as to where justice lies in the argument, but merely reproduces the argument itself:—

THE SPECIALTY HOUSE TO THE JOBBER.

We obtained from your customers, at our expense, orders for over 60 gross of our goods. When all the bad orders were eliminated, you still had orders for 60 gross on file.

These you accepted and promised to ship promptly.

You had only bought 40 gross of goods with which to fill orders for 60 gross. After a considerable time we called on you and found that you had not even shipped the 40 gross, but that you still had 25 gross on hand. In other words, you had filled about one-quarter of the orders you accepted, and the balance were growing stale and being lost. This is distinctly unfair to us. You were not obliged to accept the orders, but having accepted them you ought to ship them.

FROM THE JOBBER TO THE SPECIALTY HOUSE.

All the above is true, except the intimation that I am neglecting the orders. I am not neglecting them. All of these orders are small, involving but a small sum of money and a small profit to me. If I shipped them separately and alone without waiting for other goods to go with them, I would make no money on them whatever, because the cost of packing and shipping would more than eat it up. In other words, there is very little money in these orders for me unless I can slip them in other goods as they go out. That is what I am doing. As fast as I receive orders for other goods from the customers who gave these orders, I ship your goods with them. Perhaps by the time I get around to the last one, the customer will have changed his mind and the order will be lost. I can't help that, for I can't be expected to handle this business except in some way that will pay me.

I gave your Mr. Wagner check to cover our six stores to-day for one year. We find your paper very helpful and instructive.—Huey Mathews, Pittsburg, Pa.

Give Your Jobber a Square Deal and Other People Will Give You One

Little talks between wholesalers and retailers on the ethics of fair business—what is square and what is tricky?—Doing unto the jobber as you would have him and other people do unto you.

No. 10

When a jobber allows you one per cent. discount in ten days, he pays you more for your early payment than you can get the money for to make it with. Any retailer with good credit can borrow money from his local bank on terms which will enable him to turn discounting into a steady source of increased revenue.

The minute you become a regular discounter of your bills, you become a better buyer and a closer buyer. You have done the always difficult thing of reducing the high cost of doing business without decreasing efficiency.

American Specialty Manufacturers Begin Annual Convention in Philadelphia

Begin Three Days' Session on Thursday at Bellevue-Stratford. Session Mostly Devoted to Addresses. Move for Uniformity of State Food Laws. Guests of Local Manufacturers' Representatives at Banquet Thursday Evening. Summary of Friday's and Saturday's Proceedings.

The American Specialty Manufacturers' Association opened its sixth annual convention at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, last Thursday, November 19th, and continued Friday and Saturday. The association instead of having its own banquet as usual, accepted the invitation of the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives to be present at its banquet, which was held at the Bellevue-Stratford on Thursday evening.

Owing to the second and third days' sessions being held on Friday and Saturday, it has not been possible to present fully in this issue more than the 1st day's proceedings.

The convention was called to order by Mr. Louis Runkel, president. An impressive invocation was delivered by the Rev. W. H. Roberts, D. D., L. L. D., calling upon God to bless the work of the association in its efforts to promote purity in every connection of the manufacturing business.

Mr. Cattell, City Statistician, represented Mayor Blankenburg with greetings of welcome from the city of Philadelphia. Mr. W. W. Frazier, Jr., of the Franklin Sugar Refining Co., was unable to be present so Mr. E. A. Zellers of that company responded to Mr. Cattell on behalf of the association.

President Louis Runkel's address called attention to the new constitution and by-laws and urged members to become familiar with them for the purpose of enlarging the association's value and field of activities. He referred briefly to the progress made in the formation of trade sections; to the auxiliaries' work of securing the membership of manufacturers not doing a national business who can nevertheless be benefited by affiliation; to the abuse of cash discounts; to the work of the Legislative Committee, assisted by the association's counsel, in distributing valuable information to keep members advised of laws affecting their business. He summed the value of the association as "minimizing expense of doing business by the elimination of trade abuses, insuring the greatest degree of confidence in all the various channels through which our products are distributed whenever and wherever the stamp of the association is found in connection with business transactions."

The following firms answered to the roll call:—

Alart & Maguire, Atmore & Son, B. T. Babbitt, Beech-Nut Packing Co., Bloch Brothers Tobacco Co., Calumet Baking Co., Cleveland Macaroni Co., Diamond Crystal Salt Co., Dunham Mfg. Co., Fels & Co., Foulds Milling Co., Franco-American Food Co., Franklin Sugar Refining Co., Genesee Pure Food Co., H. E. Hall, Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co., Lautz Bros. Co., Libby, McNeil & Libby, W. M. Lowney Co., W. M. McCormick, Merrell-Soule Co., Minute Tapioca Co., C. F. Mueller Co., Pacific Coast Condensed Milk Co., Pennsylvania Salt Mfg. Co., Purity Oats Co., Runkel Bros., Shredded Wheat Co., Swift & Co., P. C. Tomson Co., Towle Maple Products Co., United Cereal Mills, U. S. Tobacco Co., Martin Wagner Co., Welch Grape Juice Co., Wheatena Co., Whipple Co-operative Co.

Reading of the minutes was dispensed with.

Report of Board of Directors read by secretary covered the securing of the association's counsel, C. W. Dunn, for six months at $300 per month, the matter of taking up with the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, the sending out of discount notices similar to those sent out by the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, the formation of committees to consider the welfare of each particular line in co-operation with officers and counsel.

Report of treasurer:—

|-------------------------------------|-------------|
| Balance in bank Nov. 20, 1912 | $2,238 36 |
| Total receipts | 14,922 60 |
| | <hr/> |
| Disbursements | $17,160 96 |
| Balance Nov. 8, 1914.. | $1,428 94 |

The report of the secretary spoke of the bulletins sent to members during the year and of the complaints reaching the office of the association against jobbers and retailers not following good business ethics, which matters the secretary endeavored to correct. Mr. Thunhorst expressed thanks for the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association's co-operation in the matter of cash discount business.

Hon. James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, spoke in part as follows:—

The responsibility of the food manufacturer is as large as his power of service to the people. Under the law he is free to make any food he can, only so that it is wholesome and is sold for what it is and in the amount declared. He has also the greatest opportunity to act as the adulterator, and he knows best what the label must contain to be true. But all know that an honest brand doesn't insure an honest sale and that, if the manufacturer himself is deceived in his raw materials, his wares may suffer without bad intent on his part.

The commissioner has, it is true, the first responsibility for interpreting the law. If its wording leaves a doubt, he can give either the public or the vendor the benefit of that doubt. But even in such case, where the meaning is brought into question in its bearing upon a matter of importance, his duty is to give that benefit to the public. Otherwise, with laws and the organization of the public business as they now stand, the people's side cannot get before the court.

I have spoken of the manufacturer and of the commissioner. It is high time to say something directly about the relation. Will you pardon me if I put the commissioner's business in homely words? It is his privilege to encourage the food manufacturers and dealers to behave, and within the limits of his authority, to help them behave; but it is his duty to see whether or not they are behaving, and if he finds some are not, to take these to the courts for judgment and the application of the remedies prescribed.

This matter of behaving or not behaving is very largely a question

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

A Basket Potatoes Out of Place—Was It?—Odd places for things have been written about many times in "Straight Talks to Clerks," showing the effect such departures make on the mind of the customer. But a recent experience of what looked like carelessness goes to show that by doing a thing contrary to sense and good order real good may follow.

Several half-bushel baskets potatoes were on display, but she insisted on the clerk selecting "that particular one."

For some unaccountable reason he placed it on the counter, and in doing so was called to the phone. While talking there a second customer came up to the counter and ran into the basket of potatoes, of course. Could she have "one just like it." She certainly could. Another old lady came up and remarked about the fine looking potatoes and she ordered a basket. In came a man, coffee customer, and he commenced handling the potatoes and wanted "one just like it" sent home.

Well, the play kept up all the afternoon, but in the meantime the manager said, "Leave that basket potatoes right there." It was funny, because alongside of the basket appeared a show of dates, figs, jams, mince meat, etc.

Everybody was struck with the incongruity of the thing, yet this very incongruous situation sold that afternoon and evening up till 6 o'clock no less than nineteen baskets potatoes that positively would not have been sold (aside from the original one) except for the oddity of location.

Now, what is the lesson that this teaches? It shows us a vulnerable part of human nature and that all can reach that part and play to it successfully.

To do this we are at times to get away from set rules. Not always such extremes as the potato stunt, which was purely accidental. Your first-class highly trained, one-idea manager would have had the insulting thing removed immediately.

But the man who ignored training and was many-sided, along with a humorous side—sold the potatoes.

You will sometimes hear about young men having "initiative"; that means doing things different, taking short cuts to accomplish the same or better results. Often discarding the old methods entirely and still arriving at the right point more quickly, more effectually than by the old way. The reason we don't make ourselves more valuable is the reason that we lack initiative and the reason we lack initiative is because we're too mentally lazy to think.

There isn't a part of the store or the storehouse or cellar that you can't improve if you put your thinking cap on. There isn't probably any part of your order system that hasn't a weak spot that will reveal itself to you by constant, earnest thought.

Thinking will make a man of you.

of fact, sometimes of many facts. The commissioner's door ought to be wide open to the manufacturers who come with facts; in view, however, of his public responsibility, he should not be thought impolite if he keeps the door wide open while they are with him. It is hard enough to be always fair; it is even harder to seem always fair.

There is one point in your "objects of organizations" upon which I will venture to touch; that is, uniformity of food laws. Uniformity is certainly desirable; efficiency is even more desirable. If you mean secure somehow the best law possible and bring the laws of the other States or of the United States up to that, that is one thing. If you mean secure uniformity everywhere, and then oppose improvement anywhere unless it can be had everywhere at the same time, that is a very different thing. Even if you and I came to full agreement upon what law would be desirable, the probability that all the State and National legislators would agree with us is very distant.

The co-operation of the honest and enlightened manufacturers and dealers and of the public press with the food commissioner has driven most of the grosser forms of adulteration from our foods. Their sanitary production and handling is fast coming to be regarded as even more important. While the laws committed to me for enforcement contain little that is specific upon food sanitation, I desire to use this opportunity to express my sense of its very high importance.

Mr. A. M. Alexander, chairman of the Publicity Committee, touched upon the regular matter distributed on the use and abuse of cash discounts; the effort to have the stamp of the association in use on letter heads and order blanks as standing for a square deal; the new booklet containing by-laws, etc.; the work of securing circulation statements from trade papers.

Mr. A. C. Monagle stated that the Legislative Committee were having printed a bulletin giving a summary of the legislation of the past year affecting members, which would be distributed as soon as off the press.

Mr. Runkel appointed at this time Committee on Nominations: W. H. Lipe, Canajoharie; C. L. Raynor, Boston; Mr. MacDougall, Chicago; S. W. Eckman, New York; C. F. Mueller, Jersey City; and Committee on Resolutions: W. B. Cherry, Syracuse; C. T. Lee, Battle Creek; Fred. Mason, Niagara Falls; George Nowland, Philadelphia; J. A. Bloch, Wheeling.

Mr. A. J. Porter, president of Shredded Wheat Co., said on "Factory Sanitation and Welfare" that these things pay; first, because they are right and "right is might"; because of the establishment of a cleaner and more moral atmosphere which makes positions in such factories something desirable; because it helps to uplift the work of the whole industrial army throughout the country; the vocational training we give our employees enables them to earn their living in more than one way; produces a much larger output and of a higher grade; wherever these things are found, the public does its buying; finally, corporate usefulness is just as important as that of the individual.

Mr. Lipe, of Canajoharie, told of the work of his company along welfare lines, dwelling on the enjoyment and satisfaction of the firms practicing this good work and stating that the more given the greater the returns in loyalty of employees, and greater efficiency, and the advertising value of such a reputation.

A letter was read from Mr. G. E. Lichty, Waterloo, Iowa, former president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, regretting inability to be present, extending wishes, etc.

After recess Fred. R. Drake spoke of a few evils that the jobber would like the manufacturer to correct: First, the taking of orders for broken packages or parts of cases, making it necessary for the jobber to repack at a cost of 7½ to 10 per cent. extra; second, the question of terms. Jobbers' terms vary in different sections of the country and we would appreciate your informing your salesmen to refrain from stating any terms whatever.

Mr. Drake then devoted some time to discussing the desirability of a universal system of weights and measures, advocating the metric system, which is used by practically every country but Great Britain and her colonies and the United States. He suggested that manufacturers print on their labels along with the English weight the metric equivalent, in order to familiarize the public with this system and also for the promotion of business from other countries on a time-saving and more satisfactory basis. Mr. Drake contrasted the simplicity of the metric system with the confusion of the English tables of weights, measures, etc.

Mr. Runkel referred Mr. Drake's suggestion to the incoming Board of Directors.

Dr. Carl L. Alsberg was not present but sent word that he would

The Cox Gelatine Co. ask their customers to co-operate with them in aiding the

RED  CROSS

THROUGHOUT the civilized world people are pouring out money, labor, personal sacrifices, and even their lives, in the cause of the Red Cross. The work is non-partisan, non-sectarian, absolutely neutral, and merits the hearty support of every American. In order that we may make a substantial contribution to the Red Cross, and give every American woman an opportunity to share in the gift, we are advertising in the leading women's magazines the following offer:

Cut out the yellow label

Every yellow label appearing on the front of a package of Cox's Gelatine will be redeemed if presented before February 1, 1915, for 1 cent in cash, to be paid to the Red Cross. All labels are to be sent to the headquarters of the National Housewives' League in New York, who will send them to us each week and receive our check in return, payable to the Red Cross.

Grocers can help by passing the word to their customers. With proper co-operation a fund of several thousand dollars will be realized.

Poultry Market Not Affected by Foot and Mouth Disease

Agricultural Department Says Any Advance in Poultry Prices Does Not Come From That. Breaking up Bad Egg Traffic. Potato Quarantine in New York State.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
November 20, 1914.

The rise in price of poultry of all kinds which is reported to have taken place in various States cannot, in the opinion of experts in the United States Department of Agriculture, be in any way attributed to the outbreak of the foot and mouth disease. This disease does not affect poultry at all, and the Federal quarantines of various States—14 in all—now lay no embargo upon shipments of poultry. For instance, Rhode Island can still send out her Thanksgiving turkeys, although no cattle, sheep or swine can leave her territory.

It is true that when a case of foot and mouth disease is found upon a farm that farm is absolutely quarantined by the State or local authorities. No produce of any sort can leave it, the owner is not even permitted to drive his horses on the public highway, and in some cases his children are not allowed to go to school until the exposed stock have been done away with and the entire premises thoroughly disinfected. Since the disease, moreover, is readily communicated from farm to farm by cats, dogs, poultry and human beings, the local authorities exercise their own discretion in determining what restrictions should be placed upon shipments of produce from the area in the immediate vicinity of the infected farm. These areas are so limited in extent, however, that the amount of poultry that may thus be prevented from reaching the Thanksgiving market is an inappreciable percentage of the total supply. Poultry from the uninfected areas in the various quarantined States can be moved freely without the least danger of spreading the disease or of injuring the health of the consumer.

Federal, State and city authorities are now actively co-operating in Illinois to put an end to the illegal traffic in rotten eggs. From evidence already gathered, there seems to be a definite market in Chicago for "rots and spots" at $2 a case of 30 dozen. In consequence rots and spots from all over the surrounding country have been coming into Chicago in large numbers. In the past the delay necessary to secure authorization from Washington to make the seizures under the Federal Food and Drugs Act has proved a serious handicap in breaking up the traffic. With the co-operation of the State authorities, however, this delay is now largely obviated. Under the detention section of the State law governing this matter, State inspectors are able to hold suspicious shipments for examination and further investigation. In this way not only are seizures made possible, but the necessary steps toward criminal prosecution are also facilitated. One of the firms in Chicago handling these bad eggs has already been tried by a State court and found guilty. Shipments of bad eggs are also being reported to the authorities in Chicago by Federal, State and city inspectors in other States in order that these eggs may be traced to their ultimate destination.

Although there is a certain demand for inedible eggs for technical purposes, such as tanning leather, most of the rots and spots that reach Chicago are first broken and frozen and then sold to bakers for use in cakes and other forms of food. In one instance, at least, a shipment of these eggs was traced to a firm which admitted that they had no use for them except in food. As a matter of fact, Federal inspectors have been able to secure ample evidence of the use of unfit eggs for this purpose. Now, with the State and Federal authorities working together, it is believed the traffic can be broken up very rapidly.

Another important result of the work in Chicago it is hoped will be to persuade other cities and States of the necessity of assisting the Federal Government in destroying the traffic in bad eggs. That this can be done has already been demonstrated in Trenton, N. J., where eleven indictments have been found on the charge of conspiracy in connection with this business. All of the indicted men are now awaiting trial. Such criminal prosecutions it is believed will do far more to put an end to the traffic than any number of seizures or fines. The profit in the business is so great when conducted on an extensive scale that the dealer can well afford an occasional fine. His rots and spots cost him so little that when his goods are seized the loss is insignificant, and in many cases he has no reputation at all to suffer from the consequent exposure.

The Department of Agriculture has quarantined the counties of Clinton and Franklin in New York State on account of the existence of powdery scab among potatoes there. This action was taken after a public hearing on the matter held November 13th and becomes effective on November 16th.

Technically the department has quarantined the whole State, but through the co-operation of the local authorities in quarantining the two infected counties, it will be possible for the Federal Government to remove all restrictions upon the movement of both table and seed stock from the area outside of these two counties. The provisions of the quarantine are in general identical with those in force in Maine. Potatoes intended for seed must be grown in soil that is uninfected, and must have been stored away from all diseased stock, and must be found upon inspection by Federal authorities to be absolutely free from any traces of powdery scab. They are then tagged and can be moved in interstate commerce. Table stock can be shipped out as long as no actually diseased potatoes are found in the lot.

Another Good Scheme "Busted"

"Linwood Haines, Ltd.," Mail Order Scheme Which Started in New Jersey Several Months Ago, and Which This Paper Predicted Would Not Succeed, Has Receiver Appointed After Its Stockholders Are Told Its Affairs Are Hopelessly Entangled. Sold $148,953 Worth of Stock.

Several months ago a new mail-order scheme bobbed up in Camden, N. J., which called itself the "Linwood Haines Co., Ltd." It had a lot of glittering schemes and ideas and promised consumers that it would soon have the middleman well eliminated. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" investigated the concern, published the result of its investigations and predicted that the scheme would not succeed. Last Thursday a receiver was appointed for it and its affairs prove to be so tangled that probably nobody can unravel them. The company has been doing some business, advertising chiefly in country weeklies, but to some extent in dailies also.

The "Linwood Haines Co., Ltd.," succeeded in selling its stock to about 1,500 consumers, not one of whom will get a dollar back. From this number $148,935 was collected in hard cash, the promoter Linwood Haines not having put up a solitary cent.

We reproduce here part of a newspaper account of the creditors meeting in Camden on Wednesday. It very clearly shows how the concern has been run and in many respects is typical of many such investment concerns, not only those whose stock is offered to consumers, but those whose stock is held by merchants:—

Three hundred of the 1,500 stockholders of the Linwood Haines Co., Ltd., which does a mail order business in Camden, held a meeting yesterday in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A., Camden, to discuss the company's financial condition. The stockholders were principally from the rural section of South Jersey. The meeting was called to order by Linwood Haines, Jr., the president of the concern, who stated that he was prompted to summon the stockholders by reason of the action of a meeting held by other stockholders recently at the Ridgeway Hotel, Camden, when they employed an expert accountant to go over the books. The accountant's report is in the hands of United States District Attorney J. Warren Davis, who represents many of the shareholders.

Mr. Haines read a voluminous statement, the substance of which was that the company was in need of "fuel" or cash, because of pressing liabilities, the war and business enemies, such as bankers, trade journals and retail dealers who, he said, are opposed to the mail order business. He said that no little of the trouble was due to a lack of co-operation of the stockholders. He added that in three years $125,000 worth of stock was sold at a cost of $30,000 in commissions and that $25,000 had been spent advertising, and he declared that some quick action was advisable.

Haines then presented a plan which proposed that each of the 1,500 stockholders obtain five customers, each to purchase $25 worth of merchandise every three months. This would net them at least $60,000. He also planned that the present stockholders agree to pay at once for $100 worth of merchandise, to be delivered at some future time. This would give the concern a new start.

Cards were distributed among the stockholders to sign the agreement to purchase the $100 worth of goods. Only four agreed to such a plan.

Attorney J. Warren Davis asked Mr. Haines if he could not furnish a financial statement as to the exact condition of the company. Mr. Haines replied that the books of the secretary and treasurer were open, and added that he was not an expert accountant.

"Then you, as the largest stockholder, have not made any effort to have a financial report made so that you might inform the stockholders of the true condition of affairs?" asked Mr. Davis.

"No," replied Mr. Haines.

"Is it not true," continued Mr. Davis, "that your secretary has gone out of this jurisdiction?"

"It is not true," said Mr. Haines. "I do not know where he is. He has gone away before and he always came back and I reasonably think he will return."

"Isn't it a fact that you have at all times had absolute control of the company?"

"I have," answered Mr. Haines.

"It is also a fact that you have never invested a single penny of your own money in the concern?"

"That is a fact," admitted Mr. Haines.

"You created your own Board of Directors for the Linwood Haines, Ltd., Co. by placing the department heads on the board and you fixed their salaries and they fixed you?"

Mr. Haines admitted that such was the case.

Following the examination of Mr. Haines, Attorney J. Mercer Davis, brother of J. Warren Davis, read the report of the expert accountant engaged by some of the stockholders, who at the outset said that the company's capital, $1,500,000, was excessive, that there was no plant, machinery or buildings owned by the company and that $148,935 worth of stock had been issued. The report concluded by showing net assets of $35,369.25 and liabilities of $28,867.01, and Haines put the good will at $500,000.

After the report was read there was considerable wrangling by the stockholders, which resulted in the appointment of a committee of eight to employ another accountant to go over the books.

The company was originally incorporated under the laws of New Jersey about three years ago, and was reincorporated during the summer of this year under the laws of Delaware, with a capital stock of $1,500,000.

Don't Let Your Tea Trade Go to Peddlers

The taste for tea is acquired—not natural. Once acquired, it stays.

Every live dealer can, by little effort, educate his trade to a particular quality or flavor of tea and, by selling TETLEY'S TEA, he is sure of uniform quality and flavor the year around. This will insure the return of customers again and again for that particular tea, and keep his business steadily progressive.

No premiums, no china, nothing but the finest selection of India and Ceylon tea, carefully blended to a permanently uniform quality and packed in attractive air-tight tins—

The United States Government has brought a new and enormously effective weapon

A New Food Law Weapon.

into the fight against food adulteration, which still persists in spite of many laws and eternal vigilance on the part of those enforcing them. It is an old act of the United States, not often used, providing very heavy penalties for conspiring to violate any law of the United States. Naturally it can only be invoked where two or more persons are concerned. But where conspiracy can be proven a fine much heavier than can usually be imposed under the Federal food act is possible. Witness the recent cases against the New York coffee misbranders, who were fined $3,000 each and deprived of their citizenship. Such a punishment has never been imposed under the Federal food law and could not be imposed.

The writer's view is that very many cases which have been brought under the Federal food act could have been brought under the conspiracy act if the Government had wished to so bring them. It will probably wish to do so whenever possible from now on, as the much larger penalties naturally act as a stronger deterrent than the foolish $5 and $10 fines which have been imposed by the hundreds under the Federal food act.

Tomatoes have just proved again, although they did not need to, that they are the most unreliable commodity on the face of the earth, that he who speculates in them is merely guessing with nothing to go by, and that they can stay under water, i. e., sell below cost of production, longer and live, than anything else on the market.

Readers of this paper have been kept in touch with the recent sharp fluctuations in canned tomatoes. The market got down to 62½ cents, which all agree was fully 7½ cents below the actual cost of putting them in cans. One large packer, when the market reached 72½ cents, bought 15,000 cases. He was perfectly warranted in believing that as tomatoes were already down to about cost of production, they were a safe purchase. That is, he would have been warranted if it had been anything but tomatoes. With tomatoes, he was hardly warranted in believing anything not actually in evidence. His loss on the purchase amounts to $3,000.

If we were in the grocery business we should buy tomatoes as we needed them, and pay the price. We say for probably the twentieth time that if the most ardent believer in buying tomatoes ahead were to figure up his losses and gains for ten years, he would probably find himself behind.

A report which an American Consul has just made to the State Department on A Useful War Lesson.

"First Effects of War in Argentina," demonstrates two interesting things: First, how dependent even the most advanced and enterprising country is on other countries, and second, what a splendid field exists for American products in South America.

From the report referred to we take the following:—

To date the European war has had a very detrimental effect upon Argentina financially and commercially. The scarcity of coal has compelled a reduction of practically 40 per cent. in all railroad service. The exportation of coal has been prohibited by the Government. Steamers are allowed to load only enough to carry them to the next port. The advance in the price of coal to 60 shillings ($14.58) and upwards has raised all freight rates approximately 200 per cent. The further increase in the insurance rates on all British ships has made prohibitive the cost of shipping Argentine products, such as corn, hides, wool, tallow and skins.

Nearly all the meat plants have closed and have discharged their men, retaining only that small portion of the force needed in the work of supplying the local demand for meat. The directors of some of these plants have stated that their plants will probably remain closed until shipping conditions are more nearly normal.

Thirty thousand men are out of work in the city of Buenos Aires alone. Food prices in the city have risen almost 100 per cent. in most lines. Meat has advanced in price over 60 per cent. City authorities have been endeavoring to control the price of bread, and a law has been proposed to prohibit the exportation of the relatively small surplus of wheat (230,000 tons) in order to keep down the cost of flour and bread.

Among the items affected by the war are women's spring wear, hats, etc. It is stated that most of the orders placed in Europe for these goods were to have been shipped this month and that the war has made impossible the filling of the greater part of these orders.

Shortages in different commodities are occurring and will occur with increasing frequency from now on. A market to which during the coming year some $100,000,000 worth of goods must come from sources other than those formerly drawn on is well worth the investigation of any manufacturer who is in a position to do export trade. The present crisis presents an unparalleled opening for the American manufacturer in Argentina and indeed throughout South America.

Bear in mind that the Argentine Republic is not a colony of any of the warring countries; it is an independent nation. Yet its business is crippled, its food advanced one hundred per cent., and 30,000 of its workers are idle in one city alone.

We have all been too dependent on other countries. The war will teach us a useful lesson in this respect.

We wonder whether the big express companies aren't just about doomed. If the parcels post continues to cut into their business the way it has done during the past year every big express company in the United States will be dead by the end of next year. The operating income of the eleven large express companies for the last year before parcels post was passed was $4,413,000. The income of the same companies during 1914 under parcels post was $404,000, a loss of about nine-tenths of the entire income in one year. One company, the United States, has already gone out of business, and it is hard to see how the others can hold up much longer.

Would anybody miss the express companies? We think not. Parcel post either is or could be made a perfect substitute for them, and the user will know that he is being treated fairly and isn't being grafted upon. As a matter of fact there never was any real room for the express companies as express companies. The railroads could have done everything that the express companies did, just as well and for less money. The express concerns merely pushed themselves in between the railroads and the public, and created out of a shoestring a business that came to yield a bigger return on the investment than the Standard Oil Co. For a long time these companies have practically no investment. They performed a service with other people's equipment. And as they grew they grew more and more arrogant, and more and more indifferent to the rights of their customers. So much so that the investigation before the Interstate Commerce Commission showed that the Adams alone had—we think—nearly $30,000 on hand, all accumulated by charging for shipments at both ends!

But the express company of today is a vastly different company from the old express company. Today it fawns upon the public and makes itself conspicuous in the public interest, as in its scheme to put producer and consumer together. But these courtesies come too late. Express companies are facing extermination, and almost everybody will be glad to see them go. We can get everything we need from parcels post, and get it honestly and right.

AMONG THE TRADE.

A. C. Sapper, who has for a long time acted as salesman for H. Kellogg & Sons, died last week.

The Interstate Commerce Commission's ruling that on all railroads and warehouses effective November 15th only two days will be allowed for free removal of freight from point of unloading, affects sugar shipments as well as all other freight.

Milton Orme, recently a partner in Sutton & Vansant, wholesale coffee dealers, has associated himself with the green coffee department of the Lowry Coffee Co. Mr. Sinnickson, formerly salesman for Sutton & Vansant, has gone with Thomas Roberts & Co.

Charles Strickler, the importer of delicatessen specialties at Second and Callowhill streets, Philadelphia, died at his home on Thursday last. He has been ill for several months.

A Personal Experience With a Cut Price

The American Fair Trade League, an organization of the manufacturers of proprietary brands, has been working on consumers for several months now, in a masterly effort to persuade them to boycott the dealer who cuts prices on proprietary brands like the Wm. L. Rogers Watch or Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes. The sermon preached in many forms to the consumer is that the price-cutter is unreliable, that he has no regard for the higher standards of business, that he is violating the rights of the manufacturer and of other dealers, and only uses the cut price anyway to get the consumer in where he can sell her something else, probably at an exorbitant figure.

Though thoroughly in sympathy with the fundamental idea, I have never ceased contending that the work which the A. F. T. League is doing with consumers is being and will always be wasted, because the consumer is selfish—in a sense justifiably so—and cares naught for the higher standards of business and what not, so long as he can buy for 80 cents an article which he knows sells usually for a dollar.

A personal experience with a cut price:—

Last week I had occasion to buy an automobile horn. Probably the best is the Klaxon, which is one of the most conspicuous trade-marked products on the market. The Klaxon people have their customers tied up as fast as they can tie them to retail the horn for the uniform price of $10. I knew that some dealers sold for less.

Into one large and well-known retail store I went to ask their price for the Klaxon horn. Ten dollars. But some people sell for less. Yes, but we won't. Why? Because we buy direct from the manufacturer and he makes us promise not to. But the other people? They don't buy direct—they buy from jobbers and are not tied up.

This argument did not seem compelling, and I did not buy, but went to another dealer inquiring for the price of the Klaxon horn. Eight dollars. Same horn, same guarantee—same everything except the price. I saved $2 by buying at the second place.

Now what possible argument could either the manufacturer of the Klaxon horn, or the dealer whose price was $10, give me as to why I should waste that $2? They could probably fill me full of arguments that from the standpoint of pure logic would sound well and hold water. But would they work on me to such an extent that I would deliberately throw that $2 away? I am afraid not. I am afraid that that $2 would weigh more with me than almost anything the manufacturer and the $10 dealer could say, because I would see in their arguments an effort to benefit themselves at my expense. Of course the advocates of limited prices say a cut price hurts the consumer too, just as much as it hurts the manufacturer and the trade, and sometimes there is something in that. But it would take some hypnotist to convince me that in that Klaxon transaction any hurt came to me. I saved $2; that fact would stare me in the face the whole time the debaters were talking.

I admit I am quite selfish about it. So I believe are consumers generally. That is exactly the point. They see what looks to them like a clean cut saving, and that is all they see. It is like moving mountains to convince them—to convince me, in this case—that I really did not save anything in the Klaxon transaction, but merely sowed the seed for greater losses later. Most consumers would say what I say—that for an obvious, tangible saving of $2 to-day I am willing to take my chances as to the greater losses later.

This is not an argument for price-cutting. It is merely an effort to demonstrate what I have often tried to demonstrate before—that the most ingenious and plausible argument possible to frame is probably impotent before human selfishness.

Dear Sir:—I thank you for your prompt remittance of the $20 prize for my advertisement relating to Moxley's Oleomargarine, and of course feel encouraged to try again.

that particular word does not attract the housewife; and, in fact, she is not apt to read any further. But when she sees that a saving of 36 cents per week has been made by another woman, she is going to see why "this is thus." Maybe I am wrong, but I think not.

The United Grocery Co. recently had some advertising in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World." It is a corporation of large capital which is exploiting a co-operative buying enterprise on a large scale.

What Do You Think of This Idea?

Cresco, Pa., November 14, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Though eminent retail merchants of this State have become interested individually in the laudable work of relieving destitution amongst the Belgians, I have not noticed any efforts being made by trade organizations. It seems to me there must be a great number of retail grocers and general merchants like the writer who would be glad to join in a movement to furnish a shipload of provisions made up from the stocks of the retail grocers of the State, or if this would seem too large a task, then to co-operate with associations in New York and New Jersey and send a solid carload of groceries and provisions.

I believe you are in a position to properly represent the retail grocers of the State. If you think well of the proposition and will open your columns to subscriptions, I will be glad to contribute. I believe this method very much better than asking for cash contributions, for the reason that the dealers already own the goods and from their stock would send a few cases of several kinds of vegetables, for instance, without drawing heavily on their stock.

I am not giving this for publication, though if you desire to use it I have no objections.

Yours truly,

J. A. SEGUINE.

We publish this to see what response it gets. This paper would be extremely glad to act as receiving bureau if there is a demand that it should. We will see what grows out of the publication of Mr. Seguire's letter.

An Itinerant Ink Scheme.

Adamstown, Pa., Nov. 16, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Do you know the Penn Ink Mfg. Co., your city? They had a representative call on us demonstrating their product, which you could not, according to their way, destroy the writing with their ink by the use of acids as other brands. They claimed all banks and business houses use it. I doubted and didn't buy any and concluded to ask you.

The company referred to is not listed in the telephone directories of Philadelphia.

Wm. H. Hoskins Co., 904 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, have a guaranteed ink like the above description at 25 cents a quart. It was reduced from 55 to 25 cents because there was little demand for it.

To Make a Retail Coffee Department Pay Better.

Danielsville, Pa., Nov. 16, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—When we first got the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" the writer glanced over it and after that I had an idea that I had no time to read same, and that was the last of it, although you quoted some very good prices, but did not look good to us because we did not read it.

I spoke with a certain man the other day and we discussed the matter how to gain a good coffee trade and at the same time have a good margin of profit. I suggested to buy coffee bulk and put it up in some attractive package. He advised me to get the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" and you would help us out on those questions if we would put them up to you.

Please quote us your best price of your "Modern Merchant and Grocery World"; also advise us where to buy attractive coffee packages and how to handle coffee, and oblige,

Yours truly,

AMERICAN SPECIALTY MANUFACTURERS BEGIN ANNUAL CONVENTION IN PHILADELPHIA

speaking Saturday morning, if the would not be too late.

Hon. John Barrett was not able to be present and sent Mr. William A. Reid, of the editorial staff of the Pan-American Union, to cover the subject assigned to him, "South America."

Mr. Reid illustrated his remarks with a map of South America, telling how much railroads, wire lines and the Panama Canal had opened up the way to wonderful prospects of mutual business between North America and South, stating that Bolivia, which produces large quantities of tin, and Brazil, rubber, Ecuador, nuts, formerly shipped to Europe, where these products were distributed, some of them finally getting into the United States, which now may be directly shipped to the United States via Panama Canal. The South American formerly was hostile to the North American owing to the class of men who went down there to do business, but now we have better officials and better men of business and that attitude is changing. South America has 1,500 miles where there is no rain, the earth being practically nitrate; here there is a great market for our food products. A ready flour goes from California and even redwood ties are cheaper from California than to get them out of the jungles of South America, where railroads have not yet penetrated. There are few factories even in Argentine. There are 120 articles manufactured in Peru but they are in most cases so crude that the imported article is preferred.

Mr. S. W. Eckman was called on to speak further on the above subject, having traveled in South America to some extent.

Mr. Eckman stated that there was a large field to be cultivated by specialty manufacturers which must be gone after in an intelligent way, and not as he had found one manufacturer doing who had as sole representative in South America a second-class drug store. He said further that it was necessary for the manufacturer to investigate whether there was a market for his product by applying to the Pan-American Union for information of its character. He does not believe in a number of manufacturers together paying the expenses of one inexperienced man to go down there and investigate conditions. They themselves can find out practically everything they need to know from the extensive literature of the Pan-American Union.

Some one asked about the financial status of South American business. Mr. Reid read a telegram from one of the Ministers from Argentina: "There is at present no congestion of merchandise in our bounds. Wheat and flour not exported at present because of the embargo on these products. Canned meat and wool are exported without difficulty * * * Ships could be sent down with products we need and returned with our products. These advantages must be seized by the North American, that is, he must take the initiative, and cash payment must not be required. In Europe some of the houses have been giving credit for a year and exacting 8 per cent. interest on these accounts. The financial is one of the important questions. We believe the entrance in the market of the National City Bank of New York having branch offices in Buenos Ayres and Rio is going to do a work which we are watching with great interest."

Mr. Eckman's opinion is that

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"KINGSFORD'S CORN STARCH will enable you to add many dainty and nutritious dishes to your menu. Let me put a package in your order to-day."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

European houses have not allowed any more than 30 days' time as a general rule and it ought not be necessary for the United States to make special arrangements. The South American can borrow the money from the central bank in the regular way.

Here Charles W. Dunn, Esq., counsel of the association, spoke on uniform food laws. He thought a literally uniform law was not possible in forty-eight States. He thought States should have uniform departments to enforce food laws instead of having it done in one State by a Dairy and Food Department, in another by the Department of Agriculture and in another by the Department of Health.

Mr. C. T. Lee, sales manager Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co., on "Introducing Grocery Specialties," said that the first thing was to have a real grocery specialty to introduce because ordinary staples will not respond to specialty methods, regardless of whether they be dressed with fancy names and attractive packages. A grocery specialty to be a success must possess the very highest qualities or some unusual and unique value and attractiveness to the consumer. Otherwise a selling and advertising scheme will not and cannot make it successful. When you have a good specialty join the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, and then engage an efficient corps of salesmen, wise sales and advertising managers and a large bank account. To be entirely successful your plan must be broad enough to cover every section of the country without modification. The size of the package and price must be handy and convenient, the label must comply with the National, State and foreign food laws. Price-lists should be in convenient form for the jobber's and his salesmen's use, and a thousand and one other things must be done to make the work simple and forceful.

One of the most important parts of your work will be the selection and management of the men selling your goods to the merchant and consumer. When a manufacturer engages a sales corps he undertakes to make men as well as specialties. He assumes a responsibility far more important and serious than he sometimes realizes. Being his representatives, what they say and do will be looked upon as identical with their firm. They must be men of high moral character with a temperament susceptible to training and guidance. The day is past when a salesman may put down in his expense account "bus hire" when he means "cigars," etc. Further he must have one price to every merchant. Special propositions tend to weaken his confidence in his regular propositions, and it will only be a short time before he is finding excuses for offering to every merchant concessions in order to make sales.

Then we must not forget that there must be a time for relaxation and pleasure. I am greatly pleased with the idea of having Fourth of July week as a National holiday week and strongly recommend this idea to manufacturers, believing that the men will be better for a mid-summer recess.

Mr. Moore, Diamond Crystal Salt Co., spoke along the same lines as Mr. Lee, decrying the granting of concessions by salesmen to merchants.

Mr. Eckman asked Mr. Lee if the week in July was to be given in addition to the two weeks around Christmas, and Mr. Lee said it was.

Mr. McCormick, through illness, was unable to deliver his scheduled address. Mr. R. H. Bond, of the McCormick Co., represented him, reading Mr. McCormick's paper. It was upon the subject of uniformity of State food laws. The paper showed the additional expense of doing business when it was necessary to have several kinds of labels for one product which was to be distributed in different States. Further, the manufacturer cannot know where his product is finally going and often in placing a label upon it in conformity to the State where he sends it first, does not meet the conditions of the State where it finally lands.

The various food and drug laws at the present time make it necessary for the manufacturer to watch his printer to see that the labels are not mixed; he must have an expert in the house on food and drug laws, and an expert investigator over all has to be on the job all the time.

In the evening came the banquet of the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives, at which the association were guests.

The large Bellevue-Stratford ball room was practically filled, about five hundred dining. All the local wholesalers were present as guests besides the members of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association. George Nowland was the chairman of the Executive and W. H. Rohr, chairman of the Entertainment and Reception Committee. Both managed their exceedingly arduous work so well that the phenomenally big banquet went off without a hitch.

After the dinner President H. G. Flint, of the Philadelphia Association, said a few graceful words of welcome and turned over the toastmaster's gavel to Louis Runkel, president of the visiting association. The speakers were Governor John K. Tener, Samuel S. Fels, Thomas A. Daly, C. W. Dunn, Esq., Helen Louise Johnson, chairman of the Home Economic League of the Federated Women's Clubs, and W. A. Reid, representing the Pan American Union.

On Friday addresses were delivered by Albert Kaiser, Helen Louise Johnson, Dr. S. J. Crumbine, F. B. Reeves, Jr., Dr. T. B. Wagner, R. R. Whitman.

In the afternoon an executive session was held, to listen to the report of the Nominating Committee's report. On Saturday reports of various chairmen of trade sections were offered.

Pennsylvania News Items.

The Union Stock Yards in Pittsburgh were opened November 17th by Dr. P. K. Jones, of the State Live Stock Sanitary Board, and Dr. G. E. Totten, of the Bureau of Animal Industry. The yards have been closed and under quarantine for two weeks and are opened now only for receipt of cattle from unquarantined districts. Only cattle consigned for immediate slaughter in Allegheny County, besides those brought in sealed cars under Government inspection and unloaded in Pittsburgh for feeding, resting and watering, will be accepted at the yards. One herd of 65 cattle was killed at Pittsburgh and buried November 17th; another of 100 animals was condemned the same day and a diseased herd of 327 was killed November 16th at a point in Westmoreland County not far from Pittsburgh. This is the biggest herd ever slaughtered because of disease in Pennsylvania.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is quite unchanged for the week. There is a fair movement, but no keen activity. Nobody seems to be anticipating the market, and buying is for actual wants only. Prices show no change for the week.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee in all grades, except the finest roasting grades of Santos, is weak and dull, conditions being in buyers' favor. Milds are unchanged and quiet, except Bogotas and Maracaibos, which are relatively firmer than other milds because of scarcity. These grades have made considerable advance from the lowest point. Java and Mocha are unchanged and quiet, but the course of Mocha seems to be downward.

Sugar.

The market is unchanged for the week, raws standing at 4.01 cents and practically all refiners holding granulated at 5.10 cents. The market is steady to firm, with the outlook a little uncertain and depending to a great extent upon foreign demand. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is 10 points cheaper for the week, and compound syrup has gone off about the same fraction. The demand for compound syrup is fair. Sugar syrup is unchanged and quiet. Molasses show fair demand at unchanged prices.

Fish.

Mackerel is in a very unsettled condition, and there is news that the Norway combination is on the verge of dissolution, due to its failure to get the prices for the fishermen which it had promised. There is plenty of mackerel in sight and it is selling at fair average prices, which show no change for the week. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and steady to firm, but quiet. Salmon is strong, owing chiefly to large expectations of foreign demand. Domestic sardines are unchanged, but the market seems fairly steady, considering the lack of demand. Imported sardines show no change and are still scarce and firm.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are slightly firmer for the week, being nominally 67½ cents a large way, f. o. b., although some holders are still willing to sell at 65 cents firm order. The demand is fair, but the market has considerable underlying strength, owing to the hope of large export demand for tomatoes. If it comes, prices will without doubt be much higher. Corn is steady to firm, but quiet. Peas are dull and inclined to be easy. Apples are very cheap and very dull. California canned goods are quiet and unchanged. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged, but baked beans will probably advance if the pea bean market continues to soar the way it is doing now.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are about ½ cent higher for the week, with 70s pretty nearly exhausted on the coast. The demand is quiet notwithstanding. Peaches are looking a little firmer, in spite of very light demand, because of expectation of foreign demand. Apricots are in about the same situation. Raisins are exceedingly dull—almost no trade is reported for them in the East. Currants unchanged and quiet. Hallowee dates are ¼ cent higher, by reason of expected scarcity. All dates are above normal on account of the foreign situation. Figs are ½ cent higher because of the Turkish situation. Citron has also advanced.

Butter.

The butter market is steady, with a fair consumptive demand for all grades. The market is probably as high as it is likely to get at present, and if there is any change it will probably be a decline.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs are extremely light and the market is very firm on the present basis. The bulk of the trade demands strictly fresh eggs, and storage eggs are moving in a very limited way. Prices are about unchanged, with no immediate change in sight.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged. The demand is only fair, and stocks are fully up to a year ago. No important change seems in sight within the next few days.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged, with only a moderate consumptive demand. Pure lard is firm, with a seasonable demand and unchanged prices. Compound lard is in increased demand at ⅛ to ¼ cent advance. Barrel pork, dried beef and canned meats unchanged and dull.

Poultry.

The outlook for turkeys is steady to firm. Fancy birds are firm at 25 cents per pound, with a probability, however, of increased supply during the coming week. If the weather keeps as favorable as it is now for packing and shipping, however, prices are not expected to decline much. Ducks are scarce and rule at 18 to 19 cents; fowls, 18 to 19 cents, and frying chickens at 16 to 18 cents. These are about average prices.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are about 12 cents per bushel higher than a week ago, due to actual scarcity. It is estimated that the available supply this year, in the absence of foreign beans, will be only about four-ninths of last year's supply. This will be aggravated by an export demand this year. Marrow beans have also advanced—50 cents per bushel, and are now $4 per bushel in a large way. The large way quotation for pea beans is $2.67. California limas show no change for the week. Green and Scotch peas are very scarce and have advanced about 20 cents per bushel during the week. The lack of foreign dried peas is partly responsible.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Some shipments of Holland herrings have come to hand and they are selling readily, although prices are lower than they have been, but not on account of the market conditions, but principally because the quality of the herrings is not as good as it should be.

Scotch herrings are also selling very well indeed, but also at expense of value, but there is no harm in that, because the prices we can realize now are still very good, and the shippers should have no reason for complaint when they get what they are getting now for their goods.

Norway herrings are selling very well, and prices for those are not only steady, but tending higher.

Mackerel are selling only in a hand-to-mouth way. There has been some little movement in Norway mackerel, but prices remain about the same.

Our agent in Ireland reports shipments of Irish mackerel, total for the week, 1,577 barrels, making total shipments to date of 1914 Irish autumn mackerel, 4,075 barrels; not a very large quantity when we take into consideration that this whole great country had to divide those few barrels.

There has been very little change in the sardine situation. Of course, nothing can come from France except dribbles. Here and there are small lots which are snapped up readily by eager buyers. From Portugal, practically nothing has arrived. Stocks here are only fair, the demand is fair only, but it is bound to come very shortly, because stocks are gradually getting lower all over the country. Those who handle well-known brands of Portuguese sardines have certainly had no reason to complain, because arrivals found ready sale at full prices. Unknown and outside brands naturally had to be shaded to find buyers, particularly because everyone had stocked up on sardines in anticipation of a great scarcity.

In Norway the catch of first-grade sardines is very limited, and they are scarce. They have been catching some second-grade sardines, but mostly very large fish, which are not adapted to the American trade. Stocks here are only fair, and with the least bit of demand we shall see better prices for Norway sardines.

Standard Canned Goods.

There were no developments of more than ordinary interest in the Baltimore canned goods market last week. The character of the buying was much the same as it was in the week previous, with the exception of a material increase in the buying of tomatoes, the orders for them coming from nearly all sections. The increase in the orders was in numbers rather than in point of quantity, and therein lies the key to the tomato situation, apparently, for it is reasonably sure that the same markets will be steady buyers, in lots of one to three carloads at a time, until next summer, and it is the constant dripping that wears away the stone.

The First Sale Does the Work

☞ The first sale of Wheatena is the only one a grocer needs to make to nine consumers out of ten. After that it makes its own sales. Of course we don't sell consumers, but we know in many ways that this is so.

☞ And the reason is that Wheatena (the hearts of selected wheat) is quite different from other cereals in two ways: First in composition, and second because it holds its people while they don't.

The improvement in the market prices for tomatoes which started last week, has continued, and there seemed to be a general tightening up on the part of canners. Those who were the most urgent sellers in October are the least anxious now, while those who held aloof then are now accepting the orders at the higher prices. Just how far this reaction in the prices will go remains to be seen, but it has been long overdue, and, ordinarily, it ought to reach, at least, the cost of producing the goods. There is further talk about a demand for tomatoes coming from abroad shortly, which may or may not come to pass, but do not base your purchases upon that expectation alone. The consumption in our own country will take care of all the tomatoes canned this season.

Two or three articles in the line of canned vegetables attracted attention this week, spinach, string beans and sweet potatoes, because of lower prices for each of them, and they are worth attention, whether wanted now or for shipment later on. The market was dull enough for the remainder of the list of vegetables. Outside of the usual small orders coming in each day there was nothing doing, and straight carlot orders were scarce. A higher market for corn was confidently expected, but, in common with the other items, it is dull and the prices are easier.

Pears, pie peaches and blackberries were the only fruits called for this week, and they were fairly active in a small way with no changes in the prices. The stocks of fruits left in Baltimore are so light that they won't bother the owners to carry them along through the winter. There are some good trades in canned apples to be had in this market.

The season for the fall pack of oysters is now on, and the lower prices made this week are attracting orders to this market.

Express Companies Badly Smashed by Parcels Post.

The question as to whether the day of the express companies has not passed came up unexpectedly last Tuesday at the 26th annual convention of the National Association of Railway Commissioners held in the hearing room of the Interstate Commerce Commission in Washington. Martin S. Decker, of the commission for the Second District of New York and chairman of the Committee on Express Service and Rates, read a report in which he said that 11 express companies showed a falling off in operating income from $4,413,000 in 1913 to $404,000 in 1914, a loss income of $4,009,000 in a single year under the new rates and against competition of the enlarged parcel post service. The total gross revenues declined from $168,880,000 to $158,879,000. The Adams, American, Globe, United States and Western companies all reported a deficit in operating income.

Big Flour Mills Offer to Pay Freight to Belgium on all Flour Anybody Will Buy at Market Rates. Canned Goods and Dried Fruits Brokers' Ideas of Commercial Honesty. Various Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, November 20, 1914.

According to official figures from Washington we exported in the ten months ending with October, chiefly from this port, $112,000,000 less foodstuffs than in the same months of 1913. The war was the chief reason. Cotton is another product that showed a tremendous falling off. October, however, brought big increases, chiefly in foodstuffs, lard, wheat, corn and flour.

The Board of United States General Appraisers overruled yesterday the protests of Meyer & Lange and Parodi, Erminio & Co. against the Collector's assessment on tuny fish at 30 per cent. ad valorem under paragraph 270 of the 1909 tariff act. The fish was claimed to be dutiable at 1¼ cents per pound under paragraph 273 as mackerel. The Board finds in a minute discussion of the case that tuny fish is not mackerel.

The Pillsbury Flour Mills Co. have come forward with an offer to deliver flour to the Belgian sufferers at the actual market price of the flour here. This means that they will pay the freight to Belgium on all flour that is purchased on this side at full market price; in other words, they will sell delivered instead of f. o. b. Here is the text of their offer:—

To the Public:—

You may have noticed in the newspapers that the millers of Minneapolis are sending a cargo of flour to the destitute of Belgium. This is being done through arrangements made by Mr. Edgar, of the "Northwestern Miller," and has been made possible by the co-operation of the German and English Governments through the American Ambassador in London.

The American Ambassador informs us that money is of no use in Belgium, and that what they need is food supplies that can be distributed direct to the sufferers. The mills have donated a very large amount of flour free of charge for this purpose, and through the co-operation of the transportation and steamship people, the Minneapolis mills are in a position to ship additional flour, so that it can be actually delivered, under Mr. Edgar's supervision, to needy sufferers in Belgium.

We believe that this is the very best possible way that people generally can help this very necessary charity; and we are accepting checks, currency, money orders or stamps from every one for as many sacks as they wish to pay for, and are agreeing to see that they are delivered in Belgium at a price of $1.50 per 49-pound sack, for patent flour, or its equivalent value in less expensive grades. More will be sent if market price at time of shipment will permit.

We are anxious to make this movement as successful as possible, and would suggest that you mention to your acquaintances and connections that, if they wish to contribute, we will be glad to be responsible for any contribution sent to us. Receipts will be mailed promptly. Contributions to be of use must reach us not later than November 25th.

Yours very truly,
PILLSBURY FLOUR MILLS CO.

The National Canned Foods and Dried Fruit Brokers' Association, seeing with envy that almost every other commercial association had adopted a code of ethics, has adopted a code of its own. Here it is:—

1. The broker is the connecting link between buyer and seller and should always maintain the dignity of his position.

2. Absolute fairness and honesty to both buyer and seller is the best capital a broker can have.

3. A broker should respect the rights of his competitors and never attempt by unfair means to interfere with their business.

4. The canner and packer represented by any broker, constitute his stock in trade, and any deliberate attempt on the part of another broker to unfairly interfere with a view to securing such representation, is decidedly against good brokerage ethics.

5. Co-operation among brokers is the best way to strengthen their position in the business world, and anything that tends to add strength to the broker's position should be encouraged.

6. The division of brokerage on the part of the broker with either buyer or seller, is the poorest way of building up a brokerage business and indicates that the broker puts a low value on his services. Reputable buyers and sellers deprecate such action as being most unfair competition and is an indication of weakness on the part of the broker.

7. Brokers should always be careful that all terms and conditions of sale go to both buyer and seller, and should exercise due care to see that all sales contracts and copies thereof should be exactly alike and state plainly all conditions and terms of said sale, and that both buyer and seller are furnished with same promptly.

8. The broker is a responsible agent between buyer and seller, and should at all times realize that fact and assume fairly their responsibility, standing firmly for a fair deal between buyer and seller.

9. The question of arbitration is a very important one in transactions at the present time, and permanent arbitration boards having been established for the handling of such matters, it is deemed advisable that all contracts between buyer and seller should contain a clause providing for arbitration in case of dispute arising in the fulfillment of that contract.

10. The National Canned Foods and Dried Fruit Brokers' Association is composed of the best brokerage talent in the country. As in union there is strength, all reputable brokers should become members of this association, thus enabling them to present a united front to the interests of the brokerage fraternity in any case of need.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet. Very dull. Market however, fairly steady with low grade Congos and India Ceylon firm.—Coffee very heavy and dull. Prices in buyer's favor. Sugar unchanged from a week ago.—Prunes higher and firm.—Peaches and apples coming somewhat into attention.—Canned tomatoes fairly steady at unchanged prices; demand light. Canned peas unchanged and quiet.—Domestic sardines stronger, owing to close the packing season with short product.—Export demand for wheat good but market not overly firm. Domestic trade comparatively light. Flour quiet and unchanged.

The California Walnut Crop.

The California Walnut Growers' Association has issued a circular to trade setting forth the character of the crop, as follows:—

Regarding the present walnut situation, we have to advise that indications now point to a lighter crop of California walnuts than the State has produced many seasons past. Our present estimates are for a total crop of 8,000 tons or less for the State. While the size of the walnuts are not running up to our earlier expectations, which is undoubtedly due to the fact that the nuts have ripened a little prematurely this year, and to the further fact that the outer hulls which drop off before the nuts are gathered were unusually thick and pithy this season, nevertheless the quality of the goods is excellent. A peculiar feature of the output this year is the fact that, while the nuts are running heavily to large sizes, nevertheless they are running exceptionally light to No. 2s. Against an average in 1913 of 27 per cent. No. 2s the crop is only averaging 3 per cent. of grade this year. We have therefore found it necessary to greatly reduce all No. 2 orders and are now prorating on a basis of 40 per cent. on all orders for this grade. It is now practically certain that but very limited supplies of foreign nuts will be available this Thanksgiving trade, and as the average consumption of walnuts at this period is accurately estimated at 33,000,000 pounds, it is hard to figure where all the nuts will be found this season.

Dry Goods—Notions—Knit Wear

Cancellations on Underwear Refused by Jobbers.

With the low cost of cotton, the price of underwear has been materially affected, so much so that jobbers who have contracted for the season's supply have been endeavoring to get their contracts with the mills cancelled or modified. Just how the merchant would be benefited should cancellations or a revision of prices be granted is problematical. Not a great deal, if anything at all, it is believed. At any rate the Pennsylvania Association of Underwear Manufacturers, at a meeting on November 14th, were adverse to giving any relief to the complaining jobbers. Thirty jobbers, some of the largest in the country, had asked for rebates on contracts placed when yarns were high priced. The association's attitude was reflected in the following resolution, which was adopted unanimously:—

Whereas, Certain circular letters have been circulated by different jobbers asking for reductions which in no wise would benefit the consumer; it is

Resolved, That the association will not reduce prices on orders placed or accept cancellations.

Thousands of cases of underwear have been made up under contract with jobbers and the manufacturers are threatened with cancellation unless a substantial rebate is allowed. This may, as a measure, account for the backwardness of merchants in placing orders, as they are not at all inclined to pay high prices for goods when merchandise is now being marketed at lower figures. A test case of a buyer's right to cancel when delivery conforms to specifications is on the way to the courts for adjudication.

Buyers Waiting on the Weather. Goods in Selling Favor.

As has been remarked before in this department, Western merchants are no more aggressive in their buying proclivities than those of the East. The weather has been accredited with a great deal of this backward tendency, and perhaps there is some truth in it as wholesalers regard the proposition. Retailers, on the other hand, are not saying much, but simply awaiting developments, irrespective of the interest statement sent for their guidance in placing orders. As an illustration of the state of feeling the John V. Farrell Co., Chicago, say in their weekly review: "Advance business for spring is showing satisfactory activity, especially in all lines of sheer wash fabrics—percales, silk mulls, chiffons, lineweave fabrics, etc. Clip-figure embroidered patterns on sheer cloths continue to be big sellers in the white goods line. The change in style of women's dresses has given a decided impetus to the selling of linings, both silk and cotton. The practical gift movement which is sweeping over the country this season, is giving increased activity to the call for handkerchiefs, fancy aprons, boudoir caps, knit slippers and other practical lines of Christmas selling. Wide hems and colored effects are being very largely featured in handkerchief lines for 1915—a rather radical change from the narrow hem vogue which prevailed for so many years. Black silks, especially black messalines, are selling very freely."

Marshall Field & Co.'s advice is to the following brief effect: "Dry goods business is still inactive, pending the arrival of cooler weather. Holiday goods are moving more freely and there are some reports of excellent retail sales in holiday lines. Wool dress goods are in demand, and prices of woolen fabrics are advancing, due to the inability of manufacturers to secure the finer foreign wools."

A Glove Repair Outfit Profitable.

Perhaps every storekeeper would not find it profitable to install a glove repair department; but a store having a good trade on this line would find it profitable, providing it announced a willingness to take the repair work of other stores in the same town or close by territory, and made public announcement of the fact. Such an annex increases profit, saves time and annoyance and pleases customers. The glove fastener machine is a device which merchants will appreciate, and its cost is modest. There is nothing more annoying than for a merchant to be obliged to send a pair, or, worse, yet, a single glove to the factory merely to have a clasp put on. These points are telling considerations in developing trade on gloves and gives a store prestige for enterprise and a reputation for studying the convenience of customers.

Indifference to Up-to-Date Hosiery a Fault.

Wholesalers give full credit to merchants—especially in the small towns—for progressive enterprise in handling up-to-date lines. Also to their foreknowledge of trade and fashion tendencies—the same thing in the final analysis. In hosiery, however, there appears to be an inclination to stock and sell the standbys, as represented by stockings presumably existing in the paleozoic age, so to speak. Times have changed materially, and the modern retailer who aims to furnish goods which appeal to the intelligently informed customer—pretty nearly everybody these days—may read the following letter, from Geo. A. Weinman, advertising manager of Lord & Taylor, wholesale, with more than a passing thought:—

New York, Nov. 12, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am glad to note that you printed that article because of the prizes given to our Western friends, and I thought it was just as well to have the East represented, so as not to have it so one-sided. The article referring to "Fancy Hosiery and Footwear" is all right, although no mention was made of clocked hose, which are in very strong demand.

You touch upon one condition which has long been a sore point with sellers of hosiery; dealers are prone to be too conservative; limit their lines to staples; do not take advantage of the prevailing fashions or the many opportunities for increasing their sales; they force their own customers to spend their money elsewhere instead of keeping it at home. Facilities at the present writing are so far advanced, making it possible to carry in small bulk the very latest in color or design and procure any special color within a few days in colors that will match any shoe top or any fabric.

The tendency to treat a staple line like hosiery indifferently, not considering it worth while the effort that is given to other lines and branches of the business, is widespread. Any dealer can increase greatly his hosiery sales by giving a little more attention to this department with the assistance of such an organization as ours.

Yours truly,

GEO. A. WEINMAN.

Market Bare of Foreign Hosiery.

Imports of the finer kinds of cotton hosiery from Germany have started up again, but in a very limited and desultory way. Representatives of these lines are not certain by any means of the deliveries in the future. Merchants who have been led to believe German hosiery will cut a figure in the market should revise their calculations. Further, it is stated that imported hosiery stocks that were here are now practically eliminated; and domestic manufacturers of finer grades, such as lises, mercerized goods and silk, have felt this condition in any important way. Buyers, whether large or small, should not overlook this authoritative statement.

Sweater Coats Gradually Advancing.

Undoubtedly the demand for sweater coats for export account is bound to affect the selling price to the domestic trade, both jobbers and retailers. The mills have notified buyers that while they will look out and care for their regular customers here, at the same time it is pointed out that the export trade provides a new feature entering into their calculations for the future. The new coats, where wool is the chief material, for next season are priced somewhat higher than a year ago. All worsted coats, on account of the higher cost of yarns, are advanced from 50 cents to $2 a dozen over last year.

Complaint About Ultra-Conservative Buying.

In a warm discussion over present merchandising conditions the general and sale manager of a Nationally known New York house expressed himself as follows to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World": "Business is fair; I might say good in a negative way. What I mean by that is, buyers and retail merchants are coming in and placing orders, but in a hand-to-mouth way. Perhaps you have had that said before a hundred times, nevertheless it is true. Under normal conditions I would see these people once or twice a year, but now they show up every two weeks from not only nearby places, but from Pittsburg, Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Louisville and even Chicago. Instead of ordering as in the past—enough for a season—they now purchase only enough to see them through for a limited period.

"I must say the feeling is better; things appear to be and are brighter, and possibly trade is stronger. What puzzles me, however, is that when everybody is talking and acting in a better spirit, why shouldn't business start up, as it should. Personally, I am getting a trifle impatient. Maybe credits are not so easy as formerly and the banks are likely to be more cautious in extending accommodations. At the same time this does not explain the general hesitancy in buying so much in evidence. Merchants in the small towns, the valued distributors of many products in the dry goods, hosiery and notions lines, while showing commendable enterprise in stocking and selling certain merchandise, should realize that the development of true modern merchandising means the handling of up-to-date goods.

"The general storekeeper, to my mind, is certainly lax in not fully realizing the opportunity he has for keeping in touch and buying lines which are bound to move rapidly if he knows his business. In hosiery, for example, there is not a wider field to operate in successfully if the merchant would only grasp the chance. The endless variety of handsome goods at inducing prices was never greater; and the demand is equally broad. The public is educated up to the point where merchandise of character is not only appreciated, but is called for at the counter. The holidays are practically here, so far as the merchants' stocks are concerned and their buying should be on a larger scale. Perhaps a change toward that end will occur in a week or so, and I assure you it will be welcome."

Tinsel Net Flouncings in Favor.

Metallic fabrics are now all the go, from the hats and gowns to even the footwear. Metallic brocades and the gold and silver laces and fabrics are much in demand, and even the merchant in the smaller communities are recognizing their selling qualities and are buying goods of this description, even if only in a tentative way. In tulle or net flouncings, embroidered with metal tinsel, bright silver and gold, jasper (black and silver mixed), dull shades of silver gray, Copenhagen blue, mahogany red, emerald green and old gold are being offered. Three different patterns, ecru or white or black cotton net, any color tinsel, 23-inch width, is sold at 50 cents a yard; 35-inch, 60 cents a yard. As tinsel is imported it is scarce, and advanced prices are being quoted. Modistes for the fashionable trade are very partial to tinsel embroidered on net for flouncings.

Fitting of the Ideal Corset.

There are so many good makes of corsets on the market that it is only a question of careful inquiry to find the right one for any customer. To be sure, a general merchant is not expected to nor does he carry a great stock of these goods; but in making his selection he can obtain a range from any reputable maker that will fit in satisfactorily with his trade. The sales person in charge of this department should make every effort to get a satisfactory fit. The customer, when being fitted, should be requested to stand, walk, stoop, etc., to see if the corset hurts in any place. Most important of all, see that a long breath is taken. All these things should be possible and yet the corset retain correct lines and proportions.

An expert says the corset of to-day more than ever in its existence, follows the natural lines of the figure. In this regard corsetiers are going back to the graceful curves of the human form, but not the exaggeration of former days, when women tried to span their waists with their hands. The tricot fabrics are now extensively used in corsets, and they are sufficiently strong to hold the figure in shape. There are dancing, athletic, tailored, evening and lounging corsets, and one corset should not be worn constantly, but should be changed and cleaned like any other article of underwear, and for the same reason. This new style corset is likely to remain in vogue for years; for it is spoken of as ideal and what it should be—a covering for the body and not a deformity.

Why Prices in Cotton Goods Remain Stationary.

Respecting prices on colored dress materials and other cotton and wool goods, a jobber explained the position of such goods to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" by briefly saying: "Merchants realize that cotton is low, and while they have heard more or less of the scarcity of dyestuffs and the high figure at which they are held on that account at the present time, they are skeptical. Cottons of every kind should be lower, but dyestuff conditions offset this, so that selling figures are very nearly normal quotations, such as were prevailing earlier in the year. I think the 'Journal of Commerce,' in this paragraph, about expresses the true state of affairs:—

"Uneasiness is shown by some buyers because prices on prints, ginghams and percales are not revised downward. If selling agents were not being held back by the fact that mills will not guarantee deliveries until the color and dyestuff question is more settled, they would revise prices at once. They are trading in small lots in some parts of the markets, but even when buyers can make purchases at concessions they do not show any great interest. Some Southern colored cottons can be had for early delivery at concessions, but buyers are not picking them up at all normally. It seems useless for agents to try and impress buyers with the fact that some of the largest textile users of dyestuffs are on the verge of closing and have already shut off the production of several important colored lines. The only impression they expect to see effective is the one that will be made when goods ordered are not delivered because dyes cannot be had for making them."

Boots Shoes Findings

Tactful Way of Selling Shoes.

Selling methods is an ever interesting topic in the retailing of shoes. An experienced salesman in an informal chat on the subject with the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" the other day, said: "My advice to a merchant carrying a stock of shoes or his salesman is to never make the mistake of bringing out too low-priced a shoe and then try to work the customer up to a higher figure. I have discussed this phase of the question with a number of salesmen and 'bosses,' and while all do not agree with me, I have found it much better to always start off with the highest priced shoe. I will tell you why. If you are too high you will soon be informed of the fact by the purchaser, who will intimate after inquiring the figure, about what he or she wants to pay. On the other hand, if you show too cheap a shoe you make the customer feel as if he were not not worthy of the consideration or association of a good shoe; and in this respect many people are very sensitive.

"By showing the costliest shoe first you can very often induce callers who intended to pay only a moderate price to come up higher. They see the finish, the style and the distinctiveness of the highest class of goods, and when the cheaper lines are put alongside they at once come to the conclusion that a dollar or two more does not make any particular difference on a pair of shoes so long as they get that value and that indefinable, indispensable thing which, in shoeology, we call snap. If a man or woman wants a working shoe they will generally be explicit; but when they say shoes it usually means the finer grades."

Hardware Tools Specialties

Latest Examples in Novelty Lines.

Possibly the safety razor may be included in the regular lines of cutlery, but merchants will find it advantageous to specialize on these goods. High priced "safeties" have long been known and are selling strong, but razors at less figures, and of dependable quality are now in the market and they deserve attention on the part of the retailer, particularly as a holiday special. One of the newest articles of this sort is being exploited, and of it the maker says: "Following the appearance of the $5-safety razor came numerous so-called safety razors, many of which were neither safe nor satisfactory. During the past two years the unsatisfactory kind have been eliminated. There are now two classes of these goods: the high-priced advertising specialty and the good dollar article. The latter has proven a staple commodity on the same basis as any article possessing merit. A good dollar razor is salable to nearly eight men out of ten. We have recently perfected a process for making razor blades every one alike, every one good. To the best of our knowledge, we are the first to accomplish this. A razor is as good as its blade, and there are no finer blades than these. The drop forge guard that holds the skin taut for the blade to follow is an absolutely new device in safety razors."

Hardware men agree that dealers find it profitable in various ways to handle automobile accessories. Jobbers and wholesalers recommend their need to the general merchant. One of the newest appliances is a shock absorber which is claimed to be a perfect jolt eliminator. It is dust proof in construction, made of drop forgings throughout, with brass bushings in all moving parts. Oiling is required but once a year. The shock absorber saves wear and tear on the car and greatly reduces tire expense. Another accessory of recent appearance is an auto lock. It is offered as insurance against the common everyday theft of automobiles. The locking one or two of the levers together with part of the frame and one spoke of the steering wheel, the car is secure against thieves. It has a polished brass case, adjustable tempered steel shackle, double locking bolts, twelve changes, with two corrugated steel keys. This is a specialty that should be a ready seller.

Stoves an Important Factor in the Hardware Stock.

Scarcely a general merchant carries hardware but what also handles a line of stoves. The choice of a make of stoves is no small matter if properly done. The local market conditions and possibilities are to be considered. The well-advertised stove is usually, if not always, the easiest to sell. This is a problem which each merchant must settle in his own way. As he is in close touch with everybody in his own community, he should know what sort of stove it will pay best to stock. Generally speaking a medium priced line affords a good margin of profit; at the same time the best class of people are not to be overlooked, and therefore a keen eye to design, elegance of finish and ornamental trimmings are the points to be borne in mind.

It must be admitted that competition in stoves is keen, what with catalog houses, peddlers and "direct to consumer" concerns in the field. The retail mail order house is the most troublesome factor to deal with, and while some headway is being made to "show up" the often pretentious merchandising of these establishments in their advertising methods land many orders that should go to the general merchant. The dealer who pushes his stove business energetically makes it a practice to have a representative of the manufacturer whose goods he handles hold a conference with his salesmen. In the course of this conference the stove is demonstrated; every "talking point" is thoroughly explained; explanations are given also respecting the claims of competing lines which may be on sale in the same town. Subsequently the merchant goes over the ground with his clerks and then they are well posted to do the line justice.

By studying the catalogues of his own and competing lines and closely reading the advertisements appearing in the National magazines and trade papers other telling points are picked up. As stoves have talking points peculiar to their own, which it is customary to feature, and with these the salesmen should be thoroughly acquainted. As a rule, these special features are less important than they seem, but they help to sell a thoroughly good stove.

Isn't It Worth Looking Into?

If a manufacturer heard of a machine that would cut his cost of production 10 to 20 per cent. he would investigate the proposition thoroughly. If, as an office manager, you heard of a typewriter that would reduce the cost of producing correspondence, bills and all typewritten matter an equal amount, could you afford to stay in a rut and not investigate?

Ball Bearing; Long Wearing

Your typist can reduce the cost of production by an L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter. This is not merely a theoretical claim, because we have proven it by records of specific cases where every key stroke was counted and recorded mechanically for a long period of time.

One of the principal reasons for this showing is the fact that the L. C. Smith & Bros. is the only typewriter with ball bearings at all the busiest working parts—the typebar joints, the carriage and the capital shift. You will save money by investigating.

Teaching Your Kid to Lie.

Say what d'ye think of a father that will teach his own boy to lie and be tickled to death when he does it right?

Some blackleg, ain't he?

But what would you say if he didn't know it was lying, but just thought it was business? Some boob then, eh?

I have a hunch I'd rather be a boob than a blackleg, but I believe I'd try to bum along without being either one of 'em.

There's a fellow keeps a general store up the State. I call it a general store, but groceries is the biggest part of it. It's really a grocery store with some other stuff on the side.

He's just taken his boy in with him. You can see just by looking at him that he thinks the world and all of that kid. Seems like a good bright kid too—too blamed good to be started out wrong, like he's being.

I was in that store last week. Everybody was all upset because one of the delivery horses had dropped dead a little while before and a lot of orders that ought to have gone out hadn't gone. The telephone was working hard—a lot of women were calling up to kick because their stuff hadn't come.

The old man had been sweating all over town to hire another beast and he had just got one half an hour before. It hadn't come yet but was expected to show up any minute. All this time everybody was answering the telephone and trying to smooth people down.

The kid answered one call while I was there. I couldn't hear what the woman at the other end was saying but you could tell she was kicking like all the rest, and by the way the phone buzzed it seemed like she was kicking with both feet.

"Yes, ma'am," said the boy, "it's all right. Your order's on the wagon. Man left here fifteen minutes ago—ought to be there any minute now."

You and me are men of the world and I don't feel I have to be lady-like to you. I feel I can say to you that that was a durned lie. The order hadn't gone at all and it wouldn't go until the new horse showed up.

The kid's father heard what he said and he came back to me with a tickled grin all over his face.

"By George!" he said, "that boy's a wonder! Born business man, he is—knows more ways of smoothing a customer down in a minute than I know in a week."

I suppose all that meant was that the kid could lie faster than his father. Great! Of all the phony ways of being proud of your boy, that's the limit, ain't it?

I didn't get any call to butt in on that, but I never wanted to as much before in all my life. What I'd have said if the way had opened was: "Why in Heaven's name didn't you tell that woman the truth?"

Most people are pretty reasonable. If you'd told her the trouble you'd had she'd have excused you."

I know some business fellow that would say a horse dropped dead when it hadn't, so's to go away with something, but that's the only time I ever heard anybody tell a plumb lie when the truth was right there to excuse him. If I hadn't heard it I'd have said there was nobody on earth as big a chump as to do that.

You see that father hadn't any more idea than a cat what he was tickled over. He didn't know at all that what he said to me was "Heard my boy—ain't he the finest little liar you ever saw?" That's what I meant all right. Gee!

I'll bet forty dollars that kid didn't start to do that all by himself. He saw his father do it. He saw the other clerks do it. That's what he did it—it's a cinch to fall in with that habit all right.

I wish to thunder I had the guts to tell that father what he's done. He don't see it—he thinks you have.

do that kind of thing. It's business—that's the only way you can get along with customers. It ain't no lie. Maybe it seems like it's the easiest way to get along with 'em, but in the long run it's a punk way, believe me.

There's something else to it, too. A fellow that tells his customer a lie—even a little lie—because it's easier than to tell her the truth, is a dumb coward. He's lying because he's afraid, not because he has to. Coward's what I said and I'll stick it up. We'll go out in the back yard right now! Dast you take it or dasn't you? CCLXXXVI.—Tying Salesmen Up to Leave Their Old Customers Alone When They Take a New Position. Also Something Which Has Arisen Under the Clayton Anti-Trust Law.

Here is an inquiry which will interest every business concern employing salesmen. It comes from Chicago, Ill.:—

Several months ago we employed a salesman to obtain orders for us along a certain route which we had already worked up. His business was to take care of the old customers and get as many new ones as he could. After signing our regular written contract, we gave him a list of the old customers. A part of the contract which he signed, and which was drawn by a lawyer, was as follows:—

That in consideration of the employer giving the employee employment as herein set forth, and agreeing not to discharge the employee in advance of the termination of this contract, except by giving said employee two weeks' notice—in case the discharge is for wilful disregard of duty, no notice shall be required—and also in consideration of the payment to the said employee of the said salary and commissions as herein provided, the employee hereby covenants that he will not directly or indirectly for the space of one year after ceasing from any cause or reason whatever to be in the employ of the employer, engage in the same business on his own account, or as agent, or employee of any other person, corporation, etc., within the territory assigned to or covered or served by him, or that he will not for himself on his own account, or as agent, etc., of any other person or company within the said territory, solicit from or supply goods of the same class to any customer or customers served by the said employer.

The salesman worked for us two years and a half and then resigned his position. Within a few days we learned that he had taken a position with a competitor and was actively soliciting from his old customers, which of course we were also calling on through a new man. He was at once notified to stop, as it was in violation of his contract with us, but has paid no attention. I have no redress, and what should we do about it?

Respectfully yours,

R. S. MILLIGAN & BRO.

If this correspondent will go to any good lawyer in Chicago he will be told at once that his contract with the salesman is a good and valid one and that he can enforce it. What he should do is to ask the court for an injunction prohibiting the salesman from soliciting for the same kind of merchandise in his old territory. I have no doubt that the court will at once grant it and that the salesman will be forced to quit.

The thing that employers always get up against the very first thing when they attempt to enforce a contract like this is that the courts don't like these tie-up agreements. They are considered in restraint of trade. Nevertheless, if the contract is in writing and has been properly drawn, the courts will always enforce it. No verbal understanding that a salesman will not solicit in his old territory for a new employer will be enforced, however. It must be clearly expressed in writing. Where there is a fair reasonable contract which was obviously intended for nothing but to protect an employer from having the ground on which he was standing undermined beneath his feet, the courts will hold a salesman to it, and will say, as was said in a leading case: "Such a contract as is before us is not violative of sound public policy and is therefore enforceable at law or in equity according to the nature of the relief sought."

In the case from which I quote a salesman was enjoined from doing the precise thing which this correspondent says his former salesman was doing, and the court, in its decision, said something more which I wish to quote:—

In the present case the defendant makes no denial that he had invaded, within the time limited, the small territory which the contract prohibited him entering for one year after he left the plaintiff's service. It cannot be successfully contended that this contract should be classed with those which are void because they are in contravention of sound public policy. The acts of the defendant complained of are plainly of a kind and nature more or less injurious to the business of the plaintiff. The application for the injunction is granted.

It is always a good idea to tie a salesman up by a contract like this where it is he, rather than the employer, who will come into personal contact with the customers. Very many times the customers don't care much what house they are buying from—they buy from the particular salesman because they know him and like him. Such a salesman finds it very easy to carry the bulk of his trade to a new employer.

There is a very sharp limit to the kind of contract that will be enforced along this line, however. It must be reasonable and it must not be absolute. By absolute I mean a contract never to solicit in the old territory. If for instance in the above correspondent's case the salesman had agreed never to solicit his old customers, instead of merely binding himself to stay away from them for one year, the contract would not have been worth the paper it was written on. That would not have been reasonable. The court only enforces such contracts so as to protect the employer anyway, and a contract binding a salesman never to go back would go much further than is necessary for the employer's protection, therefore it would not be enforced. Many employers in order to absolutely safeguard themselves have overshot the mark and got nothing. A contract to be good must restrict itself to the territory in which the salesman circulated, and must also limit itself to a certain time.

I want to say a word about another matter. During the week the papers have sent me copies of letters which the Pittsburg Steel Company manufacturers of wire fencing, have sent to firms who before the Clayton anti-trust act, recently discussed in one of these articles, were exclusive agents. In both the letters the steel company takes the position that the Clayton law makes it illegal for it to have exclusive agents now. In one letter it says "under Section 3 of the Clayton law just passed by United States Congress and signed by President Wilson, prohibiting manufacturers from marketing their products through exclusive agents, we are obliged to advise you, for your protection as well as our own, that we can no longer consider you exclusive agent for the sale of 'Pittsburg Perfect' Fence."

In the other letter it says: "The Clayton bill forbids our selling ne dealer in a town and refusing to sell another of equal credit and standing."

I say without qualification that there is nothing in this whatever. For two reasons the Pittsburg Steel Co. is clearly wrong. First, the concluding provision of Section 2 of the Clayton act says: "Provided further that nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions not in restraint of trade." As I have already explained in discussing the Clayton act, restraint of trade does not mean restraint of trade as to one's own brand, because one can restrain trade in that as much as he likes, even to the extent of destroying it together. It means restraint of general trade—trade in a product other than a brand.

Second, if the Pittsburg Steel Co. is right in saying that the law "forbids our selling to one dealer in a town and refusing to sell another of equal credit and standing," then it follows that it has no choice as to its customers, but must sell everybody whose credit is good. Everybody knows that that is not the law of the United States Supreme Court as specifically said so many times, most recently in the Miles medicine case. Anybody but a public service corporation like a railroad or a telephone company can sell anybody or nobody.

My judgment is that the Pittsburg Steel Co. is doing what many other manufacturers have been doing for years—using the anti-trust law as an excuse for doing something it wants to do for its own purposes.

Sell Her a Whole Container of Franklin Carton Sugar

When you sell a woman a whole CONTAINER of 24 or 30 CARTONS of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, instead of selling her one CARTON, you prevent her buying the other 23 or 29 CARTONS from a competitor. She's your customer; nobody else can sell her any sugar for some time. She has a supply instead of a sample. You have only one delivery to make, instead of perhaps dozens. You make the profit on every carton in one sale without even having to open the container, although you can do that in five seconds with a pocket knife. You can see that this is the right way to sell sugar because your customers expect to go on eating it all their lives and don't have to "try" it to "see what it's like."

CAPACITIES OF CONTAINERS

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 pounds, according to the grade. CUBE, GRANULATED, and DESSERT & TABLE are packed in CONTAINERS that do not hold too much for a family to buy at one time. POWDERED and CONFECTIONERS' XXXX are also packed in CONTAINERS of small capacity to suit your convenience in buying. Full information on weights of both CARTONS and CONTAINERS can be had from your jobber.

large membership. The organizer addressed a meeting of this association on November 9th. The attendance was good and much interest was shown in organization work. Carbondale's association is progressive, has a good collection system and has started many good things. A late achievement was "A Dollar Sale Day" which was a great success.

The organizer addressed the Scranton business men on November 10th. After the regular business session lunch was served and addresses were made by quite a number of the members. This is a live organization, has a paid secretary, a good credit and rating system, and in the near future will put on a membership campaign through which it is hoped to double the membership.

The organizer met the merchants of Bradford and Wyoming Counties at Tunkhannock on November 12th. The regular business of the association was interesting and instructive. Mr. Smedley made a talk on organization which was well received. Plans were made for the annual banquet to take place in January next.

The Woolson Spice Co., Toledo, Ohio, have joined the Pennsylvania Plan. We trust every member will co-operate with this company so that their association with us may prove profitable.

The organizer addressed the Bradford association November 16th and 17th; Pittsburgh November 18th; Latrobe banquet November 19th; Rochester November 20th.

Mr. Smedley will address the merchants of Berwick on November 27th.

If you want the organizer to visit your association we would suggest making an early appointment to avoid disappointment.

The State Executive Committee will meet in the near future to discuss a legislative programme.

Several towns are in line for organization. Eight new associations have been formed and have joined the State association since the convention.

Enclosed please find one of our weekly circulars for criticism.

Yours truly,

HUEY & MATHEWS, INC.,
Per James Huey, Pres.

The circular sent with this measured 12 x 17 inches and was printed on paper of rather poor quality. I would tell my printer to spruce up on your paper, Friend Huey—you may know I'm a crank on the paper used to print advertising matter on. This circular has been put together very badly, in my judgment. It is fearfully cut up and complicated—it doesn't invite the eye at all. Here is the reduced reproduction:—

is so much matter, and the lines are long, many of them, that the whole thing looks like a hodge podge.

A circular as large as this should never have lines running clear across unless it is in the heading or introduction. The body should consist of columns into which the width should be divided. A width so great as this ought to be divided into three columns and all the articles ought to go in properly classified little paragraphs, each with its appropriate heading. There is a great deal of stuff on this circular that in my judgment is not advertising at all, and would much better have been left off. There is absolutely no advertising value in "Kellogg's Corn Flakes, 10 cents." Every consumer knows practically all grocery stores sell Kellogg's Corn Flakes, and the regular price for it is 10 cents. Therefore, what possible interest is there in advertising "Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes, 10 cents"? Of course special stamps are advertised with some of these articles as the main point of a special offer, but where there is something like that it is perfectly useless to say "Peanut Butter, 15 cents a pound," or "Bottle Olives, 10-15 cents." Absolutely nothing is gained by it—nobody will ever order because of such advertising, and it simply looks down the circular. This printer does seem to have the least faculty of clear cut type arrangement—even the addresses of the stores at the bottom sort of fixed up so as to be confusing to the eye. The heading, too—it looks wretched.

I believe Huey & Mathews would almost have an instantaneous increase in their advertising returns if they would make their printer simplify his plan in setting up their circulars. If they are producing a circular that is difficult to read, let them just hold one up and look at it. Being easy to read is one of the absolute fundamentals of the kind of advertising that gets results.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter submitted, in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. Communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

I say again this is very badly done. If this printer had deliberately started out to get up a circular that should be hard to read, he could not have achieved the result any more surely than he has. The trouble is that there

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price.—You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Ask Your Baker Friend

what yeast he uses. He'll probably answer

Fleischmann's Yeast

The baker knows; and the fact that he uses Fleischmann's is your cue to sell the same kind of yeast to your customers.

THE FLEISCHMANN CO.

Everybody Knows Them

Knight's Flavoring Extracts have been pleasing epicures throughout the United States for fifty-nine years. The name Knight on an extract package is a stamp of excellence. Thousands of families can be induced to use nothing else. Most grocers sell them; if you don't, do so now and you will find that the goods not only sell themselves, but that your extract trade will increase. You cannot make a better profit on any first-class brand.

Some Inside Facts as to Parcel Post Shipments of Food Products

Assistant Postmaster of Louisville, Ky., Tells About a Butter Man Who Ships Much Butter by Parcel Post. Parcel Post Opens New Lines of Business. A Parcel Post Broker is The Latest.

I believe that there exists an idea that the parcel post service, as far as it relates to the shipment of farm produce, is intended only for the farmer who has only a small amount of such produce as butter, eggs, etc., for sale. Such is not the case. I submit the following extracts from a letter received from a man who makes 2,500 pounds of butter per week:—

When we ship by parcel post we get pay for every pound shipped, whereas, if we ship to the commission merchant, we usually get short weighed about eight pounds to the hundred, making a difference of from $2.50 to $3 on the hundred pounds. We are also able to get from 3 to 4 cents per pound above our regular market for all butter shipped by parcel post. These two items alone increase our profit about $6 on the hundred pounds.

The kind of butter we are shipping to Louisville sells for 45 cents to 50 cents a pound. Our prices are governed by Elgin and at present are as follows:—

| | Our Price | Louisville Price | Saved to Consumer |
|--------------------|-----------|------------------|-------------------|
| 1 lb. prepaid ... | $.39 | $.45 | $.04 |
| 2 lb. prepaid ... | .73 | .90 | .17 |
| 3 lb. prepaid ... | 1.07 | 1.35 | .28 |
| 5 lb. prepaid ... | 1.75 | 2.25 | .40 |
| 10 lb. prepaid ... | 3.45 | 4.50 | 1.05 |

These figures show the actual saving to the consumer by buying his butter by parcel post.

Another great advantage parcel post shipments have given the consumer, the butter is delivered promptly and is always fresh churned. The creamery butter that is brought from any store cannot be fresh and sweet, for the following reason, namely, the city merchant gets his creamery butter from your local commission merchant; your commission merchant gets his creamery butter from any creamery that he can get to ship to him. The creamery lets your commission merchant have only his surplus or what butter he cannot himself sell to hotels or retail trade. After this butter is received by your commission merchant it is placed in his large cold storage butter house, which is pretty well filled up all the time. As he wants to keep a good stock on hands, he receives the butter in 60-pound tubs and moulds it into one-half and one pound prints as his trade demands it. He always uses his oldest butter first which makes it impossible for this butter to compare with fresh sweet butter straight from the churn, such as we ship by parcel post.

The above letter should set people in the smaller country towns, adjacent to large cities, to thinking about this matter. As stated in the above letter, the parcel post gives the shipper full weight for every pound of butter shipped by parcel post and in addition a better price is obtained than if he were shipping to a middleman; and the parcel post puts it in the hands of the consumer in a fresher and better condition and at less cost than any other method of distribution. I have suggested to dairymen that they get together and make their own butter and market it through the parcel post.

It is not only the man who makes 2,500 pounds of butter a week who can use the parcel post to advantage. As a concrete illustration of this fact, I know of a farmer in Southern Indiana who is shipping twenty-five pounds of butter a week to this city for which he is receiving 26 cents a pound the year around, whereas, he would otherwise receive for this butter in his local market 18 cents in the summer time and 25 cents in the winter time. This butter is put into the hands of the consumer in this city at 28 cents in the summer time and 27 cents in the winter time. The same butter would cost the consumer from 35 to 40 cents per pound if bought at the corner grocery. It is, therefore, easy to see that the shipping of butter by parcel post should appeal to any one who has butter for sale. The parcel post affords a ready and profitable market for this produce.

It is remarkable the distance butter can travel and the amount of heat it can stand if it is properly chilled and wrapped before mailing. To obtain best results, butter should first be wrapped in oiled paper and each pound enclosed in a pasteboard container treated with a coat of wax, which should in turn be enclosed in a corrugated paper outside wrapper. In the winter time butter may be satisfactorily shipped if it is wrapped in oiled paper and packed in a pasteboard or wooden box or in a basket, but this manner of preparing a shipment is not recommended for any time except during cool weather.

The parcel post is opening up many new lines of business. We now have the parcel post agent or broker, who handles freight shipments of catalogues, etc., so as to enable the sender to take advantage of the lower rate gained by mailing at offices near to office of address. We have a man here—I suppose you would call him a broker—who is trying to work up a business by guaranteeing to consumers the quality of produce furnished by farmers, and guaranteeing to farmers the collection of money for their produce. He, of course, proposes to charge a fee for this service. I doubt if he succeeds in working up a business, as one of the objects of the parcel post was the elimination of the middleman. The fact is, the Post Office Department is performing this service in a measure. It amply protects the consumer and also the farmer by seeing that inferior goods are not sent through the mails and that articles purchased through the mails are paid for. Offenders will be proceeded against for fraudulent use of the mails, which is punishable by heavy fine or imprisonment.

One of the first enterprises which grew out of the parcel post to create new business was the parcel post laundry. The business of this laundry has steadily grown until at the present time it mails out about thirty-five packages of laundry per day. Cleaning establishments are also beginning to use the parcel post to a considerable extent. Articles are sent for cleaning and pressing by parcel post, and the work is done cheaper and more satisfactorily than would be possible in a small town.

The great trouble with parcel post is in bringing the producer and consumer together. The trouble, in my opinion is due to indifference to existing conditions. The average consumer would rather put up with the high cost of living than to be put to a little inconvenience in order to reduce it.

How Many American Grocers or Grocery Clerks Could Write an Essay Like This?

The First Prize Essay Contributed as Part of the Last Examination of the English Institute of Certificated Grocers. Reproduced to Show the Extraordinary Efficiency of the English Trained Grocer.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has made many commendatory references to the English method of learning the grocery business, as particularly evidenced by the work of the English Institute of Certificated Grocers. Several sets of the examination questions asked by the institute of pupils who wanted to be considered trained grocers, have been published in this paper.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has now been furnished with a copy of the first prize essay contributed by one of the applicants for an institute diploma, upon the subject of "The Products of South Australia." Readers who have read the English examination questions from time to time, have noticed that a part of the examination is to write an essay upon some subject connected with the English grocery business. South Australia is the source of many goods sold in England, and it was therefore figured out, rather logically, that a man in the English grocery business should know something about it.

We are reproducing the essay not so much because it supplies information which will be useful to American grocers, but because it shows the extraordinary efficiency of the English trained grocer:—

THE PRODUCTS OF SOUTH AUSTRALIA.
First Prize Essay, by Mr. A. H. Hardy, F. G. I., of Manchester.

The chief things to be considered by the grocer are, the commodities handled by him and produced in this State of South Australia. The choice of the different articles of food for the people is left to a very large extent in the hands of the grocer, and if he intends to be a successful man in his business, he will always be on the lookout for the best goods he can procure with which to fill his store, and also satisfy the most exacting customer.

WHERE TO SEE THE PRODUCTS.

A very good plan to keep in touch with the goods on the market is to visit the grocers' exhibitions which are held from time to time in different parts of the country. I got my best knowledge of the products of South Australia in this manner. I have at several grocers' exhibitions stopped for some time to study the various products on view, on the stand of the South Australian Government. Looking over the various products, the thought passed through my mind, "What a wonderful country and climate to produce things so perfectly and plentifully—everything necessary for the maintenance of man and beast. I have brought away with me booklets and picture postcards, showing this healthy state of things, and have read them in quiet moments. I find on reading that some of the largest vessels go to and fro to her ports for produce and the journey is done in less than a month. These boats are fitted with special refrigerating chambers, which keep our food in the freshest possible condition, and the commodities handled by the grocer can therefore be got from South Australia in fresh and perfect condition, and can therefore compete with goods already well established on this market."

DAIRY PRODUCE.

Let us acquaint ourselves a little about the country itself, and the products grown therein. The soil and climate of this country are all that can be desired, being rich in alluvial deposits from time immemorial, for it must be remembered that it is a comparatively young country and the soil must possess a wonderful amount of energy and plant food necessary for the growing of food for cattle and for raising all sorts of things for mankind. The cows fed on the natural grasses growing produce a record supply of milk, which is rich in butter fat to the extent of 4 per cent. This is made into butter and cheese of the finest quality. The butter made is of the highest grade, of good body, flavor and texture, which is proved by the increasing demands for this product, and the prices fetched in competition with other makes. They have also secured first prizes in competition with other colonial butters at the London Dairy Show.

BACON.

The by-product, viz., skim milk, is a good food for pigs. I saw an illustration of a family of Berkshire pigs and it struck me what a healthy family they looked. I thought as I passed along and saw the exhibit of bacon, "What a good opportunity for the people in South Australia to put more bacon into the English markets!" With decreased supplies from America and Danish and Irish producers taxed to the limit, and also the restriction of pig keeping in this country, besides the record prices ruling, it seems a pity we cannot have more Australian bacon. I read, however, that it is on the increase. The sides of bacon I saw on view were of good finish and appearance, and I am sure would cut up firmly and profitably. It was Wiltshire cut, which is the most popular cut on the English market.

CHEESE.

The cheese produced in South Australia is of excellent quality and commands good prices. It is rich in fact, compared with the average British make, 32 per cent. fat. The South Australian averages as much as 43 per cent. fat. It gives satisfaction to the seller, it being of a nice, firm texture, and there being no waste in cutting up; and to the consumer, because it is of such a high standard of quality.

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

Poultry and eggs have already proved to be a profitable industry, and the prices received in the London market being very satisfactory, will assure for us a continued and ever-increasing supply.

I read an article in one of the booklets on fishing, but the chief thing that caught my eye was that the coasts of South Australia are the natural haunts of the crayfish. Why it took my attention so quickly was that with true lobster being so scarce, and, as a consequence, very dear, my firm had taken up the sale of canned crayfish, which has taken on wonderfully well, with an increasing sale as the result. There should be a big future in store for this commodity.

CEREALS.

Wheat is produced of fine quality, the sample exhibited being the finest I have ever seen, with large, fine grains. From my observation I should think it would produce a flour of "extra superfine quality." And I read it never fails to get top price. Barley, oats and also fodder for cattle grow in abundance, and of the same standard of quality throughout.

FRUITS AND HONEY.

My attention was also drawn to the honey and fruit section. There was a fine collection of fruits of remarkable size. I saw cases of apples as they arrive in this country, and the way they were packed was a credit to the producers, and when offered for sale in that state they would compel people to buy at sight. Almost every fruit to be mentioned was exhibited in glass showcases, and were the admiration of all beholders. The honey also looked very inviting. The bees in South Australia must have a wonderful collection of plants and flowers from which to collect their spoils, and the honey being gathered amidst such beautiful and healthy surroundings must be of the very "best quality."

Another industry which struck me as being a splendid thing for the grocers of this country is that devoted to canned goods. Apricots, peaches, pears, cherries, etc., if put up in thick syrup and nicely labelled would be a splendid addition to our markets, and I am sure would find a ready sale, besides making employment in the canning industry. I read that the South Australians are working on these lines, and are giving preference to the growth of fruits suitable for canning.

Up to a short time ago we never heard of dried fruits such as currants, sultanas, figs and valencias coming from anywhere except Greece or Turkey. The Greeks, I have been told, even went so far as to say that the little dried grapes would only grow on the Gulf of Corinth, and that repeated attempts have been made, but without success, to grow them elsewhere. The fruit growers in South Australia have, however, grown them on South Australian soil, and have done so very successfully. I saw samples of currants at the exhibition and they were a splendid result of their endeavors, and I believe a market is already assured for them.

The eucalyptus product was the most interesting exhibit. Thus, even medical commodities are grown in this wonderful province!

MEAT AND WOOL.

I have often wondered what we should do without our frozen meat trade. I am afraid many of our people would have to turn vegetarians. The meat exported from South Australia is too well known for further comment. It is enough to say the export trade since its inauguration in 1895-96 up to 1911-12 has increased nearly a hundred fold. The wool industry affects the grocer in this respect, that if it were not for the fine wool we receive from South Australia our tailoring bills would be much larger; and it is worth more than a passing thought that we should patronize and encourage the products from our own colonies. But the trade for South Australian goods is sure to find a sound footing in this country because of the superior quality produced by scientific production, which is sure to succeed and prosper.

WINE.

Another important product which concerns the grocer is the wine of South Australia. This is a very well known produce and one which the grocer has handled now for a long time with very good results. The burgundy of South Australia is well known to all lovers of good wine.

To sum up, the multitude of good things produced in South Australia for the grocery markets of the world is the result of years of scientific research work, and continued success is assured by the education given to the farmer and planter to get the best and most out of his land. We grocers of the Mother Country may help this prosperity by giving preference to products from this favored State.

An interesting analogy is that the Philippines and Porto Rico bear about the same relation to the United States that South Australia bears to England. Moreover, both the Philippines and Porto Rico send some food products to this country. How many clerks, just learning the business, could write such an illuminating essay about them as has been written by this English grocery clerk or student?

The New York Letter

Mayor's Food Committee Says Retail Grocers Are Necessary and Should be Encouraged. Coffee Exchange Opens Monday, November 30. Retailers Will Enter Politics to Fight Public Markets. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, N. Y.,

November 27, 1914.

The Mayor's Food Supply Committee, which has been considering the food question in New York, together with the relation of the retail grocer to it, has a plan which it is embodying in an ordinance which will be presented to the Board of Aldermen very soon. It proposes the establishment of a market commission which will keep its finger on the pulse food conditions in this city and operate plans to help both the consumer and the retail dealer.

The committee has issued a statement explaining its plans, a part of which I here reproduce:—

We strongly recommend that these functions be centralized as speedily as possible in some one board or department that would be responsible and invested with broad enough powers to eradicate existing antiquated methods and install new, up-to-date, more economical and efficient methods of marketing and distributing food products in Greater New York.

We suggest the issue by such a commission of daily market bulletin, one for the benefit of the retail dealer and the consuming public in this city and another for the benefit of producers and shippers who consign food supplies to this city.

The bulletin for the benefit of producers and shippers should be issued for the purpose of informing them as to the demands in New York and as to the condition each day of the market in New York from the standpoint of scarcity or over-supply—an official statement that would enable shippers to know the exact conditions each day in New York on all items of food supply. Under present conditions many producers and shippers have ceased sending supplies to New York because of their experience in the past in being told that their goods reached New York at a time when the market was glutted with similar goods and that their consignment had to be sold at ridiculously low prices or else be thrown away.

Terminal facilities and markets cannot be made efficient these days without cold storage accommodations. This city has spent many millions of dollars building reservoirs in Greater New York in which to store water for future use. It has not spent a dollar for cold storage in which to store food for future use. Cold storage has come to be a great and important factor in saving the waste and in equalizing the distribution of food throughout the year. The cold storage facilities of New York are not sufficient for present needs. At this time there is not an inch of available cold storage space to be had in Greater New York or Jersey City. Cold storage facilities could be made of very great advantage to retail dealers throughout the city and save an enormous amount of food that is now wasted. If municipally controlled or owned they could be so administered as to have a most salutary effect on such tendency as may exist in any quarter to monopolize or improperly control the food supply of this great city. The city at this time ought to very seriously consider whether municipal cold storage plants should not be established. This is being tried in other cities, and a properly established market commission could speedily determine the practicability of this suggestion.

The committee feels that the retail dealers of Greater New York in the matter of all food supplies are at a great disadvantage and seriously handicapped in their efforts to supply their customers with good goods and fresh goods at reasonable prices. In most cases they have to pay large rents, go a long distance for their supplies and deliver them to their customers at considerable cost and inconvenience. These retail dealers, however, are indispensable in our system of distributing supplies to consumers. Every facility should be rendered them so that they can obtain their goods in a fresh condition and at the lowest possible cost.

The co-operation of the retail dealers should be obtained in an effort to establish a zone system, if possible, or some sort of co-operative delivery that would materially save the waste and reduce the cost of this important item of transportation. The question of utilizing the parcel post should be studied in this connection, and a properly organized market commission having a grasp of the needs of the entire city could doubtless solve this important problem, at least in part.

Touching the above, particularly the move to establish public markets to compete with the regular retail trade, it is interesting to note that the organized retailers are preparing to go into politics to fight the plan in the Board of Aldermen. Mass meetings under the auspices of Charles Thorpe, State Secretary, are being held in various sections of the city, and everywhere the grocers seem enthusiastic.

Information has reached the coffee trade during the week that President Ross W. Weir, of the National Coffee Roasters' Association, has named the following Executive Committee for the ensuing year: F. J. Ach, of the Canby, Ach & Canby Co., Dayton, Ohio; W. T. Jones, of New Orleans Coffee Co., New Orleans, La.; C. E. Wyman, of Griggs, Cooper & Co., St. Paul, Minn.; T. P. Hinchman, of Steele-Wedeles Co., Chicago, Ill.; George S. Wright, of Dwinell-Wright Co., Boston, Mass.; Julius J. Schotten, of William Schotten Coffee Co., St. Louis, Mo.; Charles A. Clark, of the Clark & Host Co., Milwaukee, Wis.

The Board of Managers of the Coffee Exchange met during the week and decided by a vote of 10 to 4 to open the Coffee Exchange on the coming Monday, November 30th. There is considerable opposition to the plan, but there seems to be no doubt that it will go through. Some members can see no benefit possible from the reopening of trading, with the market in its present depressed condition. While others say that whatever happens coffee could hardly get much lower than it is now.

There has been a strong rumor here for several days that the California Associated Raisin Co., which is the raisin combine, intended to reduce prices on raisins after January 1st. James Madison, manager, has issued an official notice during the week stating that "such is far from our intention." Some interpret this somewhat vaguely expressed statement to mean that there will be no advance, while others are not so sure.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea moderately active in spite of the holiday. Prices steady throughout the list. Export business, particularly in Congous, still quite active and promises to be for some time. Cheap Congous nearly exhausted.—Coffee weak and dull. Low prices would seem to make coffee a good purchase, but practically nobody is taking advantage of this fact. Cables from Brazil steady.—Sugar quiet and unchanged on a basis of 4.05 for raws and 5 to 5.10 for granulated.—Prunes firm and advancing on a 5 3/4 cent basis, f. o. b. coast. Apricots and peaches fairly active. Market steady to firm. Raisins and currants quiet and unchanged. Dates strong; likewise figs. Both on limited supplies.—All canned goods, notably tomatoes, corn and peas, are quiet and unchanged.—Salmon and sardines unchanged and in light demand.—Wheat heavy, sluggish and weak in spite of large export demand. Exporters of wheat are said to have taken out of the country 1,500,000 bushels so far.—Flour dull and buying is for immediate wants only. Prices unchanged.—Provisions quiet and a trifle easier.

A POINTER

W RIGLEY'S spear—the sign of the perfect gum in the perfect package—has pointed a way of happiness to millions of people; not only those who have bought and enjoyed the best chewing gum made—but those who have sold it—the Retail Merchants.

The wonderful WRIGLEY distribution—so complete that any person in any corner of the United States has but to step into the nearest store to find WRIGLEY'S SPEARMINT or WRIGLEY'S DOUBLEMINT—is convincing proof of the necessity and value of dealer co-operation—without which, one of the heaviest advertising expenditures in the world would fail to secure maximum results.

Through the Pennsylvania Plan we hope to show the merchants of Pennsylvania not only that we believe in them, but that real co-operation between manufacturer and merchant means better stores, increased sales and greater profits.

IN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

WITH THE EDITOR

A Letter and Its Answer.

The following letter, received during the week, is worthy of a public reply:—

Prospect, Pa., Nov. 23, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Your reply to my inquiry as to who the officers of the United Grocery Co. were duly noted in your current issue. Thank you for the information. Your position in regard to this United Grocery Co. seems to me to be rather inconsistent.

In one of your issues some months ago you quite sharply "panned" Mr. C. C. Truax, manager of the concern under discussion. You referred to him as a "peddler of Staley Mfg. Co.'s stock," and said that it was reported that he had made $20,000 in one year selling this concern's stock. You also advised your subscribers against taking stock in the Staley Mfg. Co., etc., etc. And, if I remember correctly, you also "panned" the United Grocery Co., who last spring started a branch in the city of Pittsburg. Mr. Truax's name was mentioned when the panning of the Pittsburg enterprise took place. You also advised subscribers against taking stock in the concern, i. e., United Grocery Co., which was at that time starting in Pittsburg.

Do you advise your readers against investing in a certain concern in your editorial columns and then accept four full pages of ads. for this same concern, and have your subscribers read and perhaps answered them? You should not publish advertisements for investments into which you have not made thorough inquiry. We do not know anything about the United Grocery Co. It may be perfectly sound. However, if it is all right it looks as though you panned it before just to get a nice slice of advertising out of it later.

My subscription is out, and whether or not I renew it depends upon your explanation of the above.

Yours respectfully,

T. J. CRITCHLOW.

P. S.—In regard to the Staley stock which we purchased of Mr. Truax, would say that we have considerable of it in our family, and consider it gilt-edged property. When we read your articles detrimental to the Staley proposition we wrote to Mr. Staley about it. He, or some of his officers, replied that they did not know why you knocked them unless it was because you were not getting their advertising.

The above letter seems intensely unfair to us, and if the writer of it has no more confidence in our motives than he seems to have, we would prefer that he cancel his subscription.

This paper never "panned" C. C. Truax, the general manager of the United Grocery Co., at all. It did say that he sold stock in the Staley starch concern, and that he is supposed to have made $20,000 a year doing it. That is true, isn't it?

It is true that we have repeatedly advised subscribers who have asked us that the Staley starch stock did not look like a good investment for a retail grocer. The reasons for the opinion were given at length; they need not be repeated now. As to Mr. Staley's remark that we criticised him because he did not advertise in this paper, that is the same empty bit of braggart bluff that everybody makes who is criticised in a trade paper. It calls for no answer whatever.

It is true that the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" published four pages of advertising of the United Grocery Co. several weeks ago, but it is not true that in doing this it published advertising of an investment that it formerly criticised. Several months ago the scheme of the United Grocery Co. was mentioned in this paper, and the concern itself—not its plan—was criticised for allowing some of its officers to make extravagant statements about its business to newspapers. We shall doubtless make the same criticism again if it becomes necessary.

There is not the slightest reason, as we see it, why this paper should not publish the advertising of a legitimate concern that comes to us in the regular course of business. In doing that we do not endorse the plan as an investment, though we do endorse our belief in its legitimacy. We reiterate our belief now that the plan of the United Grocery Co. is absolutely legitimate. Whether it is a good business risk is a matter which everybody to whom its stock is offered must decide for himself.

The Committee on Food Supplies appointed by the Mayor of New York City has for months been investigating the conditions under which food products are distributed to the people of greater New York. It found much waste and extravagance, but it is refreshing to note, from its report which appears in part in this week's New York letter, that "these retail dealers, however, are indispensable in our system of distributing supplies to consumers. Every facility should be rendered them so that they can obtain their goods in a fresh condition and at the lowest possible cost."

The above comes from a city which has sent up the loudest cries we have heard for the elimination of the middleman, for the reduction of retailer's profits, and for the establishment of public markets to put producer and consumer face to face. From such a source it is doubly credible and satisfying.

Perhaps This is a Partial Solution of the Specialty Order Problem

I want to contribute a thought about the specialty order problem. Considerable has been published about this already, and strenuous efforts are being made to induce the specialty manufacturer, his salesman who sells his specialties, the retailer who buys them, and the jobber who fills the retailer's orders for them, to work together. Up to the present time these efforts have been only partly successful. In some cases they have been conspicuously unsuccessful, and in one case almost a state of war exists. Three large manufacturers employing specialty salesmen are to-day refusing to ship orders through a certain Philadelphia wholesale grocery house. Such controversies are not good for trade, and ought not to exist.

I know, however, why they do exist, at least in some cases. I believe they begin by the specialty salesman overloading certain retailers. This is a mistake for the specialty house, even if the order is filled, for if its goods are perishable a part of them will surely grow stale and inferior before they are sold. Manufacturers are making extraordinary efforts—in other directions—to see that their products get to consumers fresh.

The specialty house makes a second mistake when it takes an unduly large order from a retail dealer, and it is this: The jobber through whom that order is to be shipped knows all about the retailer's buying capacity. If he is a one-case buyer and some specialty salesman gets an order from him for twenty-five cases, the jobber is going to be exceedingly slow about filling it, for two reasons: First, because he knows he always has trouble to collect for an excessively large order; and second, because if a dealer orders too much of one article, he must curtail his purchases of others. The jobber figures that that will disturb his business, and he will always avoid it if he can.

My own belief is that at least half of the specialty manufacturer's trouble over getting jobbers to fill specialty orders promptly, arises because so many of the orders given jobbers to fill are larger than the jobber knows the particular retailer ought to buy.

If anybody thinks this is not true let me cite one case. Not long ago a specialty salesman brought to a local wholesale grocer an order from a retailer for thirty cases of a cereal specialty. The jobber declined to fill it because the dealer was a half-case buyer. Was he right? I think he was from everybody's standpoint, including that of the specialty man. It seems elementary that a buyer whose natural order is half a case ought not to be permitted to buy thirty cases of a perishable product.

In another case a jobber was asked to fill an order for fifteen boxes of soap from a retailer whose natural capacity was one box.

Let the specialty salesman abate his enthusiasm somewhat and undersell rather than oversell his people, and a very large part of the trouble with specialty orders would disappear.

It seems to me that at times the specialty man also forgets another factor in the case. Many of the retailers from whom specialty orders are obtained are small men with a limited line of credit. One of these gives an order for a certain specialty, and at the moment this is presented to the jobber to be shipped, the particular retailer's line of credit is full. Until he makes a payment he can get nothing more. Should the jobber violate his rule, and take for the specialty house the chance he has refused to take for himself? In all fairness, I don't see why. Therefore he waits until the particular retailer makes a payment and thereby reopens his credit, and then he ships the specialty order. At once the specialty man resents the jobber's delay, but has not that delay been thoroughly justified? Frankly it seems to me that it has.

I believe the obligation of a jobber to fill a specialty order which he has accepted is absolute, but always with due regard to conditions that ought to enter into the case.

The buyer's capacity for taking care of the given order; the state of his credit at the time; whether there is a fair jobbing profit in shipping the order at the moment, and so on. The jobber is absolutely right in considering these things and the specialty house ought to see that and admit it.

Ever Noticed This?

YOU may have noted that what advertising we do for Wheatena—it is nothing like as much as some other cereals do—is in peculiarly high class magazines.

That is because the people who buy and continuously use Wheatena are peculiarly high class. If you sell Wheatena you have noticed that in your own business. It's a good kind of people to sell.

Boots Shoes Findings

Rubber Sole Footwear Greatly in Favor. Important Recent Improvements.

Apropos of the article, "Selecting the Rubbers Stock—Cheap Lines No Account," which appeared in this department recently, a prominent New England manufacturer writes the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" as follows:—

I am glad to know that you have taken the initiative, and made some remarks on the rubber sole situation. During the spring and summer of 1915 there will be a great deal of rubber sole footwear worn. There have been so many rubber soles on the market which have cracked and proven unsatisfactory in numerous ways, that the shoe dealer and general store merchant carrying shoes should be thoroughly advised as to what he is up against.

Bearing on these few observations, Chester C. Burnham, an expert on such matters, says that with a curtailed supply and a largely increased demand for heavy leather, such as would ordinarily be cut into soles, the market has steadily advanced until even poor sole leather is quite prohibitive in price for certain grades of shoes. The low-grade sole leather does not wear well and does not satisfy the customer as it should; and consequently the shoe manufacturing and retailing lines have turned to rubber soles, because they are a logical and a satisfactory substitute for sole leather. For years rubber sole shoes, now popular sellers and growing more so every season, have been produced which had limited wearing qualities. They had a number of faults too common and unsatisfactory to permit of their ever attaining a high state of favor with the public. Rubber sole shoes were stocked and sold by merchants because they could be featured for outing wear and other special purposes.

Sole leather of an average quality is quite likely to be filled with epsom salts and various other plumping ingredients, and in actual wear the sole absorbs water readily, and will not stand hard usage or long wear without showing it quickly. A shoe manufacturer of National repute says that the soles, such as are ordinarily put on shoes retailing at $4.50 or $5, do not wear more than ten weeks in continued service, and many of them do not last as long as that, depending on the particular pair of soles used for the test. It is believed, however, there are many retailers and shoe manufacturers who will unite in the verdict that three months' wear is as much as can be reasonably expected of the average leather sole to-day. The average rubber sole will not give anywhere near this amount of service; and many of them will not last six weeks before they will crack, split or tear away at the stitches.

New Spring Sample Lines Ready for Trade. Modifications Announced.

No radical changes in shoe styles for next spring are evident in the advance styles, of which the sample lines are now about ready for the trade. The new offerings will, generally speaking, be modifications of types now in vogue.

In women's boots the long vamp with receding toe, which has been so popular for the past two seasons, is again displayed; also the short vamp with narrow toe, known as the stage last, will be tried out experimentally. So far it has created no great enthusiasm on the part of dealers. Heels will be higher, and of the Louis type. The better grades will be buttoned, with laces confined to standard patterns, walking and outing or sporting types. Patent or shiny leather will be liberally used for vamps, while both kid and cloth, in a variety of cloths, will be used for quarterings or tops.

The demand for boots will be considerably heavier than last spring, as compared with low cuts, because of the strong tendency toward ankle-length skirts. Colonials will continue in popularity as a medium grade seller. With pumps and Oxfords, as with high-topped footwear, combinations of materials will be seen and high, Louis and Cuban heels will be the vogue. The Grow.—Makes little difference whether you gain a few pounds a year in weight, if it comes naturally.

Real growth is mental growth. Mind is the master. If we don't grow up we grow down. Mid course is safe enough in a boat, but it brings you nowhere in business.

Learning is thrust upon us every day, but do we learn for keeps?

A couple weeks ago we talked in this column about jealousy—about it being the result of fear and tried to show how effectually it crippled your advance and necessarily your earning power.

If that article caused you to think, if it hit your case, and hit it hard, so hard that you said to yourself that night, "I'm one of the men, but with heaven's help I'll cure it," if you said this you're growing.

To have a valuable fact demonstrated that would manifestly fit into your life and improve it and then turn around and ignore that fact, is surely placing you on the backward list.

You young men clerks are now at the age when you simply must take the growing stand or be beaten in the race by the fellows who do take it.

The editorial and the general information that are at your disposal in this paper are veritable means of growth of exceedingly vast importance.

Every bit of business information that you can daily glean from men and women and that you put to use is growth.

Every time you see or hear goods described or graded give particular attention to the subject, because that is growing.

Every time you know that a line of canned goods is to be cut, ask the boss if he won't explain for you their different characteristics. In other words why he selected certain peas or corn or tomatoes from others.

That is splendid growth.

Because to fit yourself for a better job means daily, hourly growth in the present job. Just bear that in mind.

The Almighty starts us all right. He gives us unlimited capacities, but how disgracefully we abuse them sometimes.

Get the growth habit, boys, its very interesting, very profitable and will become quite natural after a little practice. It will make you broader and wiser. It will improve your manners and your conversation and will of necessity make you more welcome in society.

of skirts during the past year is responsible for a great deal of the present demand for novelty footwear. In large cities this is more pronounced than in the smaller towns, though the latter are not far behind in declaring their preferences for the most modish styles and smart models.

Men, like women, are wearing lighter footwear, and color combinations are winning considerable favor, but only in the populous centers. Elsewhere the standard shoe is holding its own, and which no great change is being wrought in the lasts. There is a tendency to get away from the narrow toe, medium broad, and slightly receding toe is becoming more popular. Dull calf and patents are the leading leathers. Bohemian tans are also popular. Ballet slippers predominate, but the sale of oxford shoes is increasing. Over-gaiters have come into strong favor again this season. Tipless toes are also being worn to some extent. Dark shades in tans will be the thing for low cuts next spring and summer. For comfort and walking ease the new army marching shoe, in heavy black kid skin, is proving a strong seller.

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

Serges, Gabardines and Poplins Good Sellers.

Serges of all descriptions, gabardines and piece-dyed goods generally are plentiful and have been selling better than anything else since the opening of the season. Broadcloths, thought to be scarce in the grades around $1 a yard and less, are in fair stock, only the high-priced kinds being reported as hard to get and figures have been advanced on these goods several times. Some merchants buying on broadcloths when it was thought there would be famine has resulted in a surplus. In dress goods each serge, gabardines and poplins seem to be the unanimous choice of buyers—jobbers and retailers—from all parts of the compass.

More Snap in Retailing but Buying Conservative.

Colder weather has stimulated the business of retail merchants in a marked degree during the past week. This will help to move out underwear and hosiery of the heavier descriptions, start up trade on blankets and set many lines of woolen goods to moving over the counters. Trade development in both the primary and secondary markets held back by credit conditions, as is referred to in this department at various times in the past few weeks; and this in a greater degree than is commonly admitted. There are manufacturers and wholesalers ready to accept orders from merchants just as soon as overdue balances are made or assured.

Karo Moves Quickly From Your Shelves

You'll find KARO listed on a majority of the orders you receive and your customers ask for it because our advertising has taught them its many uses, while its purity and quality bring them back for more. KARO is easy to sell and the demand for it is increasing throughout the entire year. It moves so quickly and gives such perfect satisfaction to your customers that you will find KARO the most profitable syrup you can handle. Display the well known KARO cans where your customer can see them—you'll find it pays.

Besides its many other uses, KARO (Crystal White) is widely used for home preserving. It will pay you to speak of this to your customers, because KARO pays you more profit than sugar.

ances can be given that unusual financial accommodations will not be required. These conditions, advices are improving.

A lack of confidence has been a cause for hesitation in buying quite as much as any other factor. This is shown best in the houses where sales would gladly be accepted on memorandum; but even when merchants were assured that the sellers were willing to take the risks buyers have been disinclined to add to their obligations. Unless it is for holiday goods for early shipments, the tendency is to hold off purchasing any quantity until after the first of the year.

Hardware Tools Specialties

Short on "Made in Germany" Goods.

A New York hardware firm, whose reputation has been in the process of building for fully 50 years, and in the time has acquired a standing second to none in the country, said to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" last week, apropos of the European war: "On many of our lines American goods have always been handled, and therefore there is no reason to feel any uneasiness; but on certain kinds of merchandise, of German origin exclusively, and on which we have spent years of time and a bunch of money working up an establishing a splendid trade, we are flying signals of distress. Our supply is absolutely cut off, and it is too late in the game for us to attempt substituting something else of domestic make. Our competitors have pre-empted the market with the home goods and would be ruinous for the firm to even attempt meeting sales with other than the original stuff. Yes, we have very small stock, but it does not figure the season's demand from the trade. We do not wish our European brethren any hard luck, but we can and say things in the quiet of our office, hoping, of course, the infernal mix will come to some kind of an end—that—well, never mind the big, big I was about to use, for it won't do any good."

Roller-Bearing Lawn Mowers.

Ball bearing lawn mowers are much talked of, but whether they are a better than the ordinary shaft bearing machines is an open question, according to a manufacturer whose product is known far and wide. In speaking of this to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," he said: "There is a call for a ball bearing blade cylinder mower, but we are satisfied, after careful investigation, coupled with our practical experience as manufacturers covering many years, that the plain shaft is the best. Ball bearing cylinder have objections which are obvious. If you will take it apart and examine the bearings channel, the balls having pin point contact, you will find that but a few of them are actually in commission. Friction wears the surface of the balls unequally. This is brought about in various ways, such as dirt getting in or by the injection of too much oil. Gumming up follows. This means a number of the balls become clogged up and cease to revolve, and presenting but one side to the revolving shaft are soon worn flat at the point of contact. New balls may be substituted, but this is considerable trouble; in the meantime the machine when used runs hard and becomes a burdensome work to the operator.

"Instead of using ball bearings we have fitted up our mowers with roller bearings in the journal, but only when the dealer so specifies. We are firmly convinced that the plain shaft bearings are the best and that ball bearings are more of a fancy—a fad, if you please—than a real improvement. The rollers are much superior for bearings than balls, as the points of contact are the entire length of the roller and not pin points. This means the friction is distributed evenly and there is far less danger—in fact, impossible, it may be said—of surface abrasion. We consider this a decided improvement in connection with up-to-date lawn mowers."

Influence of Live Wire Wholesalers.

Speaking of the new Federal Reserve Banks and their conjectured competition with the established financial institutions, the "Public Ledger" says:—

In reality the banks feared a loss through a new competitor, but they know already that it isn't going to hurt them. That's been the rule in every direction. I believe I once quoted Wallace D. Simmons, head of the world's biggest hardware concern, to the effect that when he moved from St. Louis to Philadelphia he expected to build up a big business here, but at the same time make business for all other wide-awake hardware men in Philadelphia. That's what has occurred. The dispenser of "Keen Cutters," who is as keen as any blade he sells, knew that trade makes trade.

The Quaker City hardware trade, wholesale, freely and cordially acknowledge this to be a fact. The Simmons Co., with its progressive, broad policies, has in reality proven a blessing in disguise. The trade admit much has happened in the last couple of years to prove this assertion.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change and comparatively light demand. The holiday interfered somewhat with business, as it always does. Prices show no change worth noting, and there is no important change in sight.

Coffee.

The coffee market is still unchanged and quiet, with conditions more in buyer's favor than in seller's. All grades of Rio and Santos coffees are unchanged on last week's basis; demand quiet. Milds show no change for the week. Java is also unchanged and quiet, but there is some little disposition on the part of holders to advance Mocha slightly.

Sugar.

Sugar is unchanged from a week ago. Raws are a very small fraction higher, and seem to show a firmer undertone. Refined is unchanged on the basis of 5.10 cents for granulated, though practically all refiners will sell at 5 cents. No immediate change seems in sight. The consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Fish.

Mackerel is unchanged for the week, with the market, particularly for Norways, still uncertain and unsettled. The demand is light. Irish mackerel about unchanged and quiet. Salmon of all grades remain unchanged and quiet. Domestic sardines unchanged and fairly active; imported sardines scarce and firm. Cod, hake and haddock steady and unchanged.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged and dull, as are compound and sugar syrup, although compound syrup is in better demand than sugar syrup. New molasses has advanced about 3 cents per gallon from the lowest point reached since the opening.

Butter.

The butter market is active, with a good consumptive demand at prevailing prices. The quality of butter arriving is fully up to the standard, but the make is short. The market is in a healthy condition, and we do not look for any great change from the present prices. All grades are in short supply, and meet with ready sale on arrival.

Eggs.

New-laid eggs continue to be very scarce and meet with ready sale on arrival at the top market quotations. Western eggs and storage eggs are only in moderate demand and have to be sold at prices ranging considerably below the price of the best stock. We are not likely to have any increase in the supply for about a month. In the meantime, we do not look for much change in prices.

Cheese.

The market on all grades of cheese remains unchanged, with only a fair consumptive demand, which is characteristic of the season. Cheese is now slightly lower than a year and stocks are about the same. We not look for any change until the last of the year and we then a better consumptive demand and market is likely to advance a little.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat remains steady, with unchanged price and a seasonable demand. Pure lard firm, with a good demand, but we not look for any change in prices in the next week. Compound is with an increased demand, at about a cent advance over a week ago. Cured pork, canned meats and dried are all steady, with a light demand and unchanged prices.

Canned Goods.

There is practically no change in little demand for tomatoes. Corn peas are still in moderate request with no advance or decline in price. The general pack of Baltimore is it without feature and only in seasonable demand. York State No. 10 are still offering at very low figures but not many orders are being received.

Pea beans are quite active, with sharp advance, as noted last week. the possibility of still higher prices the season advances. Marrows and kidneys are also higher and very Green and Scotch and split peas are constantly advancing, with demand and stocks light.

Dried Fruits.

In dried fruits there is very business done in anything. There is change in the market, except as prunes, which are higher on the coast.

Hoof and Mouth Disease Will Affect Meat.

Government Supplies Meat Dealers With Useful Information to Give Customers in Order to Prevent Possible Curtailment of Demand for Meat

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

November 27, 1911.

According to the specialists of the Department of Agriculture, people even in States quarantined for the foot-and-mouth disease have no fear of eating meat, provided they cook it thoroughly. The foot-and-mouth disease is not easily communicated to human beings through food, although milk from a diseased cow might transmit the disease to a human being. In the case of milk, however, pasteurization will render it entirely safe. Human beings who do get the disease commonly get it from direct contact with a sick animal.

wisest, therefore, for people to keep away from all animals having the disease, unless they are properly provided with rubber gloves, coats and boots, and these are thoroughly disinfected after each visit to the animals.

In the case of meat, as in the case of milk, it must be remembered that all herds which actually show the disease are quarantined, and neither milk nor meat from the sick animals can be sold. Sixty per cent. of the meat used in this country is produced in the nearly 900 Federally inspected slaughtering and packing establishments located in 240 cities. In these establishments no animal is slaughtered until it has passed an ante-mortem inspection and also a most rigid post-mortem inspection by a veterinarian at time of slaughter. After slaughter its meat cannot leave the establishment until it has been carefully examined and stamped "U. S. Inspected and Passed." In all these establishments no animal showing any symptoms whatever of foot-and-mouth disease is allowed to go to slaughter and no meat which, on post-mortem inspection, shows any suspicious symptoms of this complaint can be shipped out of the establishment. All meat suspected of coming from an animal suffering with this complaint is sent, under Government seal, to the tanks to be rendered into fertilizer. The Federal inspection stamp on meat, therefore, means that it is entirely safe.

The Federal Government, however, has no jurisdiction over local slaughter houses which do not ship meat outside of the State in which it is slaughtered. If, however, meat from such an animal did escape from one of these local slaughter houses, which are purely under State or municipal control, all danger of its communicating the disease to human beings would be removed when it is thoroughly cooked and sterilized. Those who are located near an infected region and wish to be absolutely certain of the safety of their meat should cook it thoroughly.

The disease when contracted by adults is not at all a serious illness. It commonly takes the form of slight fever, sores in the mouth and a slight eruption on the fingers. In the case of small or sickly children, it may take a more serious form, especially if complicated by other illnesses.

If this plan of display were followed, this circular would be completely transformed, for beginning with "Brooms" and below, it is well put together, so far as the type arrangement goes. Above "Brooms" it is a mere hodge podge of gether with all other matter, such as telephone connections, should invariably go at the bottom of an advertisement, and putting it at the top puts the cart before the horse, and by sacrificing the chance of a strong headline, actually, I believe, reduces the chance of getting results. So much for the typographical part of this circular.

Of course, there is very little here but a price list. Outside of one article, lard, not a word of argument has been used for anything advertised here. Mr. Dressner seems to be chiefly relying on price, which as an advertising proposition, he will probably come to see in time, is a mistake. When the main thing that you have to offer customers is low price, you are under the constant strain of having to offer more and more of the same all the time; of not only having to outdo your competitor, but also having to outdo yourself. It is a wretched situation to have people buy of you only because they think you are cheaper than other people. No ordinary merchant can possibly hold the pace for long. More than that, the minute somebody cuts under you, your whole argument is gone. If I were a retail merchant I should not rest until I had put myself in a position where I could offer something which was not duplicated at every other store in my town. It might be special brands and qualities of goods, or it might be service. With the average merchant, it could never be price, because there is no royal road to cheap buying or to reduction of store expenses. He is a very foolish merchant, I think, who attempts to persuade the public that he always or even usually sells cheaper than other stores. Unless he is a very large buyer and an unusual merchant, this cannot possibly be true, and he will find the public exceedingly exacting in such matters.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

The Toy Famine Is Broken!

In the last three weeks our houses have received several thousand cases of Imported Toys, Dolls and other Holiday Goods which left Europe after the war started. Other lots are arriving daily.

These reinforcements have enabled us to restore many Holiday items dropped from our November catalogue, and to make our line strong in the very goods in which the market shortage has been most acute.

The pages of our December catalogue, now in the mails, show how complete our Holiday selection is in practically every department of both imported and domestic Holiday Goods.

No customer of Butler Brothers need contract his Holiday profits through inability to get a proper selection and an ample supply.

One Reason I'm Glad I'm Poor.

D'ye know, when I get to thinking it over sometimes, I'm glad I ain't got any money put by, and that I live in a rented house, and that all I have is what I make, which same is spent as soon as I make it, and believe me sometimes before I make it.

Know why I feel that way? Because if I had something I might some time go crazy and put it in somebody else's name.

Gee whiz, of all the blamed fool tricks I think that's the worst. Why it's simply selling yourself out as a slave, that's all it is. "Oh, I know she'll do the right thing" or "he'll do the right thing." That's what everybody says when they put what they have in somebody else's name. But suppose they don't do the right thing, what then? You're in one hen of a box, ain't you? Take it from me, getting back stuff you've put in somebody else's name is a job that makes unscrambling a scrambled egg look like a cinch.

I know a fellow up State that put everything he had in his sister's name last March. He ain't married and he and his old maid sister live together over the store. He's lived quiet all his life and he had quite some stuff to turn. He had the store building and three little houses, and the business—it ran up into about $14,000.

I've never been wise to the reason he put all this stuff in somebody else's name. A fellow told me he was sick and thought he was going to die and he wanted her to have it because he didn't like the idea of what he had getting into the courts. I believe he got stung once in a lawsuit and ever since that he thinks courts are places where they skin you alive and then rub salt on you.

Anyway, he did it—did it good and hard.

Up to that time sister was a good quiet little girl. She hadn't a cent except what she got from him. He supported her for keeping house for him and of course she had to go along. They tell me she never even tried to do anything else.

And for a while after the stuff was turned over to her she didn't, either. But a little later it began to work and she started to wake up to the fact that she was it.

Why the poor simp even had the bank account put in her name. She had to sign all the checks—wouldn't that make you sick at your stomach?

It seems he got over what ailed him again and the doctor told him that he ought to live for forty years yet. But when he asked sister to come back with the stuff, sister got deaf in both ears. She got a lawyer and he told her she oughtn't to do it unless he'd give her half of it outright. She'd stayed by him and helped earn it, is what the lawyer said, and she ought to stand up for her rights.

Can you beat it?

Understand, she hadn't come to this all at once. She'd been feeling her oats quite a bit—even got up on her hind legs (by the way, my wife says I oughtn't to come right out and say "legs," I ought to say "limbs." Oh Clarence!) she got up on her hind limbs and wouldn't sign some of the checks!

Say, wouldn't that have made you wild? Me, I'd have smacked little sister somewhere and smacked her hard. Wouldn't sign checks on my money, eh! Get down here across my knee! Bing!

Now that's where the thing stands now. Real home-like and comfortable, ain't it, to go home to a sister like that? For of course they're still living together—neither of 'em can get away.

But here's the worst of it—he wants to get married! Between you and me, that's what's eating sister. She sees an end coming to her little cinch. Chance is she'd have to go to work, or else be hired girl in what she's been thinking was her own house. You can blame sister for sitting up nights and thinking hard.

He can't get married the way things are, for his sister can beat him right out of everything. A mix-up it a — of a mix-up?

I told him he ought to get a lawyer himself. He wouldn't go near a lawyer again if he had to sell his shirt!

"Oh, fuss!" I said, "all lawyers ain't got horns. She's got a lawyer and you'll have to too before you get out of this. You take my advice and go down the first thing tomorrow morning and hire the best man you can get."

He said he wouldn't do any more thing, but I'll bet he will in the end. What he ought to do is to start cutting sister's fingers off. By the time she had three of 'em off I'll bet she'll give back the stuff. Maybe she'll only have to cut one off.

When you "ain't got nothing" you can't put it in anybody else's name, that's a cinch.

The Johnstown association is very active and is taking up the evils one at a time and correcting them.

The Allentown association is making a determined effort to stop retailing by wholesalers. One large concern refuses to co-operate.

The awards in the Ad-writing Contest on the subject of Ivins' Purity-Guarantee will appear in the issue of December 7, 1914 earnest effort will be made to have his concern get in line. Meetings of the association are well attended and the interest in association work is gaining ground.

The Pittsburg association has engaged counsel to prepare a bill regulating the giving of trading stamps and will present it to the next Legislature for action.

The Sharpsburg association held a well attended meeting on November 19th.

The Allentown association has added nineteen new members since the fall rally. This organization will be a success.

Merchants of St. Clair believe in home buying, hence their indignant protest at their Borough Council buying city supplies outside the borough without first giving the merchants an opportunity to compete.

One of the best association bulletins in the State is issued by the Pottsville association calling the members' attention to the regular meetings and advising the members of things done and to be accomplished.

The Titusville association is very much alive and is taking keen interest in the Pennsylvania Plan.

Merchants of Carnegie met for organization on November 19th. Messrs. Durbin, Bell, Wolf and a number of other members of the Pittsburg association had charge of the meeting.

Ralph E. Wood has been appointed secretary of the New Brighton association. A membership campaign has just been started that, it is hoped, will result in the membership being doubled.

Lock Haven is arranging for its big banquet in January. Secretary Elliott has a big association on his hands but is receiving loyal support.

The organizer spent November 16th and 17th with the Bradford business men, holding meetings on the evening of each day. The meeting on the 16th was for grocers only. The attendance was good and trade evils were discussed and remedies suggested. On the evening of the 17th we held an open meeting for all business men. The attendance was good and the meeting was full of enthusiasm. Arrangements were made for forward work. Luncheon was served at the conclusion of the business session.

Bradford is a splendid business town and its merchants are alive, wide-awake business men. Secretary Dobie is one of the best secretaries in the State and is always on the firing line.

The Pittsburg Grocers' Association held an open meeting on November 18th at the Century Building. The room was crowded with grocers. John A. Green, secretary National Association of Retail Grocers, delivered a stirring address. Organizer Smedley also addressed the meeting. Secretaries Wood, of Butler; Spotts, of Tarentum, and Wolf, of Allegheny, also spoke. Mr. Thompson, of the Corn Products Co., also made a brief talk. Lunch was served and a full orchestra added to the pleasure of the evening. President Durbin and Secretary Bell are making a strenuous effort to secure one thousand members before the next convention. The association has passed the 500 mark.

The Latrobe association has been organized about six months, but during that time it has accomplished a lot of things beneficial alike to the merchants and to the public. On November 19th the association gave a luncheon to the merchants, their wives, clerks, etc. Over 300 were in attendance. Music, good talks and a general good fellowship made the evening one long to be remembered.

The organizer addressed the merchants of Rochester, Pa., on November 20th. The attendance was fair, but the interest was splendid. An Executive Committee was appointed to further the work and to arrange for a mass meeting of all merchants.

The Ambridge association had an attendance of 62 at its last meeting.

Mr. Smedley will speak at Orwigsburg on November 30th; Wellsboro, December 3d; Catawissa, December 4th; Washington, December 7th; New Castle, December 8th; Williamsport, December 10th; Williamsport Board of Trade, December 11th.

Cold Weather Specialties:

Fresh Sausage, Scrapple, Souse, Liver Pudding

Burk's Fresh Sausage

Composed entirely of selected tender pieces of pork, not the ordinary trimmings commonly used. Not cheapened in price and quality by the addition of tripe, boiled rice and sundry substitutes. Correctly seasoned, not offensive to sensitive stomachs because of pungent herbs. Nutritious. In four styles—hashed fine and coarse, linked and in straight casings.

Burk's Philadelphia Scrapple

Prepared from the very best materials—good, wholesome meats and extra fine corn meal. Well boiled and seasoned to suit the most critical. Not to be compared with some cheap products of doubtful hues and colors. Burk's eats as good as it looks. Superior to farmers' products. In pans of 15 pounds each.

Burk's Pig Souse

is a seasonable specialty prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock. Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pig's feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Burk's Liver Pudding

Of the usual "Burk" standard—clean and unadulterated. Rich in quality and an excellent dish when fried, or, after removing the casing, hashed with potatoes. In rings of 1 pound each.

CCLXXXVII.—When You Can Tell Fellow-Members of an Association That a Customer is Slow Pay.

Every retail association in existence either has a credit department or hopes to have one some time. The same can be said of many wholesale organizations. Every association that already has a credit department, or expects to have one, confronts the chance of circulating derogatory reports about some consumer which will lead to a damage suit.

By credit department I mean a department through which reports of consumers' financial standing, promptness in paying bills, etc., are circulated among the members. Where the members act frankly and in good faith, such a credit department can be made to give almost absolute protection against bad debtors.

I have been furnished with the report of a case involving the right of an association, and of a member of an association, to supply for other members, information regarding the financial status of a consumer. The case is typical, and very interesting. It was brought against a physician as a member of a local association of physicians, but the law is of course the same no matter what business the defendant is in.

The plaintiff in the case I am discussing was a former patient of the defendant, who was a member of an association of the physicians of a certain city. These physicians determined to prepare for their own use a list of the names of patients who were slow in making payment for medical services rendered to them. The information was for the benefit of the members only of the Medical Association, and there was no understanding between them that professional services should be refused to those whose names appeared upon the list. The defendant, a woman doctor, was a member of this association, and she furnished to the secretary, among other names of persons whom she regarded as able to pay, but who were slow in making payment for services, the name of the plaintiff. The list of names thus reported as slow pay was printed by the association with the number of the physician who furnished the name added. There was nothing upon the face of the publication to indicate its purpose, and no one but a member could understand its meaning. The publication was considered confidential and was confined to members of the association.

The patient whose name was classified among the slow pays in some way found that fact out, and promptly brought suit against the doctor who had certified his name for libel. Of course if the patient in question had not been slow, the statement that he was would have been published libel. But in a civil suit like this, the truth of the charge is always a good defense, and therefore if it could be proven that the patient was slow pay, the case would have to fall.

The case was tried and collapsed completely, as any case like it would collapse if the credit department complained against has been conducted properly and within the law. The court held as follows:—

1.—There was no evidence that the plaintiff had been damaged by the report that he was slow pay.

2.—One doctor had a perfect right to certify to the others who were members of his association the fact that a patient with whom he had had dealings was slow pay.

3.—There was no evidence that there was anything malicious about what the doctor did.

4.—The statement that the plaintiff was slow pay was true, as proven by the evidence.

Anybody who is accused of being slow pay, and who knows that he has been, seems very reckless when he goes to law about it, but the world is full of reckless people, and any dead beat who is certified as such is liable at any time to sue the merchant responsible, in the hope that he will pay a small sum rather than go into court. And doubtless many would, though they ought not to, where the case is evidently a straight hold up.

Any association can circulate among its members, with perfect safety and legality, credit information about present or former customers, provided the following requirements are complied with:—

1.—No customer should be cited as slow pay or delinquent if the debt is disputed. Before citing such a customer get judgment against him, and you can then cite him safely.

2.—The financial status of the particular customer, in the list sent to members, should be indicated by some simple cipher, known only to the members. Such as A for first credit, B for fair credit, C for slow pay, D for very slow pay and doubtful, and so on. On no account should the list be so framed as to convey any information to a consumer into whose hands it might fall.

3.—There should not be any arrangement among the members that credit should be refused customers under the C and D classes. That might be considered a conspiracy, and doubtless would be. Such an agreement is surely unnecessary with sensible men, anyway. If a merchant could not make up his mind whether to sell a consumer applying for credit, whose report was given as "D—very slow pay and doubtful," he could hardly be held by an agreement.

Following the above suggestion will not prevent an association of an association member from being sued, but it will prevent the getting of any verdict for damages.

(Copyright, November, 1914, by Elton J. Buckley.)

Question: * * *, Arendtsvi Pa.—As a subscriber to your journal I would like to ask a question. We are selling a good bulk coffee and we want to give premiums with it; for instance, a cask of glassware but instead of packing the prize it we want to write out on slips of pasteboard what the customer will receive for each pound of coffee sold. The glassware will be of different sizes and articles as small dessert dishes, salts and pepper large fruit dishes, arranging prices from 5 cents to 15 cents, give along with each pound of coffee sold. Dare we do it? There will be no blanks with the coffee. Each customer will receive a premium. We intend showing these articles on a table by themselves and selling the coffee from our grocery counter. Will it be lawful for us to do this? For instance, some stranger would come in here and buy a pound and would want to cause trouble. We want to be on the safe side.

Answer.—I see no legal reason why you should not pack in your coffee packages slips of paper calling for a premium, provided the premiums which the slips call for are of about the same value. That is true there is no lottery, because there is no chance—each customer knows what extra value she is going to get. If, however, there is a wide variance in the value of the premiums, then the plan is a lottery, for there is an unknown chance for which a consumer is paying something. The State lottery laws are very seldom enforced, however, and the chance is that you would not be interfered with, even if the latter condition is present.

Question: * * *, Philadelphia Pa.—Please give some information regarding the law passed in 1913 in Pennsylvania by which a person against whom judgment has been gotten can be taken into court and made to tell about his financial affairs.

Answer.—This act is known as the act for the oral examination of debtors. It is an exceedingly valuable law, in my judgment, most however, for the moral effect which the threat to use it usually has. Many a debtor who is really evading execution proof will borrow the money and pay the debt, rather than be turned inside out in open court.

The act provides that where a creditor has gotten judgment against a debtor, and the sheriff has been unable to find any goods or property belonging to the debtor within the county, the creditor can file a little petition reciting the above facts and stating that in his judgment the debtor has property somewhere which is subject to the judgment. The court issues a subpoena and the debtor is brought into court. You can then ask him all about his property. Has he any real estate or personal property, either in his own name or somebody else's; has he stocks or bonds, or a bank account, or household goods, or anything. And particularly, does anybody owe him money, for you can attach a debt like that in the other man's hands. This kind of an inquisition is not pleasant, and debtors will usually go pretty far to avoid it.

The procedure will of course be known to any lawyer, but I give it here:—

1.—Issue writ. Whether from the court or from a magistrate or justice of the peace, depends on the size of the claim.

2.—Get judgment on the claim.

3.—Issue execution. If you can find nothing belonging to the defendant, and the case is before a magistrate or justice of the peace, get a transcript of the judgment and file it in the office of the Prothonotary, who is clerk of the Common Pleas Court. Issue execution again—this time it will go through the sheriff's office. Let the sheriff make a return of "nulla bona" (no goods) and you can then file your petition, which I have outlined above.

4.—If the case is not in a magistrate's office, or justice of the peace, on account of the size of the claim, the first writ of execution you issue will of course be through the sheriff's office.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Sell FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR Instead of Bothering with Bags

One of our machines can fill 127 CARTONS with FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the time it takes to fill, fold and tie a paper bag. There are 127 more sensible things to do in a grocery store than put up sugar; it's not only a foolish waste of time, even if the boy does it, but besides the cost of the labor you must also take the cost of the bags and the twine and the loss from overweight out of the slender margin of profit.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is ready to sell when you get it; it's as handy as cans of tomatoes or bottles of pickles. It's a tight, neat, clean, convenient, sanitary package that will please your customers as much as yourself. The CARTON does not burst on the way to a customer's home and let the sugar get over everything in the basket or box, it does not burst or fall over and spill when customers handle it. Women like its cleanliness; they like the sparkling white purity of the sugar. Once you start them buying it, they will always buy it.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

Potato Quarantine Amended.

The United States Department of Agriculture has made an amendment to the potato quarantine. Hereafter, it is announced, if any foreign potatoes, which have been brought into the United States without fulfilling all requirements of the law, are found included in lots of domestic potatoes, no certificate for inspection for powdery scab will be issued by the Federal authorities. The Secretary of Agriculture has issued an amendment to the rules and regulations of the potato quarantine to this effect. The amendment reads:—

e. No potatoes brought into the United States in violation of any foreign potato quarantine or in violation of any of the regulations governing the importation of potatoes into the United States and no domestic potatoes mingled therewith will be inspected.

The amendment has been made necessary by the fact that small quantities of potatoes have been brought across the Canadian border in violation of the farm potato quarantine.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

SECOND PRIZE

When the Cook Is Sick

A customer told us his wife was sick and could not do her baking. “Have you any good cakes?” he asked. We had. We showed him Ivins' and let him sample them. Then we showed him

IVINS' PURITY GUARANTEE

“My!” said he, “that's some guarantee. I never fancied ‘store’ cakes much, but this surprises me.” And he ordered some dainty crackers for the sick wife and some substantial cakes for the three kids at home.

The wife has since recovered her health, but she is still buying Ivins' Cakes in preference to baking her own, because she believes in

THE PURITY GUARANTEE because she knows there is no hidden ill or mysterious sickness in Ivins' goods, and because it's easier to buy than to bake.

Ivins' Cakes and Crackers are delicious, moderate in price and

THE PURITY GUARANTEE protects you absolutely as to quality.

Let us include some samples in your next order.

New War Tax Law Will Affect Pretty Nearly All Business People

Dealers in Toilet Articles, Chewing Gum and Tobacco, Will Pay Tax Either Through Stamps or Fixed Yearly Fee. List of Direct Taxes Imposed on Various Occupations and Stamp Taxes on Various Documents. Stocks on Hand Must be Stamped Before Being Sold.

The new war tax law, which went into effect last Tuesday, December 1st, although it is not absolutely in force everywhere even yet because of the Government's failure to supply sufficient stamps, imposes the following direct taxes, and no others:—

Bankers, $1 on each $1,000 capital used.
Brokers (stock, bond, etc.), $30.
Pawnbrokers, $50.
Commercial or merchandise broker, $20.
Custom House broker, $10.
Theatres, $25 to $100, according to seating capacity.
Circuses, $100.
Public Exhibitions, $10.
Bowling alleys and billiard rooms, $5 for each alley or table.
Commission merchants, $20.
Retail tobacco dealers selling more than $200 yearly, $4.80.

Persons other than the above pay their share of the war tax in the shape of stamps to be attached to various articles and papers, as follows:—

Perfumery, cosmetics, essence, extract, toilet water, vaseline, petrolatum, hair oil, pomade, hair dressing, hair restorative, hair dye, tooth wash, dentrifice, tooth paste, aromatic cachous or any similar substance or article, $\frac{1}{8}$ cent stamp if bottle does not exceed 5 cents; 2-8 cent stamp where value does not exceed 10 cents; $\frac{3}{8}$ cent stamp where value does not exceed 15 cents; $\frac{5}{8}$ cent stamp where value does not exceed 25 cents.

Chewing gum, 4-cent stamp for each box, carton, jar or other package containing chewing gum not exceeding $1 in value; 4-cent stamp for each additional dollar in value or fraction thereof.

Retailers with stocks of these articles on hand must buy the stamps and put them on. All the "values" mentioned above mean retail values.

The main use for the stamps, however, will be for documents of various kinds. Following is the official list:—

1. Bonds, debentures or certificates of indebtedness of any association, company or corporation, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents.

2. On each original issue of certificates of stock, whether on organization or reorganization, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents.

On all sales, agreements to sell, memoranda of sales, deliveries or transfers of shares or certificates of stock of any association or corporation, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents.

3. Upon each sale, agreement to sell, or agreement of sale of any products or merchandise at any exchange or board of trade, for future delivery, for each $100 in value of said sale, 1 cent.

And for each $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 1 cent.

4. Promissory notes (except bank notes issued for circulation), and for each renewal of same, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents.

And for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof, in excess of $100, 2 cents.

5. Bills of lading, manifests, etc., issued by express companies, or public carriers, etc., where a charge exceeding 5 cents is made, a stamp to each of the value of 1 cent.

6. Bond, indemnifying, etc. (except those required in legal proceedings), not otherwise provided for, 50 cents.

7. Certificates of profit or certificates of memorandum showing interest in the property or accumulations of any association, company or corporation, and all transfers thereof, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents.

8. Certificates of damage, or otherwise, and all other certificates or documents issued by port warden or marine surveyor, 25 cents.

9. Certificates of any description required by law, not otherwise specified, 10 cents.

10. Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods or merchandise, stock, bonds, exchange, notes of hand, real estate or property of any kind, issued by brokers, etc., for each note or memorandum of sale not otherwise provided for, 10 cents.

11. Conveyance—deed, instrument or writing conveying lands, tenements or other realty, etc., value over $100 and not exceeding $500, 50 cents.

For each additional $500 or fraction thereof, 50 cents.

12. Entry of goods, wares and merchandise in custom house, not exceeding $100 in value, 25 cents.

Exceeding $100 and not exceeding $500, 50 cents.

Exceeding $500 in value, $1.

13. Entry for withdrawal of goods or merchandise from customs bonded warehouse, 50 cents.

14. Insurance, marine, inland and fire or lightning (except purely co-operative or mutual), on each policy or renewal, on amount of premium charged on each \$1 or fractional part, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent.

15. Insurance, casualty, fidelity and guarantee, on each policy, on each \$1 or fractional part thereof of premium charged, $\frac{1}{2}$ cent.

16. Passage ticket, for each passenger, sold in the United States for passage by any vessel to a foreign port or place, cost not exceeding $30, $1.

More than $30 and not exceeding $60, $3.

More than $60, $5.

Cost not exceeding $10 exempt.

17. Power of attorney or proxy for voting at an election for officers of any incorporated company or association, except religious, charitable, literary societies or public cemeteries, $10 cents.

18. Power of attorney to sell or convey real estate or to rent or lease the same, to collect or receive rent, to sell or transfer stock, bonds, etc., 25 cents.

(Papers used in the collection of pension, back pay or bounty claims or claims for property lost in military or naval service are exempt.)

19. Protest: Upon the protest of every note, bill of exchange, acceptance, check or draft, or any marine protest, 25 cents.

20. Telegraph and telephone messages: Every person, firm or corporation operating any telephone lines or lines is required to make, within 30 days after the expiration of each month, a sworn statement to the collector of the number of messages or conversations transmitted over their lines during preceding months for which a charge of 15 cents or more was imposed, and for each of such messages or conversations a tax shall be paid of 1 cent.

21. Every seat sold in a palace or parlor car and every berth sold in a sleeping car to be paid by the company selling the same, 1 cent.

It is made illegal to utter, that is to pass to another person, any of the above documents which do not bear their proper stamp.

Contributor Sharply Scores Habit of Deducting Unearned Discounts.

Gives Some of the Arguments That Come From Retailers Who do This. All Fallacious and Unfair. What Cash Discounts Mean Figured by Year.

The abuse of the cash discount is a subject that has been extensively handled by pen, and largely dilated upon by the tongue, for the last decade or score of years, in an effort to correct, if possible, but seemingly without result, the abuse to which the cash discount has been and is still being put by arbitrary and unscrupulous business people. The practice of unduly claiming the discount, when not earned, is apparently on the increase instead of on the wane; and aside from its provoking and unbusinesslike feature, it not only is costly to the seller, but is as unfair and wilfully exacting as it is unjust and morally wrong, and without any semblance of reason or vindication.

A halt, therefore, should be called by the honest business community in every section of this country, as the misapplication of the cash discount is not confined to any one or particular locality. The custom or habit, whatever word one cares to substitute, seems to prevail in every quarter.

It is a notorious fact that cases are common in which customers take the liberty of discounting bills in ten, fifteen and twenty days after the date in which they are privileged to do so; and there are others also more bold and with less conscience, who, despite the terms to the contrary, will flagrantly assert their right to the deduction in thirty, forty, fifty, yes, even in sixty days from date of the invoice. This assertion might appear exaggerated, but its veracity is supported by facts and evidence. And, to cap the climax, if the remittance is declined on the ground of such a settlement and returned to the sender, calling his attention to what is presumed is an error of inadvertence, and setting forth to him with as much emphasis as business courtesy will dictate that the terms are "thirty days net, or 1 per cent. for cash, strictly in ten days from date of invoice," and not as he interpreted them—that he is not entitled to the discount, six times out of ten cases the check is remailed to the seller with a subterfuge in extenuation of his despotic settlement, reading like this:—

No. 1. "We always claim the cash discount ten days from receipt of goods."

Now this customer knows better. He knows that if he wishes to avail himself of the discount he must pay the bill in ten days from its date, whether or not the goods have been received. The fact that he takes the discount around the maturity period defeats the very object for which the cash discount was established, as will be explained further.

Other flimsy pleas often called into play for making the discount deduction are:—

No. 2. "We have taken the discount because we did not receive your invoice in time to make remittance in the days allowed."

No. 3. "In deference to you and your restrictions in re discount, I claim same by right of custom. Other dealers allow same, and if you care for my business you'll have to fall in line."

There you are, against a veritable Rock of Gibraltar. He dictates the terms.

No. 4. "Your salesman told us we could take our time in making remittance and then take discount."

The salesman being confronted with the charge disclaims all knowledge of having made any such promise as to terms; and as his truthfulness is not to be questioned, one can make his own conclusion as to the tenability of the excuse offered.

No. 5. "Because you overcharged us on certain goods—which we can buy elsewhere at less cost—we felt that we ought to get the cash discount if we made no 'kick.'"

No. 6. "As your goods are now out of season, and therefore unsalable at this time, rather than ask for future dating, we have decided to pay for same now, taking the liberty of deducting the 1 per cent. cash discount."

No. 7. "If you will not permit the discount to stand tell your salesman never to solicit my trade any more."

Excuses galore of this same attenuated character could be here enumerated. As they are not at all delectable reading to the honest business man, and likewise trying to the eyes—but more trying to the soul to assimilate—let the few mentioned above suffice to show to what extent the cash discount is made to suffer. They give an idea to what extremes some people will resort in order to secure that to which they are not entitled by one jot or tittle. A great many believe, too, that it is theirs by a kind of war-rantable right, on the assumption that cash discount is on the same plane as that of trade discount.

It may be well to submit the following, so that your readers may see what they are losing when they fail to discount their bills:—

½ per cent. cash discount in 30 days means 9 per cent. per annum.

1 per cent. cash discount in 30 days means 18 per cent. per annum.

2 per cent. cash discount in 30 days means 36 per cent. per annum.

3 per cent. cash discount in 30 days means 54 per cent. per annum.

6 per cent. cash discount in 30 days means 108 per cent. per annum.

1 per cent. cash discount in 60 days means 7½ per cent. per annum.

2 per cent. cash discount in 60 days means 14½ per cent. per annum.

Meat Men Fighting Proposed Five Per Cent. Increase in Freights.

Tell Interstate Commerce Commission That it Would Increase Nations Meat Bill $20,000,000. It Would Cost $34.70 More to Ship a Car of Meat From Omaha to New York.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

December 2, 1914.

The American Meat Packers' Association is fighting hard against the proposed 5 per cent. increase in freight rates, on the ground that if granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission it would add $20,000,000 to the nation's meat bill. Counsel for the association appeared before the Commission last week and argued that as meat was more largely shipped than any other one commodity, the 5 per cent. increase would get out of meat alone $20,000,000 of the $50,000,000 increased revenue which the railroads expected the increase to yield all told. The 5 per cent. increase would mean $34.70 per car more on meat shipped from Omaha to New York.

The following meat concerns have filed protests against the increase with the Commission:—

Wilmington—Wilmington Provision Co.

Pittsburg—J. M. Denholm Bros., Dunlevy & Bro. Co., Duquesne Packing Co., Fried & Reinman, Henry Lohrey, North Side Packing Co., Rea & Co., John Seiler Co., Pittsburg Provision and Packing Co., William Zoller Co.

WITH THE EDITOR

False Pride.

We reproduce the following from a recent issue of the Philadelphia "Public Ledger":—

To the Editor of the "Public Ledger."

Sir:—You will please pardon me if I find fault with your heading to my letter in to-day's "Public Ledger" on the increase in fares in its relation to traveling men and those living in the suburbs. You do an injustice to that great body of men who are representatives of the commercial life of the country to-day when you refer to them as "drummers." There is a distinction and a very wide difference between a drummer, who goes from door to door soliciting orders, and the men who represent the millions of capital invested in commercial life, which requires diplomacy, tact and business ability of a high order. "Drumming" is one thing and the direct representation of capital invested is another. The canvasser or drummer pays but little fare on railroads.

WM. R. MOFFATT,
President of the National Confectionery Salesmen's Association.
Philadelphia, Nov. 27, 1914.

This seems just a little like false pride. Something like the idea of the National Canners' Association that canned goods should be called canned foods.

Moreover, Mr. Moffatt is wrong in his definition of "drummer." Webster's dictionary defines drummer as "one who solicits; a commercial traveler." According to standard authority, therefore, there is no difference between a salesman and a drummer, but even if there was, what of it? The two have been used interchangeably for years, and both are respectable and everybody knows what they mean. Why fuss?

The retail grocers of New York City, especially those who are organized together in the various associations in Greater New York, are going into politics in order to fight the city's plan of opening municipal markets. The city's idea is that through these markets farmers and truckmen can come into the city and offer their produce directly to consumers. The plan cannot be objected to, as we see it. Certainly a farmer is permitted by law to sell direct to consumers, and certainly if he is honest and fair he can sell produce cheaper and sell it fresher than any retail grocer. There is no use denying that. When we say that the plan cannot be objected to, therefore, we are speaking from the consumer's standpoint wholly. Naturally the plan will take some business from the dealers, and that is to be regretted, but opposition would be exceedingly unpopular that was founded only on that.

We do not expect the campaign of the New York dealers to succeed, for that reason. They are fighting for their own interest solely. This they have a perfect right to do, but nevertheless their position is purely selfish. It says in effect, "even if the market plan will let the farmer and the consumer get together; even though it will reduce for the consumer the high cost of living, we are against the markets because they take business from us." Is that a good argument? We think not. Not only is it poor, but it is dangerous, for it seems to justify the complaint that the middleman is not needed and can only keep his place by artificial aid.

During the past week a well known manufacturer fell into conversation with a

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" representative as to some of the retailer's business habits, particularly the habit of cutting prices. One of his observations was that the average retailer "didn't seem to want a profit," which proved to be apropos of the fact that the whole trade were cutting below the retail price which was marked on his package. He admitted that the margin on his goods was rather small, but contended that it was the retailer's fault. "I protected him," said the manufacturer, "by putting a price on my label which would have netted him a fine profit, but he cut it every time."

How this manufacturer did this is an interesting and somewhat unusual story. The jobbing price of his goods is $1.50 per dozen or 12½ cents each. The retail selling price which he put on his labels was twenty-five cents, which was doubling cost. This is the first time in the writer's recollection, incidentally, that retailers have complained because a manufacturer put too high a retail price on his label.

And certainly this price was too high, and retailers were perfectly justified in cutting below it, as they have done. Whether they have cut too much will always be a matter of opinion, but it would have been positively wrong for them not to cut at all.

Death to the Teller of Hard Luck Stories

One of the best things that could happen to business is to have a law passed forbidding the telling of hard luck stories. Or some individual could be appointed to officially listen to any hard luck stories that anybody felt he must tell, and it could be made unlawful to tell them to anybody else.

Business is suffering to-day from hard luck stories more than anything else.

One day last week a certain large Philadelphia grocer received from a valued customer, whose account was somewhat in arrears, a check payable on January 1st. With it came a letter stating that times were so bad and everything so hopeless, that for the present she could not afford to continue the account, but would make such small purchases as she had to make of some nearby grocer.

A blue, melancholy, hard times letter.

The retailer who received it did not stop to think that this customer's finances might have become reduced for some reason wholly apart from business conditions in general. She might have lost her money in speculation, or she might be a stock broker's wife, or she might be living beyond her income. In either of these cases, and in many more, the fact that she was hard up would not mean at all that business was.

But as I say, the retailer did not stop to think of this. He had been feeling pretty good before that, but with that bit of strong evidence before him he too indulged in melancholy over the future, and when his jobber called he passed it on to him.

Nothing is more infectious than gloom. When the jobber left that retailer's store he did not feel so sure as he had, that business was going to be all right. Being sensible, he did not spread the story any, but he did tell his partner and his partner told me.

A law against telling hard luck stories should have been enforced against the retailer's customer first. She should have been compelled to keep her misfortunes to herself. Next, if necessary, against the retailer, who had absolutely no good reason for telling the thing to anybody else. Telling it could do no good, and it actually did harm, because it kept somebody timid and fearful. Business never gets active as long as people are timid and fearful.

Start a hard luck story-teller out at 8 o'clock in the morning and let him go until night, and if it were possible to photograph his mental exhalations, you could trace him by the broad trail of dark blue he made. And you would also find that every one of his stopping places became a center for other blue trails, which branched out from it in all directions.

My judgment is that the teller of hard luck stories is an unmitigated nuisance and a public enemy.

I have been trying very hard to find a position, either as a demonstrator or, in fact, I would prefer to work for some wholesale house to visit the grocery stores where parties buy their goods from. I think I could give as good satisfaction as a man. I was talking with a groceryman yesterday about it and he gave me your address. I would be very much pleased if you could assist me in this matter.

I will tell you I don't care to have an agency to canvass from house to house. I have done that kind of business quite a good deal, and I do not like the work. I am a woman 56 years old and settled and mature, so I think with the gift of talking I would be able to fill such a position.

Hoping to hear from you at once, I remain,

Yours truly,

A Waste Paper Baler.

Allentown, Pa., Nov. 27, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We would like to buy a paper baler and are at a loss and do not know what make or what the different makes are that are on the market.

Will you kindly give us any suggestion or possibly furnish us with a catalogue of a good baler that is not too expensive?

Thanking you in advance for the information, we are,

Yours truly,

MERKLE & Co.

An extremely good baler is made by the Davenport Mfg. Co., of Davenport, Iowa, who have been asked to send you a catalogue.

Street Cars, Too.

Chicago, Nov. 30, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We were recently looking through the pages of your publication and noticed the advertisement participated in by a number of manufacturers—ours included—requesting the dealer to sell Nationally advertised products. We note the wording of the advertisement something like this:—

When you sell Nationally advertised products every magazine, every billboard and every city newspaper becomes a salesman for you. Working in and out of season, to bring customers to you. Ever think of that?

Now, one of the best mediums of advertising publicity that we have ever used is the street cars. We have been large users of street car space for the past ten years and have received excellent results from same.

We would suggest and request that in your advertisement, following every city newspaper, you also incorporate "every street car" in the advertisement.

We will appreciate your courtesy in this matter.

Yours truly,

Who Knows This Company.

Nanticoke, Pa., Nov. 27, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have a bond for 50 shares of stock, par value $100, issued by the United States Banana Co., incorporated under the laws of the State of Maine, capital $750,000, date of seal 1906, transferred June 18, 1909. Dividends were paid for three years and none since date of transfer. No address given on the bond as to where the company is located or does business. President, Edward B. Barney; secretary, Elisha H. Brewster. Please give their business rating.

Yours truly,

JAMES V. DALY.

We have not been able to get any information about this concern. It is not rated either in Maine or in New York, Chicago or Baltimore, and nobody knows anything about it. The fact that it was incorporated in Maine is some evidence that it was a wildcat company.

Answer to "A Personal Experience With a Cut Price."

New York, Nov. 28, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I assume that the very human article headed "A Personal Experience with a Cut Price" in your issue of November 23d was written by you, and am glad that it gives us an opportunity to correct a very evident misapprehension of our work.

The American Fair Trade League has never as an organization made an attempt to bring the consumer to a realization of the iniquity and wrong of predatory price cutting. We have realized that practically it would entail individual conversion, and the task would be too gigantic to attempt. The difficulty of making the clear distinction between price cutting as a general proposition and the use of standard goods by price cutting as bait makes personal argument necessary. My experience has caused me to feel that 999 men out of 1,000 can be convinced that we are right if we can talk to them for a half hour, but not one in 1,000 will give the matter any thought unless we talk to him directly.

Of course, I agree with you that there is an inherent love for the bargain in every human being, which prompts us all to get everything we buy for the best possible price. Really, the most effective line of appeal to the consumer is in the danger from a monopoly in retailing.

With kind regards, I am,

Yours truly,

EDMOND A. WHITTIER,
Secretary American Fair Trade League.

Flavoring Extracts Not War Taxed.

Sheffield, Pa., Dec. 2, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In the list of items subject to the revenue tax is included extracts. Would you kindly advise whether or not you understand this item to mean flavoring extracts?

Awaiting an early reply and thanking you for this information, we remain,

Yours truly,

No, it does not include flavoring extracts.

How Many of You Have Seen the "Grocery World" Assortment of Cakes and the Guarantee of Sales That Goes With it?

It is not often that a manufacturer is so impressed by a publication that he will name an assortment of his goods after it, but that is what J. S. Ivins' Son, of Philadelphia, have done in connection with this paper.

On another page you will find their advertisement of the "Grocery World" assortment of Ivins' fancy cakes. The assortment consists of six different kinds of cakes, specially priced at $6.12, with freight prepaid to nearby States, and the sale guaranteed or money refunded.

Ivins' cakes are made from absolutely pure materials and are guaranteed to more than comply with food laws, in that all of their products are free from lard compound, cottonseed oil, adulterated chocolate, imitation honey, desiccated or frozen eggs, preservatives, benzoate of soda, alum, artificial colors or any harmful or unwholesome ingredient. They use selected candled eggs only. You will be interested in their advertisement.—Advt.

Dickinson's Package POP CORN

For the Holiday Trade

YOU will have a good holiday trade on pop corn, if you have Snow Ball or Santa Claus brand in stock. These packages are repeaters. They will help your sales of salt, honey, molasses, etc.

"All profit, no investment," is the way one grocer puts it. There's big money and satisfaction in Dickinson's Package corn. It's nice business to have, and you might as well get it as someone else.

Snow Ball is the favorite brand of Rice Corn. One-pound package. Retail at 10 cents. When popped, one package is equal to eight quarts of popped corn. No dirt, or chaff. Just sound, clean, sweet kernels. It pops!

Santa Claus brand is a ten-ounce package. Retail at 5 cents. The same nice quality as packed under Snow Ball. The largest, flakiest pop corn you ever saw. And exquisite in flavor!

Let us send you a supply of illustrated recipe-booklets. You'll use Dickinson's Corn in your own home every day, after you use it once

The New York Letter

Enormous Exports of Food Products to Warring Foreign Countries Especially of Wheat and Flour. Big Clothing Contracts for European Soldiers Come to New York. Protests Over War Tax Enforcement.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, Dec. 4, 1914.

The official figures show that enormous exports of foodstuffs are going out of this and other Atlantic ports to the warring European countries. The export business was very large in October and only a little smaller in November; moreover, it is still going on, and it is a great wonder that the markets in this country have not been more directly affected. During the month of November exports of flour to European countries amounted to 1,129,636 barrels, and exports for October, 1,525,418. The wheat exports were also very large in November, but not so large as in October. The figures were for November, 22,847,722, as compared with 29,537,279 bushels in October. When it is remembered that in addition to these exports, wheat and flour are going abroad from the Pacific coast also, the extent of the business we are already doing in these lines, as a result of the war, can be gathered.

Very many protests are pouring into the Internal Revenue Department as a result of the war tax law. A number of them have come from merchandise brokers, whose contract, or memoranda of sale, are taxable to the extent of 10 cents each under the act. Many merchandise brokers are contending that they make very many sales which net them nothing whatever, and others which net them not more than 25 to 50 cents. If it is necessary for them to pay 10 cents on each of these, the business would not be profitable, and would have to be cut out. Very probably there will be a general reorganization of the methods of the brokers in giving memoranda of every sale, large and small.

An interesting announcement during the week was that a war order for 600,000 uniforms and overcoats and calling for about 2,000,000 yards of cloth, has been awarded to Sigmund Eisner, a manufacturer of 103 Fifth avenue, this city. This has already affected the market.

The National Cannery Association and its allied organizations will hold their annual convention and exhibition in New York City February 8 to 13, 1915. Nearly 100 New York hotels have made reservation for this event and have agreed to maintain their regular rate schedule.

The New York office of the J. K. Armsby Co. issued the following statement as to the prune market during the week:—

Prunes are back to a point that under normal conditions, barring war, they should never have been quoted below. The distribution to the consumer has been going on since August. There has been no material reduction in the purchasing powers of the masses in the sections where prunes are consumed during the fall and early winter months, that is to say, in the manufacturing centers.

Merchants who have relied upon the reports that there was no foreign demand and have played the game that prunes were too high have been an element in the holding of the market down, without profit to themselves.

A diminishing export has not meant at any time that there were no prunes going abroad. Second, the crop is less by 130,000,000 pounds than the record crop of 1912; the crop is below the average for the past ten years (that average being 150,000,000 pounds), and we have a steadily increasing per capita prune consumption in the United States. They have been unwilling to admit that the 1914 crop was not as large as the annual consumption of past years in the United States alone. As these facts become better understood it is safe to predict that we will see a considerable advance before the crop of 1914 is cleaned up.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea steady to firm, especially Congous and Ceylons. Demand fair.—Coffee dull and draggy.—Raws firm, but quiet.—Sugar quiet and slightly easier. Refined in light demand.—Canned tomatoes quiet and unchanged. Other canned goods likewise.—Dried fruits quiet. Prunes firm and high on 6-cent basis, which is an advance from the lowest point of 1½ cents. All other dried fruits steady and quiet.—Wheat unsettled and with a very large export demand. In spite of this the market is inclined to be easy.—Flour regular. Good business one day, poor the next. The average business rather poor in spite of the heavy foreign demand.—Provisions firm, with a slight advance.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

National Wholesale Grocers' Association.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association has sent out to the jobbing trade copies of a resolution adopted at the recent convention regarding the sale of cotton. The main portion of the resolution is as follows:—

Resolved, That the consumption of cotton should be promoted in every economic way, that its usefulness in trade should be increased to the widest possible range consistent with economy.

Resolved, That its use in the form of wrapping sugar, flour, rice, potatoes, beans, hominy and any and all other commodities should be suggested by this association to the many and various shippers, by this means increasing the home consumption of cotton probably 2,000,000 bales, increasing its usefulness and assisting to restore it to a normal, healthy trade basis.

Further Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions or such part of them as the president may deem necessary should be given to the public press of the United States, to all wholesale grocers in the United States, and to all packers or shippers, and, with a further suggestion that the wholesale grocers, in buying or ordering goods which have been formerly inclosed in other materials, be requested to suggest to the shippers the use of cotton bags when it is possible to do so.

The association has issued notice that its next annual meeting will be in San Francisco, Cal., May 19, 20th and 21st.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The one article, so far as the paper knows, which has absolutely disappeared from the market on account of the war is Bar-le-d. There is none of it to be had anywhere. It is made in France, at the town where it is produced said to have been wiped out.

An Example of Unusually Good Fish Advertising

The advertisement below, which occupied an 8-inch double column space in the Johnstown (N. Y.) The strong point about it is that it is strong suggestive, which all advertising should be:

Boots—Shoes—Findings

Style in Footwear Not Overlooked.

A tendency is shown more than occasionally to make light of the shoe needs of the small town merchant. Any old style, pattern, finish, etc., is good enough, it is believed, to satisfy them when it comes to placing an order. Staples and standards are within his purview only, and he is not in the market for the latest footwear for either men or women. Shoe manufacturers and road salesmen who have dealings with the general merchant know to the contrary. The day when the country storekeeper in any kind of a progressive community was careless about his shoe stock has passed away.

Selling Strength of a Name in Shoes. Differences of Opinions.

In the course of an informal talk with a well-known shoe manufacturer on fake shoe stores and general merchandising he said: "There are $2,000,000 worth of shoes sold in this country through false advertising shoe stores. People are easily misled. I find that 75 per cent. of the women do not know what they are buying. If they get a shoe equal to what they have been used to for the price they pay they are satisfied to come back for another pair. In regard to stamping shoes with the manufacturer's name, I believe I am not unselfish when I say I do not think it should be done. All the shoes I make and sell all over the country—and I sell as far west as San Francisco—have my name in. But there are a great many merchants that do not sell advertised shoes. They prefer to sell shoes under their own name.

"A dealer who sells shoes only under his own name," continued the manufacturer, "always controls his own trade, and in that sense he is independent. At the same time much can be said relative to handling Nationally advertised goods with the maker's name attached as a means of identification and a guarantee of good faith to the public. In some cases I put my name and in other instances that of the retailer in the shoes, when it is desired. I am spending thousands of dollars in publicity of one kind and another to push the sale of my shoes, and I therefore contend that I am assisting the merchant, consequently it is no more than fair that my name should go in each pair of shoes. As a matter of fact, my shoes are not known without my name. In certain places the public can buy my shoes with both my name and the retailer's also. My name is sewed inside the top of the lining, and when a dealer wishes his name also used the second name is given the corresponding position in the opposite shoe of each pair. We as well as other manufacturers, stand ready to meet the merchant any way in which he desires to handle our line, just so the public get what they ask for. If a merchant endavors to mislead his customer he commits a great mistake and imposes on his customer. That is not good merchandising from any and every point of view."

Disposing of "Stickers" in the Shoe Stock. Methods and Needful Accessories.

In the cities the custom of having special sales is an approved method of attracting attention to a store, or else an opportune time for closing out the slow sellers or "stickers" in the shoe stock. Many retailers, anxious to build up their business, resort to frequent bargain sales, believing this is the best form of advertising. An experienced merchant in a smaller town says sales of this kind are wrong in principle; that the essence of good merchandising is to obtain fair prices. It is all very well for city stores to have sacrifice sales, but the general merchant is not called upon to follow their example, excepting for well-defined reasons; and one of these, of course, is to clean up the stock and move out the poor sellers or "stickers," as they are called. A merchant who indulges in bargain sales too frequently either has not bought carefully or judiciously, or else general trade conditions are unfavorable. Customers should not get the bargain habit at the expense of the merchant.

Every shoe store and every shoe department in a general store has "stickers." They are the stickers of net profits. Many merchants have either ignored them until enough have accumulated for regular "clean up," or they have become a serious problem. Neither of these methods can be recommended, says the "Twin City Bulletin," for they mean the tying up of real money. When certain numbers of certain styles do not keep moving, it is a real hardship. The quicker the remedy is applied the sooner will the benefit be felt. The main idea then is to work off this dead stock as soon as possible. The longer they are kept in stock their selling value lessens. As an immediate aid to disposing of these goods, a number of merchants have a table or tables placed in some convenient and prominent location in the store on which several lots of these shoes are spread out. Customers, in passing, are more or less attracted by the display and stop to look over the assortment, usually ending with a purchase or probably an inquiry for a size not found or even a new pair desired. It is a plan many merchants have found very practical in disposing of the slow selling numbers and the "stickers" of all sizes and kinds—at a price, of course.

A manufacturer of shoe accessories has recently brought out a special device for this purpose. It is a revolving stand, with six shelves, on which may be hung 72 pairs of shoes. It occupies but two feet square of space, as against a table taking up many times that room. Each pair, properly price tagged, can be easily inspected without tumbling over a bunch of others, in which sizes are separated and patterns mislaid, so that in a short time the shoes are a confused mass, which needs straightening out to be presentable. A table is better than keeping such stock in an inextricable mess in a case or even in separate cartons. The revolving fixture is a vast improvement, however, over both, and answers the purpose admirably.

Hardware Tools Specialties

How the Dealer is Assisted in Selling High Grade Tools.

With some improved tools it has been necessary to keep missionaries or instructors in the field to demonstrate their merit and advantages to mechanics. This is regarded as a dealer help of great benefit. Such goods seldom find their way into the hands of the ultimate buyers for which they are intended without an unusual effort. National and trade advertising is an invaluable assistant with this end in view; but in the cultivation of this particular field of distribution one helps the other. On this score the manufacturer of a brand of high-grade tools says: "The difficulty to overcome is the attitude of the average dealer or merchant stocking hardware toward carrying any product for which he feels no demand exists. This is always a serious problem in marketing tools and all technical products.

"It is not always possible for us to go to the hardware man, as can the manufacturer of edge tools, such as planes, saws or chisels, and get this distribution on the strength of consumer advertising. Such tools require no educational work to introduce. There is a continuous and even demand for planes; every householder requires them, as well as many other more technical consumers. But with precision tools it is a different matter. Such tools require a strictly mechanical explanation and introduction; and in the bulk are

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Black Tea.—Many a customer gets away from us because she doesn't know the name of her tea by any other name than "black" tea. Black tea, as you know, may be Oolong, a Ceylon or an English breakfast—Souchong.

Now an Oolong to a North of Ireland woman "tastes like poison," because she has never tasted anything but pure Assam, and there is just as much difference in the flavor of these two teas as there is in the flavor of apricots and peaches, maybe more.

If you are on your job you will sell her the one and let her have a sample of the other. Its the fellows who can size up such customers that get the business.

But this "sizing up" is only a vulgar expression for thought. You can't wedge anything into your stock that will begin to count like thinking counts.

Many a foolish boss, while in a state of stupid temper over some misdemeanor, has told his man that he was not "paid to think." Its a mighty bad break to make, and I must say that personally I would not care to be an employee of such a man.

But these articles are for clerks and when an apparent criticism of the employer comes in its only incidental.

When you ring up to-morrow morning, get your store coat on, push your box opener into your hip pocket, sharpen your pencil. What next?

War? No. Dance? No. Girls? No. Racket? No.

If you take your job seriously you will indorse this word "No" every time.

The biggest mistake you can make is to put your brain to rest with the thought that the manager is paid to do all the thinking.

Why, man alive, no man is paid to do all the thinking, not even Woodrow Wilson.

Every part of your work needs daily fresh thought. New displays, shifting of displays, which means a utilization of seasonable store space. Missing customers. Competitors' prices. Remedying for good your own mistakes. Lessons from the mistakes of others. Customers' remarks. Scale testing. Fine points of salesmanship. Advertising methods of your own and other concerns. Listening. Causes of fall and decline of prices. Why, in business a young fellow who really wishes to get up has no earthly show to devote any of his time during business hours to anything but business thought and the splitting rock is the rock of rot.

All this may sound like a long departure from black tea, but if you'll put on your thinking cap you'll find the connection fast enough.

sold to mechanics of various kinds, machinists, etc., who are slow to adopt new tools with which they are not familiar by actual use or demonstration. The dealers said bring the buyers into our store and we will stock your line. This we did by personal missionary work in educating mechanics in different localities to use our tools, and this is how we converted the dealer to carrying our merchandise, and it was effective.

"In our effort to build prestige and create demand for our dealers, it was found we had overlooked a big opportunity to build undying dealer good will. They liked our line and believed in it; they realized it was profitable; that our tools gave satisfaction, but in most cases they had no conception, or were indifferent, to what we were giving them in the way of substantial selling help. This is finally accomplished. Besides we offer a line of non-technical tools, which are used and bought by everybody, and this leads up to and assists naturally in the sale of our higher grade merchandise."

"Playing Up" the Stock for Christmas Sales.

Manufacturers and wholesalers have long before this called upon merchants for their Christmas orders, and doubtless the goods have been shipped and are either in stock or on the shelves. If a dealer has not dressed up his store for the holiday trade it is certainly high time the work was under way. A fine display can always be made of hardware, in whatever form it may come, and one which is always sure to center interest on the part of everybody, women, boys and girls, not to mention the technically trained people who never cease to admire tools of precision and utility in every form. Machines of divers kinds and for various purposes have an appeal of their own, and in making a display for the special Christmas trade their arrangement should be made to yield the best possible results from an exhibition point of view.

Accepting this as having been done, the next step is to make an extra effort to bring in the public. Personal letters, setting forth the lines that make the most acceptable gifts—rarely anything is amiss in a household—is one way and an excellent method of reaching the regular and best-known buyers—those with whom the merchant is intimately or directly acquainted. The general public is most effectively reached through advertisements in the local newspapers. Do not wait until a week before Christmas, but pitch in now and give the "ads." a distinctively Christmassy ring and flavor. Make them chatty and deal with the goods offered in anything but a commonplace or conventional manner. A whole lot of a breezy nature can be infused in these special announcements regarding skates, sleds, tool chests, carving sets, cutlery in general, not forgetting specific mention of razors—safety and open blade—pen knives, scissors, etc. Also call attention to the best assorted stock of clocks, bicycles, dog collars, fishing tackle, guns—sporting and target—ice cream freezers, lawn mowers, lamps, refrigerators, sewing machines, silver and plated ware, sporting goods, automobile accessories and supplies, and a host of other articles too numerous to mention, to use the country sales bill phrase. Much may be said to induce people to visit the store, providing the merchant has the goods and the gumption and judgment to show them up to the best advantage and expatiate on their "talking points" in a style to create as much enthusiasm in the prospect as he is supposed to possess himself.

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

Goods Purchased Kept Up Normal Record.

In a brief talk, Glase, Hall & Boles, wholesalers, said the other day: "Although the dress goods business over the entire country has fallen off with the declines in cotton and the unsettled markets, merchants have had an almost normal fall trade. With some of the large retailers business has been regular in spots. Merchants in Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey and Virginia, in particular, have been good buyers. In these States our firm's sales for the three months ending with November exceeds in volume that for the corresponding period last year. The adverse effect of the open season on the trade is more noticeable in strictly industrial centers. Things are looking much brighter and we look for much larger ordering after the first of the year."

Merchants' Stocks Well Under Control.

Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say: "As a result of the winterish days last week an influx of mail orders was received on Monday and Tuesday that have given a decidedly improved tone to current shipments. From this, it is evident that merchants have their stocks well under control, and are in position to take on merchandise as they can use it, which is a healthy condition. "The attendance of out-of-town buyers in the market has been considerably larger than during the same week a year ago, which shows a good interest in wholesale offerings. Preparations are made for a large pre-inventory sale this week and the prices that have been named should insure a highly successful clearance of this season's merchandise."

Low Prices Seemingly Not Attractive.

Advices that merchants were only awaiting rock bottom prices on certain lines of merchandise, especially cottons, before placing orders for future delivery, seems to be without foundation in fact. It appears that lower pricing of goods has not stimulated buying by the smaller retail trade, according to the head of a hosiery jobbing house of prominence. A number of large manufacturers with whom the concern referred to has had satisfactory relations for a number of years, have made voluntary reductions. The house in question said: "We passed part of this reduction along to the retail trade, but the retailer is not taking advantage of it in heavier purchases. I doubt whether if we made a flat 10 per cent. shade it would increase our sales."

Striking Exhibit of Dress Goods and Hosiery.

The advance made in the manufacture of cotton goods, particularly dress goods and hosiery, was illustrated in an exhibition recently made in Burlington, N. C. Exhibits were made by 24 cotton and hosiery mills in that immediate neighborhood. Among the products which attracted special attention were fancy dress ginghams, cotton dress goods, shepherd checks, plaids, crinkled seersuckers, flannels, embroidery, crochet yarns, crepes, crashes, ratines, novelty fabrics with mercerized and silk stripes and hosiery of cotton, lisle and silk in various styles and with a wide range of color. The dress materials were unusually handsome, both in design and colorings.

Notion Counter Essentials.

Despite the disconcerting reports concerning a shortage in foreign made notions, such as hair pins, hooks and eyes and dress accessories in general, a fair supply seems to have slipped in. Domestic manufacturers have also been busy meeting an insistent demand for their specialties, and prices have remained about normal.

Orders for ribbons are coming in stronger than for some time, especially is this true of merchants in the Middle and Northwest. Dry goods ribbons have been cut sharply in price. Orders for the cheaper taffetas are being taken in the primary market at 1½ cents a ligne, with 2½ per cent. additional off. The millinery outlook is for narrow ribbons up to 20s again for next season, such as grosgrains. Brighter colors are indicated, a demand having arisen for a shade called flame.

Some houses which have heretofore handled European notion lines have replaced them with goods of domestic manufacture. For example, pin cushions, Parisian ivory novelties, otherwise celluloid, knitted slippers, pin cushion forms, fancy trimming and pillow cords, ladies' neckwear, etc., hair ornaments—tango pins, Spanish combs and barrettes.

Substantial quantities of the Kohinoor snap fasteners, manufactured in Austria, have recently been received. Other shipments in equal quantity are now en route and the American houses handling this line say: "Continuous service is again assured and the demand will be met promptly." Jas. F. McCarrar, the Philadelphia representative, has removed his headquarters from 807 to 1011 Chestnut street, where more suitable offices are secured.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is in a fairly healthy condition, speaking particularly of the lower grades, which are being sent for by foreign countries. There is a demand from this source for teas worth from 25 cents, in a large way, downward, but the bulk of the demand is for teas worth between 15 and 20 cents. Teas worth around 13 and 13½ cents are practically exhausted. The better grades are not materially changed for the week and show no particularly active demand. There is a fair business done every day at prices which show no change over last week.

Coffee.

The coffee market is almost absolutely the same as a week ago. Rio and Santos of all grades are in very quiet demand at ruling prices. There seems to be no reason to expect any special improvement either in prices or activity in the near future; certainly not until after the first of the year. Conditions are reported a little better in Brazil, but the situation there still leaves much to be desired. Mild grades are unchanged and also quiet. Java and Mocha quiet at ruling figures.

Sugar.

The sugar market has shown a little easiness during the week and raws have sold at a shade off. Refined sugar is nominally unchanged on the basis of 5.10 cents for granulated, although most of the refiners will sell at 5 cents flat. The cause of the heaviness is the accumulation of raws and the fact that refiners are not falling over themselves to buy. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose declined 10 points during the week and compound syrup in bulk went off with it. The continued warm weather has interfered with the consumptive demand for sweets a great deal, but there is something doing every day. Sugar syrup is unchanged in price and quiet. Good molasses is firm and shows an advancing tendency, as reported last week. The supply of fine molasses is expected to be not over 40 per cent. of that a year ago. This because they are turning the crop into sugar.

Fish.

The demand for mackerel is very light, and this applies to all grades, inceipts of Danish butter. This butter is coming into this country at present in weekly installments of 1,000 packages of 112 pounds each. The quality is good and it brings as much as the corresponding grade of American butter.

Eggs.

Fresh eggs are very scarce and the market is firm on the present basis of quotations. All receipts of this grade meet with ready sale on arrival. Storage eggs seem to be in large supply, and the market is fairly steady at a decline of 1 cent. The demand is very light.

Cheese.

The market for cheese is firm, with a seasonable consumptive demand, especially with fancy June and September cheese. The market is about ¼ cent higher than a week ago. Stocks are about normal and an increased demand is looked for, but not very much change in price.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady, with prices about the same as last week. There is a seasonable consumptive demand. Pure lard is steady, at a decline of ½ cent, and compound is firm and unchanged. Both are in fair demand. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are all unchanged and in light demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Since our last report hardly any Holland herrings have arrived. The market is practically bare of good stuff, and owing to the scarcity of good Holland herrings, the demand has turned to Scotch herrings, but buyers are taking these goods only in a hand-to-mouth way at prices unchanged from last week. There is a real scarcity of Scotch herrings abroad, and this will make itself felt here when the weather gets cold and seasonable, increasing the demand for Scotch herrings.

Norway herrings continue in good demand. Other connections abroad inform us that there is an enormous demand from Germany and Russia for these herrings, consequently our prices are moving upward.

The sloe herring or milk and roe herring fishing will soon start, but no estimate can be made of its result, as it will entirely depend upon the number of fishermen venturing out to catch these fish, risking their lives and running the risk of being blown up by mines.

There is only a normal demand for Norway mackerel, and buyers are extremely particular in regard to the quality. Prices are practically unchanged. Our agent in Ireland reports shipments of Irish mackerel for the week totalling 2,194 barrels, bringing total shipments to date of 1914 Irish autumn mackerel to 7,319 barrels.

There is the usual anti-holiday demand for imported sardines of all kinds. A few shipments of French ¼ boneless sardines have arrived, but the quantity is so very small it will not tend to relieve the scarcity of these goods. Portuguese sardines are in good demand. Unfortunately, the fishing in Portugal is poor, and yields only such fish which are not suitable for the American market at the present time.

The market for French and Belgian sprats is practically bare, very little to be had and no further supplies are in sight from Belgium, and no further supplies may be had from France until the fishing starts again, about the end of the year. Our packers abroad write that they are unwilling to book orders at last year's prices, and they are asking an advance of about 10 per cent. more, and will take orders only subject to being able to pack the goods.

STROHMEYER & ARPE Co.

Standard Canned Goods.

Optimism appears to be the order of the day amongst the tomato canners. Efforts to buy the goods in larger quantities this week at a shade under the going prices were not successful, and the fact that the offers for them have not been withdrawn show that the buyers have abundant faith in the outlook for a firmer, if not a higher, market during the winter and spring months. The underlying strength to the market is based largely upon the easier conditions prevailing in the money market. Canned tomatoes are again accepted as collateral for loans at the bank, a thing that was next to impossible last month, especially in the case of the small country canners. That class of canners, was, however, pretty well squeezed out of their holdings during October and in the first half of this month, so that they are no longer a menace to the market.

There was a lighter business done here last week in tomatoes, which is nearly always the case when a holiday occurs in the middle of the week, though there were opportunities to take on some good-sized orders had the canners been more in the selling humor. That the market is gradually returning to normal conditions is the belief of those canners who are best informed on the subject, and that feeling appears to be spreading amongst the jobbers, as is evidenced by the wide scattering of the shipments in the last two weeks. Good brands of tomatoes purchased at to-day's prices are not at all likely to cause the buyer any regrets.

For the general line of vegetables the orders were small this week. There were no developments of special interest in any of them. The low prices for sweet potatoes attracted some orders for them, and the increased firmness in green and wax string beans drew attention to those items. Spinach is finding some friends at the low price. Outside of those articles there was only the small every day buying of assorted lots to piece out broken stocks. The recent increase in the inquiries for corn indicates some activity in it by and by.

Pears continue to be the best seller in canned fruits, and pie peaches are the next best. There are some good trades in pears, especially those in heavy syrup, to be picked up at an attractive price. The canners in this section have not packed their usual quantity of apples this season, which may have some influence on the market prices for them later on. Small orders for berries and cherries are the rule these days. All berries in No. 10 cans, except blackberries, have been sold out.

Cove oysters are being sold on the basis of the minimum cost of the raw stock in warm weather, and a sudden spell of freezing weather would stir up the market prices without much notice. They are worth attention now.

Beans.

The trade at large seems to make up the present high level of beans, have consistently fooled themselves to believing that a break was due. In condition of mind we believe is due to a lack of understanding regarding actual conditions. We have gathered some figures and have added some that may prove interesting, and are pleased to submit the same for your perusal.

The Secretary of State for Michigan gives in his report November 1st the following figures on the 1914 crop: Acres, 414,035; total yield in bushels, 4,669,514; average yield per acre, 11.63 bushels. In 1913 the figures were: Acres, 424,230; yield in bushels, 4,631; average yield per acre, 11.63 bushels.

Among the trade Michigan is credited with raising in a normal year a crop of approximately 6,000,000 bushels. This year represents a shrinkage from normal of over 1,250,000 bushels. The quality of the 1914 crop is such that a much larger per cent. than usual must go to the cull bag—that is, there is greater waste in picking to make choice grade than usual. We estimate six pounds out of every bushel invested this year will go into the cull bag. This means a reduction of about 500,000 bushels in the available supply. Every year provision must be made for the next seeding—amounting to approximately 400,000 bushels. Using the official figures as a basis, it appears that we have available for food requirement this year approximately 3,770,000 bushels. This represents about 75 per cent. of normal supply. The normal market price is $2 per bushel, therefore on an actual shortage alone the price should be normal this year at $2.50 per bushel f. o. b. Michigan. Conditions this year, however, are not normal—we are having a foreign demand that exceeds all records. Canada has bought heavily, sumably for the French and British armies—80 to 300 tons are going on every ship to the suffering Belgians—the demand from these sources counts for the rapid changes in price.

Austria, normally a large exporter of this country, is unable to ship. "Producers Price Current," of New York, furnishes us with the following statements of imports and exports to the port of New York: Imports, September 1st to November 1st, 1913, 458 bags; exports, same period, 7 bags. Imports, September 1st to November 1, 1914, 6,208 bags; exports, same period, 22,006 bags. Imports of beans have always supplied a certain portion of our domestic requirements this year we shall have to supply a deficiency at home. A resumé shows shortage in Michigan crop, lighter exports, heavier imports, increased domestic demand.

Conditions are such that a famine could exist—though we have not and do not expect it. We do look, however, for record prices before the next crop comes in and believe it good judgment to keep some beans in stock all the time.

The law allows—under certain conditions—the use by manufacturers of food products of artificial colorings (sometimes made of coal tar), cottonseed oil, lard compounds, adulterated chocolate, desiccated or frozen or "off" eggs, benzoate of soda, imitation honey and other things that the household knows not of. Not really harmful if used as directed by law, but—

What Does Purity Mean to the Grocer and Consumer?

It means that any material used in the manufacture of any products is free from any adulterated ingredient. It means in Ivins' purity guarantee that pure lard, and not compound, pure clean, sweet butter and not butterine, the best candled eggs—this we have found in Ivins' products to be by actual test. J. S. Ivins' brand has become as familiar as mother in the home. The housewife no longer hesitates to buy their goods, they are so home-like.

Many of our customers have abandoned home baking and go to their grocers feeling positively safe in any or all of Ivins' goods. They tell us they save money in purchasing their products, as well as time. Any grocer without Ivins' guaranty products is a back number. Johnnie Helped to Feed the Baby

Johnnie had a tiny little sister. He was proud of her, generous and loving to her, but for the life of him he could not see what she saw in that bottle—no wonder she cried so much. So he took matters in his own hand. Gave her a cracker. Yes, it was an Ivins', the purest there is, but baby could not appreciate it. Of course, it did her no good, but here's the point to consider. Johnnie knew what was really good, so did his mother, for she kept stocked up with Ivins' Products, and Johnnie's first bite of solid food was an Ivins' cracker. His little sister will get her first bite, too—it will be Ivins' also—and then Johnnie will be satisfied; perhaps he will not be so generous then, for the supply will go faster and he might get left.

Remember, the most important step in feeding children is the change from liquid to solid. Start right with the purest there is—its Ivins'.

Within the Law

To keep within the law is the aim of all. Such liberties had been taken in the manufacture of food products that pure food laws were enacted, as you know. But all laws generally have one or more weak points. Pure food laws are no exception. They do not please everybody and contain liberties which, in the opinion of the particular taste, do not guarantee absolute purity. The guarantee, "Within the meaning of the laws," still allows under certain conditions products to be sold as pure food that contain materials many would not use alone or in baking.

We are not a law making body, therefore could not make a better law, but our aim is not merely to keep within the law, but to produce the very purest baked products and make

Ivins Stand as a Watchword of Purity

We therefore made our own pure food regulations. They please everybody concerned. You, because you want the purest there is. Us, because we make them voluntary—not merely to keep "within the law," and because we know after you once use Ivins' Products you will keep a stock on hand. That will be a pleasure to both.

Our regulations contain no liberties with adulterations, etc., and under no conditions are used, as our guarantee makes plain.

Minus — and Plus +

Under certain conditions all the following ingredients may be used in the manufacture of food products. Not particularly harmful, perhaps, but not such as the discriminating housewife would prefer. In fact, each one may properly bear a minus mark (—): Artificial coloring, desiccated or frozen eggs, benzoate of soda, alum, preservatives, imitation honey, cottonseed oil, adulterated chocolate, lard compound.

Plus +

Where, then, do we find the opposite of all these, and everything of the BEST—all plus?

100% PURE

That's what we guarantee all our products to be and stand ready to back our claim.

They contain nothing but the best materials, far above the requirements of the Pennsylvania Food Laws or the Act of Congress which prevents the manufacture, sale or transportation of adulterated food.

All materials are analyzed in our own laboratory to test their quality before we purchase or produce.

When buying ask for Ivins'.

Ivins' Cakes Protect Your Health

READ THE REASON

The bakery of J. S. Ivins' Son, Philadelphia, Pa., is kept as clean as a hospital ward and all products are not only clean, but pure and wholesome, because of the finest ingredients obtainable. Some people say they are unnecessarily fine—be that as it may—to further insure that Ivins' Cakes are good cakes, we use only selected hard shell eggs, the kind used in that good old home-made way of baking.

The Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, and the Pennsylvania Pure Food Law, as approved May 13, 1909, under certain conditions permit the use of desiccated or frozen eggs—eggs which contain little chickens or other putrid matter, treated with poisonous chemicals. It is the use of these eggs, perhaps, which imparts that eggy taste to the ordinary store cakes. These laws also permit the use of benzoate of soda, artificial colors and adulterated chocolate, imitation honey and preservatives which, if not poisonous, are injurious to health.

Ivins' Purity Guarantee

is not deceptive—it really protects your health—for it fully guarantees our products are neither adulterated or misbranded and to be free from any poisonous, harmful or unwholesome ingredient.

Now, to get Pure Cakes, insist upon IVINS' CAKES.

SAFETY FIRST!

These words seem to be in most everybody's mouth. The words may seem new, but safety is the first act of every living thing—especially the human life—and the most important thing is health safety. Your food is the making of health. It must be good—pure. The purest is none too good.

IVINS' PRODUCTS are guaranteed absolutely pure. Pure food guarantee plus our own food regulations. A great improvement we think over the Pure Food Laws. Read our guarantee. It's double-barreled, bound to hit the mark. The highest aim in purity. We have reached it.

Here is our guarantee:—

Ivins' safety first in everybody's mouth, because it stands for the purest.

Ivins' Pure Food Regulations

Do the pure food laws really give pure food? The purchase of a package of baked products with the pure food guarantee seems to give a general assurance of the purest there is. What do these laws and this guarantee reveal—that certain substitutes, adulterations, colorings, preservatives, are allowed under certain conditions. Therefore, "Within the meaning of the laws" means that materials you would not use alone or in your baking, could be used in baked products and still be sold as pure food products. Why, then, depend on such a guarantee when stands for absolute purity. The pure food laws did not affect us, we kept right on with our own pure food regulations.

Our double guarantee is a great improvement, and the superiority of our products backs the guarantee. Our guarantee:—

Away Back in 1846

Ivins began to make his famous biscuits, cakes and crackers, the days of our grand and great grand daddies, when the old oaken bucket, iron-bound and moss-covered hung in the well.

He then resolved to make nothing but pure goods, a resolve iron-bound like the old bucket, but never to be moss covered.

To-day when it is easy and profitable to substitute and adulterate, that resolve takes the form of a

Milk—A profitable staple of larger sales volume than sugar

Do you realize that the average family spends more for milk than for sugar. Everyone of your customers spends $3.00 per month for milk—some spend much more—this trade goes to the milk peddler and he makes money on it, too. You have to tie up money in a sugar stock to supply your customers and you often lose money doing it.

This milk business, and the profit that goes with it, should belong to you.

CARNATION MILK

will help you switch your customers from raw milk to evaporated—for cooking and baking. Our advertising is interesting and educating housewives in the use of evaporated milk. It is sending to the grocer's cash drawer some of the money usually paid to the milk peddler.

When a woman comes to you for evaporated milk make sure that she will be pleased and she will return and continue to buy evaporated milk from you—Give her CARNATION MILK—she will like it—is clean, sweet and pure—always ready for use. Carnation Milk will prove that evaporated milk is superior to raw milk for cooking. And that will be an important step in starting the usual $3.00 per month milk money into your cash drawer. So push Carnation Milk. Your jobber carries it.

How I Helped Two Partners.

I've always tried to be a helpful little thing. If people treat me as a pet they can always get me to run to the store for 'em and do little things like that.

I've been thinking it over, and there's a heap of doubt in my mind whether this pays. Seems to me us little helpful boys are always getting jolted with a big rude foot. You can do a whole lot for people, and while you're at it you're all right, but when you're through, you can crawl under the back porch and poison yourself.

Yep, I know I'm sore. I've got a grouch on and I don't love no one, as the little boy said after he swallowed the worm.

I've been selling goods to a certain firm for about six years. There are two partners in it, and I feel I know 'em both pretty well. One tends to the manufacturing end—makes sausage, scrapple and pepper hash and such stuff. The other partner tends to the store and everything outside the manufacturing.

I've known for some time that these fellows weren't hitting it up as well as they used to. They never scrapped in the store or anything like that, but you can smell a partner's fight, seems to me, the minute you set foot in their store. Smells sort of like hair burning.

Well, as I was going on to say, I called at this store the other day to give 'em a chance at the finest line of goods from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. I'll match them goods, sah, besides—all right, all right, I'll shut up about 'em, if you say so. (Ain't that pesky mean—I'd a had an order in a minute.)

I went in there as usual, and met the fellow I always see—the partner that runs the store and does the buying. Him and I sat down and and I was getting in to it when his partner came in.

"Want to see me?" he said to his partner.

"Yes, why in thunder don't you keep that place back there cleaned up? Aren't there enough people out there to do that? Because if there aren't, we'd better hire somebody. I went through there this morning—I never saw a worse kept place in my life! We can't stand for a thing like that!"

Now maybe that wasn't quite the song to sing to a partner that has as much say about the place as you have. You could put it over some men, maybe, but a lot of 'em would start a scrap.

All the same, there was sure a kick coming over a dirty place, wasn't there?

What did the other partner do? He got sore in ten seconds, and before I could slip away there was a beautiful fuss all fresh from the oven.

"I keep the place the best I can!" he said. "If you don't like the way it's kept suppose you come out and run it yourself, and I'll come in here. Maybe we'd both be better off, for I think I might run your end so as not to get us talked about all over town!"

I could see the first partner's wheels working on high speed to frame up a come back for that, but it was a little slow coming, so the second partner handed over a little more.

"That last girl you put on," he said. "I told you what she was when you hired her. Now it's all over town that she's here and respectable people won't come in the place. My wife heard it from three different people."

"Your wife hears a lot of things," said the first partner. (That was some friendly, wasn't it?) "That girl can do more work in a day than all these people that are lying about her can do in a year! All I ask is that you tend to your end of the business as good as I tend to mine, and we'll be all right."

All the time I sat there taking it in and wondering whether one of 'em would end up by heaving an ink stand and soaking me by mistake. Just then the partner who did the manufacturing turned around to me and said:—

"What d'ye think of a man that brings a tad in his store and puts her where all his customers can see her?"

Then's when I ought to have had a fit, or swallowed my teeth or something to keep my blamed mouth shut. But nothing like that happened, and I fell plumb into the hole in my own bread.

"What d'ye mean by 'tad'?" I said, "I ain't used to that kind of talk. D'ye mean a fast girl?"

That was what he meant.

(My next imitation will be that of a blamed fool. People that have seen it say they can't tell the imitation from the real.)

"I don't think I'd want anybody like that working for me?" I bleated.

At which the partner who had hired her gimme a loving look.

"Is that any worse than leaving a filthy mess on the floor of a place where he makes things to eat?" he said.

(My next imitation will be that of a dad blamed fool. People that have seen it, etc., etc., etc.)

"Personally," brayed little me, "I believe I'd rather have the tad than the dirty floor."

Even then, if I'd had brains enough to light out, all might have been well, but I hadn't my order, so I still stayed on. Waiting for it—and it come.

"Seems to me you're pretty free butting in with your criticisms about people's business that you sell goods to," said the manufacturing partner. "Think your house would stand for you going around doing that?"

Fine! Beautiful!

"Why, I—" I started in to say that I only talked when I was asked to (which wasn't any excuse, if you ask me) but I never got it out.

"I think the same," said the other partner. "What is it your business how we run our place as long as we pay our bills?"

If anybody had come in there with thirty cents just then and wanted to buy a fat red imitation of a traveling salesman, he could have bought one and got twenty-eight cents change.

When I came to I started in again to say that I only talked when the asked me, but I didn't get it out then either.

"That's all right," one of 'em broke in, "we can settle our arguments better without outsiders. Then he turned around in his chair and a big light dawned on me. limped out—without an order, too. What d'ye think of that?"

I walked six quares hunting some big husky fellow who would take me up an alley and kick me blooming squash off. I couldn't find any. One fellow pretty near took the job, but he said he was afraid he'd laugh too much while he was doing it, and he had a split lip.

Since that happened there's two things I'm surer of than I was before:—

First.—That a partner who scraps with you is worse than a wife that does.

Second.—I am a blamed fool.

Secretary Wanless, of the Lancaster Board of Trade and Merchants' Association, has resigned to devote his entire attention to the business of life insurance.

Quite a number of local associations are purchasing the circulars on "Home Buying" in large quantities and are circulating them to their customers.

The near approach of the Christmas holidays will interfere somewhat with regular meetings. After the holidays are over we recommend active meetings.

The Muncy Association now gets out a four-page newspaper, regular size, to exploit Muncy and its merchants. It is filled with advertisements of the members. Having a wide distribution, attracts trade to the town. The name of the paper is "The Progressor." Heretofore Muncy has had no newspaper.

Secretary A. M. Howes is planning a meeting of the State Executive Committee to discuss legislation and to arrange legislative programme.

This week the organizer addressed the associations at Orwigsburg, Wellsboro and Catawissa. Next week he will visit the association at Washington, Pa.; Williamsport, New Castle and Williamsport Board of Trade.

The organizer's services are yours for asking, but arrangements for dates should be made early, as engagements are frequently made for several weeks ahead.

The Bradford Association has arranged that its regular meeting will be held at 6.30 P. M. on December 8th at the Y. M. C. A. Hall. Dinner will be served. The speaker of the evening will be Mr. W. E. Lindemuth, vice-president of the First National Bank of Bradford, and he will explain the new Federal Bank law.

The following associations have recently affiliated with the State Association of Retail Merchants: Woodlawn, James E. Ferguson, secretary; Sewickly, J. M. Stinson, secretary; Beaver Falls, Roy B. Briery, secretary; Farrell, M. Cerveank, secretary.

Tamaqua has a good association, which should affiliate with the State organization.

Merchants of Johnstown have inaugurated a "Buy Early" campaign, with special reference to Christmas shopping.

BEST FOR BABIES

Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk

Ever since 1857 Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk has been the leader for nursery and household use. It is an ideal food for babies, being rapidly and completely digested by the infant stomach. Thousands of people, who as babies, were successfully reared upon Eagle Brand, have grown up to rear their own babies upon it, and use it also for table use because of its unequalled quality and purity. You have no article upon your shelves which has a better reputation with consumers than Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk, and none is more widely known. Recommend it to your customers, reminding them that every can is guaranteed to them.

Borden's Peerless Evaporated Milk

is the great standby of the American housewife for cooking and general household purposes. It is richer and better than most raw milk, adds a rich creaminess to gravies, soups and sauces; enriches and increases the food value as well as the flavor of every dish. All Borden's Brands, both sweetened and unsweetened, are made from the highest grade raw material, by the most modern method of manufacture, and are guaranteed absolutely pure.

CCLXXXVIII.—Getting Property Back After It Has Been Put In Somebody Else's Name.

Every reader of these articles who has real or personal property in somebody else's name, or who is liable to have, will be interested in the following. For obvious reasons I do not give the name and address of the writer:—

Here is a ticklish situation, which by common consent of all of the members of this firm, we are putting before you. About two years ago one of the members of this firm became involved in a way which I need not go into, and it seemed advisable that he transfer everything he had to his wife's name. That included some real estate, some stocks, and his partnership interest in this business. In fact, the other members insisted that he do this, not wishing to see the business involved in a purely personal matter. The transfer was therefore made and for two years this partner's wife has been the legal owner of all his interests. There was no change otherwise, the partner himself getting the rents and the profits.

A difficulty has now developed between the partner and his wife, and she refuses to retransfer any of her holdings. She has also served notice on us, through a lawyer, not to pay any share of the profits of the business to anybody but her. Our lawyer says she has a right to do this. Meanwhile her husband, who I may say is an extremely valuable member of this partnership, is getting disgruntled at our statement that we shall have to pay the profits to his wife, and altogether it is an uncomfortable situation. Can you suggest any way to straighten it out?

I am not at all sure that it can be straightened out in the way this firm wants it to be. This is just another illustration of the danger of putting your property in the name of another. I have seen it done so often—husbands putting their property in the names of their wives; parents in the names of children; men in the names of brothers and sisters, and so on. Of course everybody assumes that the people to whom the property is transferred will do the right thing and give it back when it is called for, and most of them do, perhaps. But there is always a chance that they may not, and when they do not, a very serious situation may develop. Holding property has a peculiar and unfortunate effect sometimes on people, especially people who have not been accustomed to hold it. Not long ago I was interested in a case in which a husband went into court with a petition to compel his wife to turn over to him certain building association shares, certain bank books, and certain bank accounts. He foolishly had turned over control of everything to her. She handled it entirely as if it was her own individual property, and spent most of it, as it afterward developed, entertaining other men. When the break came she refused to turn over what was left, hence the petition. The case has not yet been decided, and the issue is therefore uncertain. I predict, however, that he will get his injunction.

Now getting back to the correspondent's case, the only hope for the partner who is tied up is to take the same course, i. e., apply to the court for an order commanding his wife to turn over the property to him. Whether he will get it depends upon several things.

Was the property turned over to protect it from his creditors? If it was, he will probably not get it back now, for the court would say that he perpetrated a fraud upon his creditors, and they will not help him to get out of it now. But even if the court did make the wife turn it over it would probably do him no good, for it would then come within his creditors' reach again.

If it was not turned over to protect it from his creditors, he still may not get it back, if the court thinks he intended to give it to his wife. It is of course perfectly legal for a man to make a gift to his wife, and if he does it he cannot take it back again. He would have to prove that it was not intended as a gift before the court would think of making the wife give it back.

The owner of property who has put it in somebody else's name can get it back under practically one condition only—if he can prove that it was put in somebody else's name for perfectly legitimate reasons, upon the arrangement that the person to whom it was transferred was to act as trustee for the real owner. If that can be proven, the trustee will never be permitted to claim the property as his or her own, for that would be a gross fraud.

How can that be proven? It always ought to be proven by a written trust agreement. Such matters should never be left to verbal understandings, speaking especially from the standpoint of the actual owner, for it is he that runs the risk rather than the other man. There ought to be a carefully drawn agreement stating why the property is turned over, describing it, and on what conditions it is to be turned back. In many cases this is not done because it would defeat the object of the owner, which is to place his property beyond his creditors' reach. Where a man merely transfers his property to a trustee, he continues to have an interest in it, and his creditors can reach it. But where he does the other thing, and makes an absolute transfer without any tangible string to it, he always runs the risk, as I have pointed out, of not being able to get it back. It is always a risky matter to turn property over to another merely to keep your creditors from getting it.

Question: C. & E., Lansdowne, Pa.—Some months ago the Bowser Oil Tank Co. sold us a tank,

A Service Department for Subscribers.

- Are you thinking of buying a cash register, new or second-hand?
- A coffee mill or roaster?
- A computing scale?
- A cheese cutter?
- A cash carrier system?
- An oil-pumping outfit?
- A waste paper baler?
- An adding machine?
- An account register?
- A slicing machine?
- A refrigerator?
- A typewriter or adding machine?
- A safe?
- A delivery wagon, team or motor?
- New fixtures of any kind, or any store appliance?
- Are you dissatisfied with your jobber?

Is there any other move you are about to make on which you would like some honest, fair, well-posted advice?

We can help you. We have all the principal catalogues of all the store appliances used by retail merchants on file in this office. You can see them if you call here, or we will send you any information from them which you want.

As to any other things, we have a staff here which is pretty expert about most things connected with merchandising. It is entirely at your service without limit and without price.

Generous? Not at all. On the contrary, selfish. The more we can do for you the longer we will keep you a subscriber. It is straight business all the way through.

which two of their men installed, tested and guaranteed to be in perfect order. The tank was in cellar with a pipe running to store to connect with pump. It worked pretty well for a few weeks, till one day the oil man poured in 75 gallons and found the meter only registered 15 gallons.

The pipe connecting oil receptacle in store with tank in cellar had become disconnected and the kerosene was poured into cellar.

The loss to us was considerable. A quantity of our goods were ruined and we were without oil for nearly a week, besides the last oil which we had to pay for. We sent the company a claim for 60 gallons at cost price and they refused to consider it, but sent a man to solder the pipe.

It would greatly oblige us and others of your readers who had

Franklin Carton Sugar Is Ready to Hand Out to Customers

When you have slit the top of a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR with your pocketknife (and that's easier than taking the head off a barrel), the CARTONS are ready to hand out to the customers with no more work than if they were cans of tomatoes.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR saves you all the work of putting sugar in bags, saves the cost of the bags, the cost of twine, saves time, prevents loss by overweight. The CARTON is a neat, tight, strong package that will not burst like a paper bag and let the sugar out. It keeps the sugar clean and dry and your customers will appreciate those features. FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR pays you a profit because it costs you nothing to handle; bulk sugar does not pay you any profit because of the cost of handling. You can make a profit instead of a loss on all your sugar trade by handling FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR as we pack all fast selling grades in the FRANKLIN CARTON, including FRANKLIN GRANULATED, FRANKLIN CUBE, FRANKLIN DESSERT & TABLE, FRANKLIN XXXX CONFECTIONERS' and FRANKLIN POWDERED.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the similar experiences if you would give an opinion on the matter through the columns of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

Answer.—The legal liability for this accident rests upon the person or persons whose fault it was that the pipe became disconnected. If it was faulty installation in the beginning, the Bowser Company is unquestionably responsible. If the original installation was all right, but something happened since to disturb the pipe, the Bowser Company is not responsible.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Merchandise Brokers Will Fight New War Tax.

The organized merchandise brokers of Chicago will try to obtain a ruling from the Internal Revenue Department exempting merchandise brokers from the operation of the new war tax law. They will also ask the Department to explain what a broker's contract or sale memorandum is. This is taxed under the law.

Turkish Figs Much Above Normal.

Turkey's Entry Into War Curtails Supply and Advances Price One and One-Half to Three Cents, According to Size.

The entry of Turkey into the European war has had a direct effect upon the market for figs in this country. By reason of it the supply is much below what it was last year, and what it ought to be to satisfy the demand. Prices have also advanced several cents a pound.

One noticeable factor in the fig market this year is the lack of figs to sell at auction in this country. Numerous small producers in Turkey who formerly sent their figs over here to be sold at auction have none this year, and another element in the case is the new and rigid rules regarding paying for goods in advance which the Turkish banks laid down for American buyers who ordered Turkish figs. They moderated the new rules, however, when the American buyers declared if they did not they would not buy figs. Figs are from 1½ to 3 cents above normal at the present writing. Five Crowns for instance are usually worth around 11 cents in a large way. To-day's price is 14 cents. The heavy consumptive demand is not yet on, either.

California figs are of course available, but although they are good enough of their kind, they do not take the place of the Turkish figs. California figs have advanced slightly in sympathy with the foreign.

I have from the Kuhn Co., Wilkinsburg, Pa., a copy of a very good-looking card used by it, evidently being in-gain, whether the reason for it is explained to her or not, but I repeat, it must be obviously a bargain. As to

In advertising some of these articles the Kuhn Co. has thought it necessary to state the usual price, but in others it has not. I wonder why not. As I have often explained, the comparison is always of great strength in advertising bargains. When you announce a three-day sale, which of course means a special price sale, and then offer as one of the attractions "White Laundry Soap, box 100 cakes, $4.25," how is anybody to know whether that is a good buy or not? Of course, a customer familiar with the soap and its price might know, but nobody else would. How much strength a line such as "Never before sold below $5.25," would add.

The Kuhn Co. also sends me a picture postal showing a photograph of the interior of its store. Judging by the picture, the Kuhn store is some store. I am reproducing it here, slightly reduced, because I know it will be interesting. This appears to be the kind of store we all would like to keep.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Government investigation has failed to reveal any conspiracy on the part of sugar refiners. As a matter of fact it is to the advantage of the refiners to keep the price of sugar down. tended to be mailed. It is printed on very heavy cream cardboard, 7¼ x 9 inches, and folds across the middle, making a shape, when mailed, about the size of some envelopes.

This is a very well printed card. It looks high grade and suggests a high-grade store. I think, however, it could have been strengthened as an advertisement. It purports to advertise a three-day sale, but no reason is given for reducing prices for three days. I think every special event like this ought to be explained, and my experience is that the clearer and more convincing the explanation the better returns will come from the advertising. Of course, a cut price is a cut price, with or without a reason. A consumer is just as ready to buy a bargain that is obviously a bar-

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Doesn't This Date Tell You Something?

'This is the date Knight's Cooking Extracts first decorated grocers' shelves. Time, skill and experience combined have added to the perfection of these goods each year. If an old lady or a child is sent for a cooking extract without being told to get a certain brand, they'll ask for Knight's by instinct. This name naturally identifies itself with flavoring extracts in their minds. It's a household word and stands for the highest standard of excellence.

Coffee Week Didn't Do Much, Though it Did Something

Chairman Wright of the Committee on Coffee Week of the National Coffee Roasters' Association Says Chief Obstacle Was First the Indifference of the Big Coffee Roasters, and Second the Indifference of the Retail Grocer. Two Letters From Retailers Showing Coffee Week Possibilities.

As to results from Coffee Week: The committee found some indifference or lack of interest in the matter of Coffee Week, arising from lack of confidence in the idea, or for some other reason. It is not to be wondered at that the retail grocer failed to respond to our energetic efforts to enlist his attention and co-operation when the members of our own National Coffee Roasters' Association showed so much indifference, many of them responding only when aggressively and persistently plied with letter after letter by our executive officers, who worked most valiantly for the cause of Coffee Week. On the whole, however, I feel that a reasonable amount of interest was finally shown by our membership and for that the committee feel very grateful.

Coffee Week is just what the members of the National Coffee Roasters' Association make of it, either a flat failure or a splendid opportunity to concentrate. That's why we have "Raisin Day," "Apple Day," "Watermelon Day," "Patriot's Day," "Tree Planting Day" and numerous other days that score to some account in the year's round-up of days. Coffee Week seemed none too long a period to allow for complete observance, which, obviously to clinch matters, should consist of every dealer possible not only making an exhibition of the article in question, together with printed matter, but should include actual making and serving of coffee. Few dealers took sufficient interest to do this and as a natural consequence the full benefit of Coffee Week was not forthcoming.

The principal obstacle to the full observance of Coffee Week was the indifference of the average retail grocer. The live grocers met our appeal for co-operation with interest and enthusiasm; the average grocer was in most instances ready to be shown and wanted the way pointed out—the dead ones were found to be about hopeless. Our failure to interest the latter class, and they are, I am sorry to say, in the majority, was perhaps largely our own fault. No amount of printed matter or correspondence would wake up this kind of a dealer. We can mostly rely only on the personal interviews and the persistent heart to heart talks of our salesmen on their regular trips to reach the larger class of coffee distributors, and I am sure if Coffee Week is repeated we need not expect satisfactory results unless our salesmen co-operate fully and add their personal assistance in spreading the gospel of Coffee Week.

The circulation of printed matter, newspaper publicity and trade journal advertising are all only helpful items in the great work and all will fall flat without the live, aggressive and enthusiastic personal efforts of our representatives who come in actual contact with the trade. There must be upwards of 10,000 salesmen interested in the sale of coffee to the distributing trade, and their influence for good is the greatest factor we have to deal with in any attempt to make Coffee Week a success.

We should remember that we ought not to expect our salesmen will be enthusiastic unless we first have that enthusiasm and the ability to impart it to others. Now if we are not ready and willing to co-operate fully in this matter as members of the association, let us not again vote to observe Coffee Week as a part of the association's work.

Just to illustrate the possibilities of Coffee Week, if rightly understood and appreciated by the retail merchant, I will read two short letters from dealers (unsolicited) which were received by one of our members recently—one is from Oregon, the other from Pennsylvania:—

Astoria, Ore.

Gentlemen:—We have received the literature and material for window display advertising — coffee for Coffee Week, and have placed the same in the window of our grocery department. In addition, we have had slides made and placed in the two leading picture show houses of the city, and are doing all we can to make our customers users of — coffee.

With best wishes for increased business, we are.

Erie, Pa.

Gentlemen:—I send you herewith picture of window display. The picture does not do the work it should. This display should have been seen personally to really appreciate the effect. Each window held 150 pounds of coffee, the rear of the windows was draped in blue and white, Old Glory hanging overhead in each window. These windows, with their red, white and blue and the shiny new cans, made an elegant display, attracting the attention of everyone who passed. This, together with our newspaper advertising, sold 280 pounds of coffee during Coffee Week, October 19th to 24th. The effects are felt this week to the extent of 100 pounds of coffee. This is a wonderful gain in a better grade to us, as we only sold two cases of coffee per month before this coffee boom.

Chairman Coffee Week Committee of the National Coffee Roasters' Association.

Here is the Government's Parcel Post Food Scheme

Post-Office Department Launches Plan to Teach Consumers to Buy all Possible Food Products From Producers by Parcel Post. Details of the Plan, Including Rather Wide Range of Products.

In various sections of the country, chiefly in and near the large cities, the Post Office Department is now working its plan to teach consumers to buy everything they can in the way of food products direct from the producer. The plan as it is being worked in Philadelphia is typical of the way—it is being worked everywhere. The local post office sends the following to all consumers:—

To the Household of ———:—

For the purpose of bringing about closer relations between producer and consumer, and affording the householders of ——— an opportunity of dealing direct with the farmer, and obtaining a better grade of food products, we have established in the ——— Post Office, by authority of the Postmaster-General, what is known as the "Farm to Table" system.

The plan is in the interest of the public welfare; and has for its object the reduction in the present high cost of living, the opening of a new and ready cash market to the farmer, and the delivery of a pure and fresh grade of table edibles to the consumer. By this means, commodities, such as butter, eggs, poultry, fruit, vegetables, etc., may be ordered directly from the producer and delivered at your residence by parcel post.

To assure consumers the receipt of their orders in good condition, articles will be packed in specially made boxes, baskets or other containers, so constructed as to properly protect its contents, and every endeavor will be made by the post office to effect prompt delivery. Perishable matter will be delivered on Sundays in addition to the daily deliveries.

If you are interested in this proposition and desire to avail yourself of the excellent opportunities afforded, please fill in the attached application and mail to the Postmaster, ———, "Farm to Table," and we will gladly send you our "Parcel Post Produce List," which contains the names and addresses of producers who are prepared to deal directly with consumers.

Respectfully,

Postmaster.

December, 1914.

The "Parcel Post Produce List," which will be changed and added to from time to time, goes to everybody who writes in for it. At the top appears the following explanation:—

The following list should be carefully scanned. A postal card or letter addressed to one or more producers will afford the consumer an opportunity for making comparison of prices quoted.

Delivery of orders will be promptly expedited by this office, thereby insuring to the consumer fresh farm products.

For the sake of convenience, the following list of producers has been arranged alphabetically and classified under the products they have for sale. It will, therefore, be well to remember that the name of some producers appear under two or more classes of products.

The list of names is classified under "Eggs," "Butter and Eggs," "Poultry," "General Produce," "Fruit" and "Miscellaneous." Under the latter appear the names of producers who sell nuts, pork products, cheese, wild game, flowers, corn meal, squabs, apple butter and honey, canned fruit and home-made pies and cakes, tobacco, preserves and jellies, berries, scrapple, sausage, cider, beets, potatoes, canned tomatoes, vinegar, lard, evergreen oysters, asparagus, clams, flour and meat. The Department is giving Philadelphia consumers names in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia showing how far afield shipments are being arranged for.

Give Your Jobber a Square Deal and Other People Will Give You One

Little talks between wholesalers and retailers on the ethics of fair business—what is square and what is tricky?—Doing unto the jobber as you would have him and other people do unto you.

No. 13

The retailer who signs a specialty order for an excessive amount of goods is courting several kinds of trouble. His jobber may for perfectly good reasons not feel like shipping so large an order; and even if it is shipped, the retailer may not be able to sell it, though he will have his money locked up in it. Of course he cannot fairly ask anybody to take the goods back.

There is never any good reason for overloading yourself with a specialty—you can always reorder if you need to. A possible slight difference in the price isn't worth the risk and the extra investment.

Both Pennsylvania and Federal Weight and Measure Departments Now Make Right Decision as to What are Bulk Goods Under Net Weight Law

Former Attitude of Both was to Consider any Goods Put Into Containers as Package Goods, Requiring to be Marked, Even Goods Sold From Bulk in Retail Stores and Put Into Paper Bags. New Rulings Make Complete Reversal of This.

The Pennsylvania State Weights and Measures Department, which will enforce the new Pennsylvania Act of 1913, providing that "if in package form," goods must bear on the label a statement of weight, measure or numerical count, has made a ruling during the week which reverses a former one regarding the status of goods sold from bulk in retail stores, such as sugar, prunes, rice, etc., and put into bags, etc. Up until the making of this decision the Department had taken the position that such goods, if put into bags or other containers, as of course they always were, were package goods and would have to be marked. Chief Sweeney, head of the Department, said this in a recent address before the Philadelphia Retail Grocers Association. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has always contended that such goods were bulk goods and did not need to be marked in any way whatever. The decision just rendered now confirms this. It is as follows:—

Commodities sold from bulk and weighed or measured in the presence of the customer need not be marked with the quantity of the contents; but where the dealer for the purpose of facilitating business, puts up packages of rice, sugar, coffee, etc., and places them on the shelf already wrapped and packed, it will be necessary for him to mark the quantity of the contents on that class of goods, as they would then be regarded as package goods.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" regards this decision as absolutely sound and logical, but the former one was not.

Up until very recently the Federal Department which will enforce the new Federal net weight act has also manifested a tendency to consider all goods which were put in any sort of a container package goods. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" pointed out at the time that as everything was put into some kind of container for shipment or delivery, the ruling made package goods out of everything, which was clearly not the law's intention. The Department's attitude has now been changed, and in a ruling made a few days ago it decides that goods not regularly put up in small packages but only put in containers for convenience, will not be considered package goods and need not be marked. The ruling is as follows:—

When food products are put up in containers of definite or approximately uniform size or quantity of contents, which serve as units of quantity for the purpose of invoice or sale, it would appear that such products are in package form and should be marked in accordance with the requirements of the amendment of March 3, 1913, to the Food and Drugs Act.

Upon the other hand, when natural products are invoiced and sold in the aggregate by their actual weight or measure, and are placed in containers solely for convenience in handling and shipping, that is, where the products are not divided in units similar in size or quantity of contents and are not sold by the container as a unit, and remain in a condition such that any desired quantity may be taken for sale, there appears some doubt as to whether, under these conditions, the products are food in package form within the meaning of that amendment. For the present the Department will recommend no proceedings under the Federal Food and Drugs Act solely upon the ground that such products, so packed and shipped in interstate commerce, or otherwise brought within the jurisdiction of the Food and Drugs Act, bear no statement of the quantity of the contents. If it be found hereafter that the omission of marks stating the quantity of contents on such containers is being used as a means of perpetrating a fraud or deception, it will be the obvious duty of the Department to seek decisions of the courts that will enable it to accomplish one of the principal purposes of the Food and Drugs Act, namely, the prevention of fraud and deception.

Furthermore, irrespective of whether or not fraud or deception, results from failure to mark on such containers the quantity of food contents contained in them, should the Department later be of the opinion that the food products so packed in containers are food in package form within the meaning of the law, public notice of not less than two months of such opinion will be given, in order that the package may be marked accordingly.

November 1914 Failures Show Large Increase in Grocery and General Stores.

Liquors One of Very Few Lines Showing Fewer Failures This November. General Store Failures Over Twice Last Year's for Same Month.

The official Dun report of the November failures in all mercantile lines is at hand. It shows a very surprising increase in failures in most lines, general stores showing the greatest, the November, 1914, being just about twice those of November, 1913. The liquor failures were 79 in November, 1914, and 80 in the November, 1913.

The figures are as follows:—

General Stores.—November, 1914, 222; liabilities, $2,348,890; November, 1913, 110; liabilities, $714,667.

Groceries.—November, 1914, 309; liabilities, $1,532,710; November, 1913, 220; liabilities, $1,115,541.

Clothing and Furnishing.—November, 1914, 142; liabilities, $1,256,403; November, 1913, 108; liabilities, $1,001,797.

Dry Goods.—November, 1914, 75; liabilities, $527,702; November, 1913, 67; liabilities, $1,642,871.

Shoes, Etc.—November, 1914, 48; liabilities, $325,205; November, 1913, 33; liabilities, $555,115.

Hardware.—November, 1914, 34; liabilities, $445,701; November, 1913, 24; liabilities, $252,287.

When You Move Into a New Property See That There Are No Old Gas or Electric Bills Against It

If There Are You Will Probably Have to Pay Them. Two Interesting Pennsylvania Cases Which Show the Need of Caution in This Respect.

There has been a couple of court decisions in Pennsylvania recently which show that any man who rents a business place, or even a house, should first see that the prior tenant has fully paid up his gas or electric light bill, otherwise the incoming tenant may have to do it before he can get gas or electricity for himself.

One of these cases transpired in Venango County, Pennsylvania, and had to do with supplying gas. A new tenant moved in a business building, and when he asked the gas company to turn on the gas, was told that he must first pay a back bill which the former tenant had left. He objected, and the matter got in to the court, which held that the gas company did what it had a perfect right to do. The court said "the gas company has the right to refuse to supply gas to a tenant for failure to pay a former tenant's gas bill, if the incoming tenant, before going into possession, had notice of the rule of the company regarding non-payment of its bill." It was in evidence that for twenty years the gas company had printed on its bills the fact that a new tenant would have to pay all delinquent bills standing against the property before he could get gas for himself. This the court said was notice of the rule.

The other case was in Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, and concerned electricity for lighting. Here a man rented a cigar and confectionery store and the electric company refused to turn on the current until he should pay a bill that the former tenant had left. The new tenant refused, and in this case was upheld by the court, not because the electric company had no right to make such a regulation, but because there was no evidence that the new tenant had any notice of it when he moved in. The company had not printed its regulation on its bills, or in any other public way, as the gas company had, and therefore its effort to enforce it failed. Of course immediately after this decision the electric company doubtless did make the publication which will give it standing in future cases.

Most gas and electric and other public service companies in other States have a regulation like this, and the law would doubtless be the same there as in Pennsylvania.

The New York Letter

Organized Retail Grocers' Reasons for Opposing Public Markets. Interesting Case Growing Out of Mailing False Credit Statements. Merchants' Association Considering Pure Fabric Bill. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, Dec. 11, 1914.

The organized grocers of Greater New York who, as recently stated in this correspondence, are very bitterly opposing the city plan of establishing free markets, have issued the following explanation of their stand:—

1st. That the free markets, as at present established by Borough President Marks, deceive the public, as they are not in any way what they are claimed to be, Farmers' Markets, nor do they reduce the cost of living.

2d. They are an increased burden on the taxpayers of the city.

3d. Unfair competition, from the fact that outsiders are allowed to do business without paying rent, taxes, and do not in any way help to pay the expenses of the city administration.

4th. Unsanitary conditions exist, which, if the retailer who pays rent conducted his business on the same lines, would be haled to court and fined for disobeying the health regulations of the Health Department.

The third and fourth reasons, particularly the third, are generally admitted to have considerable weight. Undoubtedly outsiders who are allowed to come into the city and offer goods in competition with the established retailers should not be given any advantages affecting the expenses of doing business, which are denied the regular retail stores. If this fundamental rule is not complied with, there is, of course, gross favoritism, and when this favoritism is practiced by a municipality, it becomes an outrage. By this same token, as urged in Reason 4, the market should be held to the same sanitary standards as apply to the retail stores.

Advices have reached this city during the week as to a very interesting case brought by a New York concern in the United States Court at Cincinnati, Ohio. The case was one in which the defendant had obtained credit on the strength of a false statement as to the firm's financial condition. The prosecutors were Messrs. Naumberg & Co., bankers, of this city, and the defendants were Bettman-Johnson Co., of Cincinnati. The latter company failed in August, 1913, and it subsequently developed that just before the failure the firm had obtained considerable additional credit from Naumberg & Co. and other banks by a false statement as to its finances.

The case was one of the very few to be brought so far under the new decision that the mailing of a false statement as to financial condition is a felony under the United States law. In this case it was established that Bettman-Johnson Co. mailed their false statement to the New York bankers, and therefore the case was really prosecuted by the Post Office Department, the charge being the sending of fraudulent matter through the mails.

Morris L. Bettman, the president, was found guilty and sentenced to two years in prison.

The committee of the Merchants' Association, which considers questions of commercial law, has appointed a sub-committee to consider various bills now pending in Congress to establish standards of purity for fabrics, along the same line that food laws establish standards of purity for food.

There are several bills now pending in Congress which would require all fabrics to be labeled so as to state the materials entering into their manufacture. The best-known of these is the Myers Bill, which has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Manufactures, and is likely to have early action.

The Merchants' Association seems inclined to oppose these bills, at least in part, on the ground that practically all of them contain requirements which the manufacturers and jobbers (who largely compose the Merchants' Association) contend are impracticable.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea steady to firm, especially cheaper grades. Demand of the latter for export, active. Other grades unchanged and quiet.—Coffee quiet after sharp advance, with tendency now to ease off. Consumptive demand moderate, at prices slightly above a week ago, but fractionally below the highest point.—Sugar unchanged; raws steady; refined dull, at ruling quotations.—Prunes firm, with advancing tendency on active export demand. Other dried fruits quiet, but steady. Currants a little firmer than the rest.—Canned goods unchanged.

Cheap peas inclined to be firm through scarcity.—Wheat weak in spite of heavy continuous export demand.—Flour dull, and will be until after the turn of the year. Prices tending downward.

WITH THE EDITOR

Here is a brief dispatch from Ohio about a very important matter:

Another Limited Price Decision. Cincinnati, Dec. 5.—Holding invalid the contracts entered into by the Ford Automobile Co., of Detroit, with its agents, whereby the resale price of Ford automobiles is fixed by the Ford Co., United States District Judge Hollister orders the dismissal of the bill of complaint filed by the automobile company against the Union Motor Sales Co., of Dayton, Ohio.

In the suit, which is of importance to the automobile trade, the Ford Co. sought an injunction against the defendants to restrain them from representing that they could sell Ford automobiles for less than the regular list price of the company. Judge Hollister found that no contracts of a similar character had been passed upon by the Supreme Court, and that the defendants had a legal right to buy and sell the automobiles as they did.

In the State of Washington there is a decision to the contrary. That case was reported in this paper when it happened. Readers will note that the United States Supreme Court has not yet passed upon the right of a seller to make a contract with his own immediate buyer, binding the latter to resell at a certain price. The writer has always believed and contended that every seller had such a right, because he could refuse to sell his goods at all, and it was long ago established that when a man can sell or refuse to sell he can make conditions when he sells. We believe one of the conditions he can make is that the product must be resold at a fixed price. We confidently expect the United States Supreme Court to so find when the question gets there, as it is sure to very soon now.

For some time no liquor has been sold legally in the State of West Virginia. The net business result to date is thus summarized by the Temperance Society of the West Virginia Methodist Church:—

Business is immeasurably better in the State than under the reign of the saloon, according to the testimony of 27 leading bankers.

Saloon properties and breweries are being used for stores, restaurants and businesses that, in many cases, employ more men than the liquor traffic supported.

Working men in the business and mining sections of the State have started banking accounts, and are increasing them week by week.

Wheeling has experienced a building boom greater than at any former period in the history of the city.

Arrests in Wheeling and in Clarksburg have fallen far below the number for the corresponding months a year ago. In Wheeling, the total number of arrests for all causes in September, 1914, which was 98, was fewer than the number of arrests for drunkenness alone in the corresponding month last year, 115.

In Clarksburg, the number of arrests for drunkenness in July, this year, the first month of prohibition, was only seven; last year July's record of arrests for drunkenness was 138.

A shoe dealer in Wheeling, in whose block there were 14 saloons, reports that his sales have increased 35 per cent. since prohibition went into effect.

There is no doubt about it; rum is the canker that undermines business. Wherever it is sold legitimate business is poorer than it would otherwise be, and wherever its sale is stopped, business immediately improves. Every business man in the United States ought to be a canvasser for prohibition.

What is getting to be the matter with local jobbing houses, especially those who deal in butter, eggs and dairy products? Two recent incidents arouse the inquiry.

A short time ago the new Hotel Brunswick was opened at Lancaster, Pa. Lancaster, let it be said, is a produce center. One would think that anything in the way of dairy products and poultry that one could get anywhere, could be bought right in or around Lancaster, yet the new Hotel Brunswick placed its opening order for these supplies with a New York house. The same house, it has also developed, regularly supplies ten Atlantic City hotels with similar supplies.

One would think there would be concerns in Atlantic City who could hold the local trade, or if not, that there would be somebody in Philadelphia who would do it, yet apparently the local and nearby local houses cannot meet the competition.

The same thing happened when the new Ritz-Carlton opened in Philadelphia. With Philadelphia full of first class concerns, the opening order for dairy products and poultry was placed in New York. Remembering that when an outside concern buys in New York double freight usually has to be paid by somebody, it is hard to understand why local trade should escape like this.

We are really not much interested in the squabble between the "Journal of Commerce," of New York, and the "Wholesale Grocer," of Chicago, as to whether "Canned Goods Week," which the latter paper largely engineered this year, is a good thing. We are, however, somewhat interested in the general cause of consistency. When then the "Wholesale Grocer" forgets the point of the controversy and rails at the New York paper because it wrote "officials has," instead of "officials have," and because it wrote "the management size up," instead of "the management sizes up," stating that this is "in violation of all the rules of grammatical construction," and would send the New York paper "to the foot of the class in the third grade of the grammar school anywhere in the country," we feel like remarking that the "Wholesale Grocer" in the very article in which it tried to be so cutting toward the "Journal of Commerce" for its bad grammar, said "Poor old Speckle don't believe," instead of "doesn't believe, and "It * * * don't seem to know it," instead of "It doesn't seem to know it."

Before pointing the finger of scorn at one's brother, one should be very sure that there is no yesterday's egg on his own whiskers.

This Question Ought to be Settled

I wish the most revered Supreme Court of the United States would make an extraordinary effort to get busy and solve forever all phases of the question whether a manufacturer can fix the price at which his goods must be resold. The law is in fearful confusion about this. In California and Washington the court has said it could be done. In Minnesota the court has just said, in a Ford automobile case, that it could not be. The United States Supreme Court itself has said that it could not be done in some cases, but it left half the question undecided and nobody knows what to do.

The Victor Talking Machine Co. is the latest concern to try to get it settled. It has just begun a suit against R. H. Macy & Co., a New York department store, to stop them from cutting the price of Victor machines and Victor records. The Victor people say their products are patented and when they sold Macy & Co. they merely licensed them to sell at the regular fixed prices. Cutting prices was a violation of the terms of the license.

I suppose the Victor Co. has the trade tied up tighter as to the price of its machines and its records than any other house in the United States. Outside of Macy & Co. I don't remember one case in which anybody ever cut prices below the regular list. As each court decision has come out, making it more and more uncertain whether they had the right to do that, the Victor concern has gradually changed its limited price plan—brought it up to date, as it were—until now when it "sells" you its goods it doesn't sell you at all. It merely grants you the possession and use, which are yours as long as you comply with certain conditions, one of which is to hold the price. The title to the goods you "buy" never passes to you, under this strange and wonderful contract—all you get is the right to the possession and use. What you pay in exchange for this is no longer called the price; it is "royalty."

Of course after this case is decided in New York, it will go to the United States Supreme Court, where it will lie for a long time before being reached. Meanwhile we will continue to be at sea. There is also another thing to say—no matter what the final decision is, it will be based upon the fact that the Victor products are patented articles. Therefore it will not touch the myriad of unpatented proprietary articles which present the same problem. E. J. B.

Do Not Mix Turnip With Horseradish or Artificially Colored Smoked Fish.

In the service and regulatory announcements of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, a statement is published that the addition of turnip to prepared horseradish will be considered an adulteration under the Food and Drugs Act, unless the product is labeled as a compound, with a plain statement of its ingredients. In the same publication the Department expresses an opinion that the addition of artificial color to smoked fish, as usually practiced, results in concealing inferiority and is, therefore, a violation of the Food and Drugs Act, even though the use of artificial color is declared upon the label.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, it being understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All communications must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not necessarily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

Does Not Believe in Repealing the Pennsylvania Mercantile Tax Law.

Washington, Pa., Dec. 8, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I understand there will be an effort to have the mercantile license law repealed by the Legislature this winter. As I think this is a mistake, I will give my reasons.

While Pennsylvania is the only State in the Union where this manner of raising taxes is in force, in almost every other State merchandise in the possession of merchants is assessed and pays local taxes, the same millage as all other personal and real estate. In Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia and Virginia, a $4,000 stock of goods pays just as many dollars in taxes as a $4,000 house and lot. And why should it not? In most States an automobile pays a State license and local taxes on valuation. In our State we pay a State license only. Now, if the mercantile license is repealed, our Legislature will be almost sure to pass some law whereby stocks of merchandise in the hands of wholesale and retail dealers will be assessed for local and, maybe, State taxation. I think we had better let well enough alone. We now pay local taxes on our delivery horses and none on our delivery trucks.

If this matter is once opened up there is no telling where it would end, as we well know from laws enacted in the past. In our case, local taxation is almost 3 mills, and our taxes would be about three times as much as we now pay in mercantile license; and we guess there are few cases where it would be less than twice as much throughout the State. The talk is, that one reason for wanting the law repealed is that the merchants now perjure themselves, that is, make false returns as to the amount of their annual business or sales. Now, I take it that a man that will perjure himself to save a few dollars in mercantile taxes one day in the year, will perjure himself the other 300 days to make a few dollars, if the occasion warranted, and if we were to have a law making merchandise subject to taxes, the same men would perjure themselves as to the value of merchandise on hand for a like reason, to save a few dollars in taxes.

We hear that only about 50 per cent. of the money collected by the State ever becomes available for State use, the other 50 per cent. being consumed in the operation of collecting. There are two items of expense that should be eliminated and a law made to repeal these two expenses. Some favored newspaper in each county publishes the names of firms doing business in their county, usually some time during the winter, but the license does not become due until July 1st. This is a useless expense; a better way would be for the appraiser in each county or district to mail blanks, say, 30 days before he (the appraiser) visits each firm subject to pay the license fee, and collect the money at the time he calls on each business place. That would eliminate the second fault with the present law and save thousands of dollars to the State. As it is now, there are quite a few small places and some larger ones that are out of business in each county at the time the license becomes due (July 1st) that made returns to the appraiser in January. These claims are sent to a justice of the peace for collection in several central localities in each county, and not being able to make collections, he charges the expenses to the State, something like $2 to $2.50 on each claim. This expense amounts to several hundred dollars in our county, and must be a very large total in the State. Cut out these two expenses and more than 95 per cent. will be available for State use.

Now, I know it is a hard matter to take away any pap from political newspapers, so would have a law passed to publish the names of all persons making returns to the assessor as owners of one or more dogs. I believe in this way there would be ten dogs returned where one is returned now. If the owner did not return their dog or dogs, their long-suffering neighbors would see to it that they were returned, so each owner pay taxes on all the dogs he owned.

The Profit in the WRIGLEY Package

Nothing pays you a profit until you sell it. Wrigley's is already sold before you buy it—sold by one of the heaviest consumer advertising campaigns in the world.

Into the WRIGLEY package we put the best gum that can be made—behind each package we put a silent, consumer ad. salesman. The sales are sure, the profits certain—and that is our idea of real co-operation with our distributors—the Retail Merchants.

THE PENNSYLVANIA PLAN is a new idea in co-operation—Pennsylvania merchants enthusiastic distributors. We are working to make a bigger demand for WRIGLEY'S in Pennsylvania than ever before. If the merchants will link their efforts more closely to our advertising—display where every one will see it—their increased interest added to our increased efforts should double the sale of WRIGLEY'S—and that means more than double profit to our distributors.

Each package has a United Profit-Sharing Coupon for the consumer and each box has a 5-Coupon Certificate for you, Mr. Dealer

The "National Mercantile Co., Ltd." Again.

Hazleton, Pa., Dec. 4, 1914.

To the Editor,

Dear Sir:—Will you please advise me whether the firm, the National Mercantile Co., Ltd., home office Winch Building, Vancouver, Canada, is O. K. or not? I have been asked about it and was not in a position to reply, and I have at present some of their pamphlets, and the way they show things it pays large profits, some people very nearly doubling their money in from five to eight months.

Please let me hear from you by letter, and oblige,

Yours truly,
H. L. WERKEISER.

We have had several inquiries about this concern, but have not been able to learn anything. We have examined its contract, however, and advise thinking a long while before investing any money.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. Business is fair, though not booming, and values are steady. Low grades are even firm, and prices are gradually working upward, meaning particularly Congous.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee, particularly for No. 7 Rio, the standard grade of Rio, has sharply advanced during the week almost 1 cent per pound. Stronger news from Brazil and active demand from abroad, probably for war purposes, caused the advance. The market has been sluggish and listless for a long while and felt that it wanted a little excitement. It therefore responded eagerly to the chance to advance, probably a bit too eagerly. There may come a weakening again. The everyday consumptive demand for coffee is only fair. Mild grades are unchanged and dull. Java and Mocha quiet at ruling prices.

Sugar.

The sugar market has declined 25 points, and granulated is now quoted at 4.85 cents. Raws have been quoted a shade off. The consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose remains unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is quiet at ruling prices. Sugar syrup and molasses unchanged and quiet; some demand for fancy molasses.

Fish.

Mackerel is about unchanged for the week. The demand is very light, but the market for Norways is steady; in fact, some holders seem inclined to ask more money. Other grades of mackerel are unchanged. There is some demand for Cape Breton mackerel, which are being offered here now, several dollars per barrel below Norways. Cod, hake and haddock are unsettled; some sales have been made during the week at a shade off. Salmon of all grades is unchanged and quiet. Domestic and foreign sardines are all unchanged and quiet at the moment; demand fair.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are in quiet demand, at steady to firm prices. Peaches and apricots are unchanged and dull. Raisins and currants are in seasonable demand, at unchanged prices. Dates are in fair supply, but working up slightly. Figs and citron unchanged and fairly active.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are still inclined to be easy, though no sales are reported under 65 cents for Maryland 3s, f. o. b., in a large way. The demand is sluggish. It seems to be expected now that the 1914 pack will prove to be as large as last year, which means 14,000,000 cases. If this proves true—and we will know in a couple of weeks—goodby to any chance of high prices this season. Corn and peas are unchanged and quiet. Apples are a little firmer, due to the cleaning up of the cheapest stock, but the market is still low. California canned goods are unchanged and quiet. Small Eastern staple canned goods are quiet at ruling prices.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are unchanged and firm at the high price reported last week. Marrows unchanged, firm and active. California limas have worked up on spot, in a large way, to 6.20 cents per pound, but to come forward quotations are about 25 points less. The market is firm. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

All table grades of butter are firm at unchanged prices. Receipts are light, but normal for the season. The percentage of fancy butter coming in is very light, and meets with a ready sale at top figures. Under grades are cleaning up on a relatively lower basis. The market is healthy throughout.

Eggs.

New-laid eggs are still scarce and are selling at top prices on arrival. Storage eggs are in ample supply, but only moderate demand. No change is looked for soon unless the weather gets bad.

Cheese.

Cheese is steady with a light demand, and with prices unchanged. Stocks of fancy cheese are about normal for the season; the bulk of the arrivals is late-made cheese, not fancy, and have been sold slightly off.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady, at unchanged prices. The consumptive demand is only moderate. Both pure and compound lard are firm and unchanged. Barrel pork, canned meats and dried beef are slow, at ruling prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

Holders of canned tomatoes in this section, though anxious to do business, of course, seem to be content to await the improvement in the market prices which they confidently believe will come with the opening of the new year. It may be that "the wish is father to the thought," but it is admitted that the chances are now more in their favor than they have been at any time since the decline in the prices reached the low level in October. Some weak spots are liable to develop at any time, as is usual even in normal times, and when they occur alert buyers stand ready to take over any offerings that look inviting.

The week opened with light buying of tomatoes, but closed with a fair demand for all of the different sizes, and they were more widely scattered. It is very evident that the jobbers look to

Good Advertising Backs up Quality

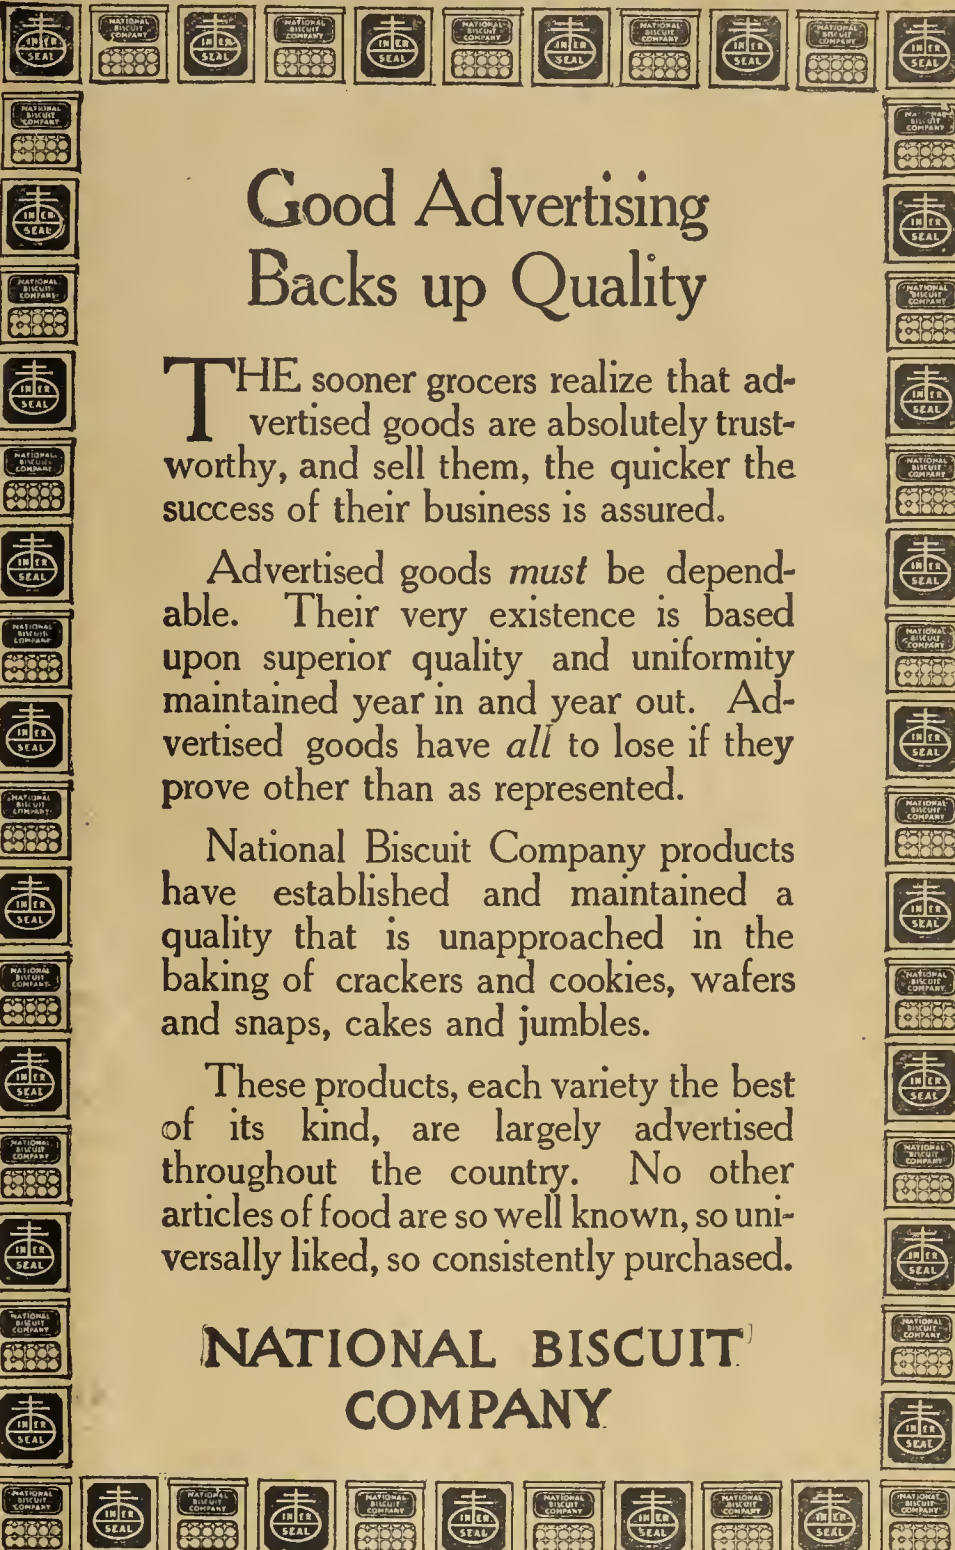

THE sooner grocers realize that advertised goods are absolutely trustworthy, and sell them, the quicker the success of their business is assured.

Advertised goods must be dependable. Their very existence is based upon superior quality and uniformity maintained year in and year out. Advertised goods have all to lose if they prove other than as represented.

National Biscuit Company products have established and maintained a quality that is unapproached in the baking of crackers and cookies, wafers and snaps, cakes and jumbles.

These products, each variety the best of its kind, are largely advertised throughout the country. No other articles of food are so well known, so universally liked, so consistently purchased.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

this market to keep them supplied with tomatoes this winter. It is evident, also, that they have more confidence in the outlook for business, and after inventory time is over and out of the way, there will be a larger demand from all sections. The easier conditions in the money market is an encouraging feature in the situation, not only for canned goods, but for business in general.

It was a dull week for the other lines of vegetables in this market, and there were no developments of special interest. Spinach, string beans and sweet potatoes were in fair demand, but there was little or no buying of the other articles outside of the daily small assorted orders. The inquiries for goods are numerous, but evidently they are made for the purpose of locating them and for general information. It certainly looks like spinach is cheap enough to buy liberally.

There was less buying of fruits this week. Pears is the only item that is showing any activity in this market. This is a good season for them in the face of the dullness in the other fruits. The stocks of pineapples are getting to be light; don't overlook them for your winter and spring requirements. The small stocks of berries and cherries left unsold in this market will not cut much figure when the buying of them again becomes normal. The only berries left here in No. 10 cans are blackberries.

The pack of apples this fall was much below the usual output. Unpeeled pie peaches continue to be in fair demand.

The low prices for cove oysters attract attention, and some good business in them resulted this week.

Sugar.

The sugar crop of 1913-14 was the largest in the history of the universe, being some 18,500,000 tons, and as a consequence sugar sold very cheaply throughout the world, and especially so in America, Louisiana raw sugar having sold as low as $2.82½ per 100 pounds in New Orleans at the docks and Cuban sugar selling as low as $1.87½ per 100 pounds cost and freight delivered in New York on the wharves, plus the duty of 1.33 cents per pound. These low prices were due to the fact that the world's output of sugar was a little more than its consumption. As the pendulum swings one way so it swings back, and that this is so is best evidenced by the fact that sugar is now higher by nearly 100 per cent. than nine months ago, due to the following facts:—

Of the 18,500,000 tons of sugar produced in 1913-14, nearly half, or about 9,000,000 tons were produced in Europe from sugar beets. Practically all the nations raising these beets are now at war and the beet crops are being trampled under foot or used for food, and therefore the European 1914-15 yield of sugar will be cut down by many millions of tons, and for the first time in the history of this country we find England buying sugar from the United States, her consumption being about 2,000,000 tons, a large part of which formerly came from the beet sugar countries of Europe.

Owing to the low prices the tropical cane sugar producing countries of South America and the Orient have curtailed their production and in North America the sugar crop is about 1,000,000 tons short, as follows: Cuba, owing to drouth, is 20 per cent., or 500,000 tons short; the Western beet crop of the United States is 20 per cent., or 120,000 tons short; the Louisiana cane crop is 33 per cent., or 100,000 tons short; the Hawaiian crop is 20 per cent., or 100,000 tons short, and Porto Rico 25 per cent., or 80,000 tons short. The United States possessions being short, due to adverse legislation. In addition to this, the Mexican crop will be, owing to the war, about 75,000 tons short, thus totaling nearly 1,000,000 tons in the northern part of the Western Hemisphere, and being a grand total of many millions of tons short in the world's production for 1914-15. Therefore, sugar is higher than it has been in years past, and will go much higher, due to a very short production and an abnormal demand, the consumption of the United States being about 4,000,000 tons for 1914. Consumers will not be able to buy cheap sugar for a good many years to come, due not only to the shortness of the 1914-15 crop, but also to the fact that there will be but a small amount of beet seed harvested and saved, and therefore the world for the next few years will have to depend on cane sugar for its wants, as but little beet sugar will be made in the countries which formerly produced it for some time to come. In the meantime and for the present, European countries have forbid the exportation of any of the remainder of the 1913-14 crop, owing to the uncertainty of harvesting any part of the 1914-15 crop.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Holland herring are scarce, and so are Scotch herring of good quality, but demand for both is good. Norway herrings are in fair supply, and in good demand and also tending higher.

Only a hand-to-mouth business can be reported in mackerel, but prices for Norway mackerel have advanced during the last week. Our agent in Ireland reports total shipments for the week, 1,125 barrels, and thus bringing total shipments to date of 1914 Irish autumn mackerel to 8,444 barrels.

Business in all lines of imported sardines is quiet, but steady. We are getting small orders, but lots of them.

Our agent in Holland reports under the date of November 19th that fishing of Holland herrings is over for the season. He says that with the exception of 25 vessels, the whole fleet has now arrived, and fishing in Holland for herrings is closed for the season. He also says that it has closed about a month earlier than usual. The catch amounted to about 489,000 barrels, against 766,700 barrels last season, their being a shortage of about 280,000 barrels. Naturally, prices are high, and supplies short.

Rice.

The outlook for a steady improvement in the general business situation is becoming more marked as we approach the new year, and the growing feeling favors more activity than at any time since the opening of the war. This condition has been helped to a considerable degree by the enlarged demand for export, not only for shipment to neutral countries abroad, but likewise for South American requirements. The improvement is without doubt due also to the fact that money is steadily working to an easier basis through the advantages established by the Federal reserve banks, so that trade in all classes of merchandise and of manufacture are beginning to see that a better spirit is gaining ground. The movement really has been more active than has been believed and this has stimulated the market towards a stronger plane and prices have been quietly toning up. Reports from different centers clearly indicate generally improved conditions, both in demand and collections, which naturally begets a more bullish spirit.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast, conditions remain about the same, trade quiet, with no anticipated activity until after the holidays; prices remaining firm, however.

New Orleans reports continued demand, and large business has resulted, both for export and domestic consumption.

Rough rice has advanced and farmers are exacting full association prices. It is reported from authentic sources that large trades have been made of both rough and clean rice within the last few days, and all offerings of rough and cleaned are quickly absorbed at advanced prices.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, conditions as at New Orleans prevail throughout the entire rice belt.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

Evaporated apples have been very firmly held during the week, the advance of the previous week being well sustained. There has been a very much better carload business quoted, buyers paying up to 57½ for prime quality in 50-pound boxes, for prompt shipment, and 6 cents for January or February shipment. Sellers are asking a premium of ½ to ¼ cent for small lots. There has not been so good a demand for choice, although shippers have raised their prices ½ cent over prime quality. Fancy is quotable at 7 to 8 cents, according to the grade.

Raspberries are also higher and good quality is scarce. The market is quotable at 23½ to 24 cents, f. o. b., in barrels.

Spices.

The market is less active this week, with a moderate demand from the grinding trade. Prices quoted for future shipment are in many instances above spot levels here.

Peppers.—The spot stock of peppers in the United States is unusually small. The demand lately has been narrow. The market naturally rather indifferent. It is reported a fair supply of Lampong is en route. White peppers are scarce and in steady demand during the week. Prices are likely to rule very high over the winter months.

Red Peppers.—Very scarce and in a firm position. The demand is on the increase. All grades likely to be very high and scarce until summer months, 1915.

Cloves.—In fairly active demand at steady, but unchanged prices.

Pimento (Allspice).—Prices are a shade firmer, but prevailing figures at present are low and really record prices for this spice.

Mace.—In fair demand at steady prices. Spot stocks are only moderate.

Nutmegs.—In fair demand. Prices remain low and safe and supplies are small here.

Tapiocas.—A shade firmer and in good demand.

Gingers.—Remain quiet and neglected, without any feature to report.

Paprikas.—Without change in price for the various grades. A steady jobbing demand continues.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—There has been a fair movement in sweet herbs and seeds. Caraway and poppy are very firm, and prices really are below present import cost. Coriander in fair demand.

MARKET NOTES.

Florida oranges are ruling at about an average price at $2 to $3. They are coming in good order and are in good demand.

Florida grapefruit is a little lower—$1.50 to $2.50, which is about the lowest on record. The demand is fair.

Florida beans bring $3.25 if fancy and $2.50 if choice. Good beans are wanted.

Southern salad is plenty and cheap—50 cents to $1.50. The demand is fair.

Cranberries are very cheap—$1 to $1.50 per crate. There is a big crop.

Salient Points in Selling Stoves.

Occasional reference has been made to the stocking and sale of stoves by the general merchant in this department. Different methods are employed by various storekeepers for profitably marketing these goods. A recent article on this subject, entitled "Stores Are an Important Factor in the Hardware Stock," called forth the appended critical remarks from the Favorite Stove and Range Co., Piqua, Ohio, who claim to have "the most complete plant of its kind in the world":—

You have touched upon a very important point in your remarks on the necessity of properly training retail store salesmen. This is one of the most vital, and, at the same time, most neglected points in marketing stoves and ranges.

The question would naturally present itself, when a manufacturer places his line on the floor of a general merchant, does his representative supply the essential talking points for presenting the stoves in the strongest possible way to a prospect? Usually when a road salesman gets his order signed the "subsequent proceedings interest him no more." Under these circumstances the manufacturer is at fault if the needful and often necessary information is not furnished. A writer on the subject pertinently says: "Once you have completed a list of the qualities which an ideal stove should possess, check these up with the stoves you are selling. This will very quickly enable you to determine the salient features of your stove. These points should then be placed in logical order, studied and elaborated on until you are qualified to deliver a convincing sales-making talk." Without going into details, this would seem to cover the proposition pretty well.

Hardware Lines in Seasonable Sale. Status of Prices.

Considering the unusual, and often ridiculous amount of talk concerning current business depression, and which, fortunately, is gradually decreasing, a prominent wholesaler of hardware contributes a decidedly stimulating story on the optimistic side of the argument. He says the firm's road salesmen have booked orders in such volume that they knew nothing of business depression until they ventured last week from their trips. Among jobbers it was believed orders were held back so that a better showing would be made on the balance sheet at the close of the fiscal year; but at the same time merchants are being solicited and even strenuously pressed for orders, and it looks as if they were buying not so liberally, perhaps, as in past years, but sufficiently generous to effectually dispose of the "hard luck" stories which, in many instances, have no foundation in fact.

A lawn mower manufacturer, who recently returned from an extensive "pulse feeling" trip through the West, said that while he found a conservative buying spirit prevailing, still conditions were excellent, and a change for the better was likely to take place almost any time. Later advices say this is now apparent and is growing stronger week by week. Seasonable hardware is being ordered in by general storekeepers and for early shipment. Such changes in prices which have occurred are governed entirely by the cost of the raw material, on which several minor advances have been made, some so slight as not to be reflected in the finished goods.

Ready Mixed Paints Easily Sold. Care and Effective Display Essential.

When it comes to putting in a stock of ready-to-use paints in connection with his hardware department, the general storekeeper may find a number of excellent suggestions for handling the goods and presenting them to the best advantage from the following in the "American Paint and Oil Dealer." Broadly speaking, a paint specialty is a branded article, distinctly named, and made to fit some special requirement in the realm of paint and varnish preservation and decoration. As a rule, it comes from the paint manufacturer neatly packed and attractively labeled, ready to deliver to a purchaser without weighing, measuring or wrapping. Its special use may be for varnishing chairs or sideboards, brightening up the dining room floor, adding a new lustre to the parlor table, etc., furbishing up a large number of worn and dingy spots in every home. The radiators may call for a fresh coat of gold or aluminum paint, the register black enamel, the dining room new flat wall paint. It is up to the retailer to push these paint specialties—to display, advertise, talk and sell them.

As a general proposition, it may be said in favor of the sale of specialties that it costs less to sell than it does other goods. As public opinion is turning from the mail order houses and the "bargain" fakir, and especially against untruthful advertising, it is only fair to consider the paint specialty in the best light for a general merchant. There are no slow sellers, stickers or dead stock in ready-to-use paints, providing the stock is looked after once in a while by turning the cans upside down and keeping them neatly placed and free from accumulations of dust and grime.

Most paints of any standing before the public are not only advertised through the Nationally circulated mediums, but also by means of the trade papers in the field they desire to reach. Self-sellers exist only in the mind of the advertising mountebank. The paint specialty therefore comes to the merchant partly sold through advertising. The storekeeper who shows the can labels in orderly array, under proper light—not placed on the floor or beneath the counter; who gives tasteful window displays, distributes pertinent consumer literature, brings to the final selling effort the personality which achieves success.

Half of the ready-to-use "dead" paint stock, if it exists at all, has been allowed to get in this mournful condition through being allowed to wait, not only to sell itself, but actually treated as though it could keep store for itself. As a statement of fact, the better the salesmanship that is used on a paint specialty the less it costs to sell. This "betterness" of salesmanship, as with all other sorts, must show thorough knowledge of the goods. The salesman should have a full knowledge of the claims made for the special line, otherwise sales will lag.

Boots Shoes Findings

Do Manufacturers Neglect Proper Finish of a Shoe's Insides for Sake of Outward Appearances?

The well-established reputation of a shoe manufacturer often suffices when a merchant is looking over a line for the purpose of placing a season's order. In other instances closer inquiry ought to be made concerning the construction of the shoe. The outside shows for itself, to be sure, but the inside deserves more consideration. The first point, avers an authority, is the back stay—the weakest part of all shoes—the part that stands the most severe usage. The calfskin back stay is the best. The facings are not of great importance for the wear of the shoe. The cheap lining material, or the overstrained lining at the lasting operation are a great detriment to modern footwear.

In former times calf leather was quite generally used for lining men's shoes; but now cloth lining of cheap medium and high grades is employed. High-grade lining should be in all welt shoes, as this kind of footwear will lose its shape quickly unless supported by a strong lining. All shoes should be fully lined or not at all. Since the combination insole, partly leather and partly canvas, has been used, the surface of the inside in welt shoes is a great objection to the comfort of the wearer. This comes from the fact that split leather is porous, soft and liable to retain dampness for a long time. All welt insoles should have a grain surface, meaning a hard, glossy surface.

In some factories, where cheap sole leather is made to resemble good quality leather, a coat of stain is applied, and finally a glossy surface is obtained by means of wax polished with a revolving brush.

Another defect often noticed is at the point where the tip seam passes over the foot. Outward appearances do not disclose the fact that the seam will bind on the wearer's foot after the shoe has been worn a short while. This defect is due to overstraining of the seam at side lasting. This happens when the lining is in two sections at the fore part. With a whole lining this overstraining of the tip-seams is almost an impossibility, since the lining does not stretch enough to allow the seam to stretch to any appreciable extent. The inside portion of all shoes is generally neglected and wearers suffer, not so much on account of the style of the last as on account of this neglect on the part of shoe manufacturers. The lining must not be stretched more than the outside, and when it is over-stretched the size six shoe, for example, is reduced to a five and one-half size. The wearer is the first to notice the discrepancy. A shoe of standing in the estimation of the merchant as well as his customer should be especially well made inside. In brief, the outside pleases the eye, but the inside the foot, which is more important for the retention of trade.

Popularity of Cloth Top Boots. Predictions on New Styles and Patterns.

Covert-gabardines in sand and putty color, will be very popular for women's wear next spring and fall and a number of mills are making this cloth for shoe tops.

Boys' play shoes, with felt outsoles, are claimed to wear better than chrome tanned shoes. While the retail price of felt sole shoes is higher than leather sole footwear is hard to explain. So it is, however. For summer wear nothing is said to be superior to the felt sole as an outsole, because it is light and cool. As an outsole felt is something new, but it is now used on a variety of shoes.

Gray felt tops on men's shoes are not only comfortable, but classy. They retail for $4 a pair, the felt being the highest grade. Cloth top shoes are reported as selling rapidly in the small towns as well as in the big city stores.

Where shoes do not stand up when in the hands of the retailers they should be retreed. This operation always improves the appearance of the shoe.

Relative to warmth in shoes, the right filler will go far to securing this desired result. Cork helps allay heat and cold equally well, and when applied in sheet form, as an insole, it keeps the feet dry.

A shoe manufacturer recently remarked: "During the past ten years we manufacturers have very much improved the shoes made wholly or in part of cloth. We are making these shoes, not as novelties, but as necessities for the popular trade. Most every woman now feels that she must have a pair of cloth top boots at $3 or $4 a pair. We could not make our boots of all leather, excepting that we advanced them to a very high price per pair. That would make them a luxury. I believe that the all-leather boot of the future will be a luxury. The cloth boot will be the one of necessity. The textile men are not only making more cloth than ever for shoes, but better cloth than ever."

A big run on bronze kid shoes, for woman's wear, of course, in all style, is predicted by one of the prophets in the trade who keeps in close touch with the different centers and markets.

Gaiter Effect Footwear Having a Great Run.

A new shoe idea is the gaiter effect. Its appearance last season was confined to the cities, but for the fall and winter general stores in the small towns carrying merchandise of this kind have put the line in, and with satisfactory results. The style has been gaining ground steadily; for the gaiter effect is perhaps the most interesting departure from established footwear styles that has occurred since the coming of the high box or knob toe some years ago. The gaiter effect must not be looked upon as promising to work anything like as large a change in shoe styles, since the knob toe exerted its influence on all classes and grades of shoes.

Moreover, the gaiter effect, as it was originally observed, was primarily a feature of ladies' high shoes, but to-day it is worked out in low cuts and men's footwear. While it has made its appearance more generally during the fall and is running into winter stock also heavily, so much so that shoe manufacturers are surprised at the orders received from country towns, the gaiter effect already appears to be a fixture in the spring lines also. Enormous quantities of the covert cloth for the gaiters or shoe tops are being used, and so universal is its employment for this purpose that several mills that have not gone into its manufacture before, are now making it to the exclusion of their regular cloth product. The wide popularization of cloth and leather combinations in women's footwear made the present season very timely for the bringing out of some novelty idea in shoes, and the gaiter effect is the result. As noted, even the country merchant is "getting in" on the line, and this means the demand has become a mild species of craze.

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

Western Merchants Buying Freely for Holidays.

Relative to trade in the Middle West, the weekly review of the John V. Farwell Co., Chicago, says: "Regardless of most unsatisfactory weather conditions, the recent pre-inventory clearance sales of the Chicago wholesale dry goods houses were a decided success. The volume of merchandise moved necessitated night work and additional forces in packing and shipping departments this week. From the number of new faces seen in the market the importance of these sales with retail merchants is increasing, not only from a radius within 500 miles from Chicago, but from States far distant. Sales in the notion and other departments surpassed any previous sale.

"In regard to the linen yarn situation, advices just received from Belfast state that supply matters are rapidly getting worse. Ribbons are selling very freely. The coming in of wide skirts is helping the sale of embroideries and petticoats. Handkerchiefs are responding very freely to the 'Practical Xmas Gift' movement, which is spreading over the country this season. Black messalines, black duchesse silks, velvets and velveteens are unusually active. Merchants are placing liberal orders for drapery material, particularly fancy hemstitched scrim for spring delivery, and sales on these lines are ahead of last year."

Marshall Field & Co., of the same city, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say: "The pre-inventory clearance sale has been of leading interest during the week. More buyers have been in the market by a larger percentage than attended the sale a year ago. Kansas, Minnesota, Michigan, Ohio, Missouri and Kentucky were well represented and large numbers were here from Illinois and adjacent States.

"Purchases were well distributed throughout all departments, fancy and novelty goods receiving most attention. The sale of heavier goods was curtailed somewhat by unseasonable weather. In total the sale has proven very satisfactory. Receipts of mail orders for merchandise have been numerous from all sections of the country."

Buying Better in Cottons and Silk Goods.

Cotton and silk goods are selling pretty freely at retail, but business is far from what it should be, according to advices received from various quarters. Reordering on the part of merchants has been and is slow. It seems orders are being deferred in placing as long as possible; but owing to the very attractive lines that are out and the low prices which are being quoted for some very serviceable goods, it is believed trade is bound to pick up before long. The tendency to buy sheer goods is still very marked. The demand for dotted Swisses and zepthers continues. Voiles, crepes and goods of organdie and lawn construction are being called for steadily, and it is believed that the retail stocks of these lines are relatively very light; and therefore it is felt that buying will have to be large before the active retail season begins.

Many retailers who buy direct have declined to place any forward business save in sample lots. Continued delay in placing manufacturing orders will ultimately result in congestion later on, even if a sub-normal volume of merchandise is to be required. Printed goods are selling moderately, but steadily, and reorders come along slowly from retailers. It seems jobbers will not buy freely until they have absolute confidence in the stability of prices. The fine and fancy cotton goods trade is conspicuous by the tendency to re-order low priced merchandise instead of the high-priced lines which sold so well last year. In not a few directions reports are verified of considerable buying going on despite all that is heard of trade being depressed.

Jobbers Short on Stock. Retailers Who are Winning Out.

Merchants who do not buy direct from either the authorized selling agents in the primary markets or the mill, but through the jobber or wholesaler, are reported as being rather uneasy regarding the certainty of obtaining goods when desired. Advices say that jobbers, who have been waiting and, in many instances, demanding price reductions on certain lines, especially cottons, are now ready to do business. Further, a large number are so short on goods that they are now asking for quick shipments when the new prices are made. Just how much of a concession the general merchant will be given remains to be seen.

Quite frequently the observation has been made, within the past year especially, that retailers, who made a yearly, or, at the best, a semi-yearly trip to market and considered that sufficient, now find they must go oftener. At least, get in touch more frequently, or take a chance of losing trade to competitors who buy oftener and more carefully. This is the condition at the present time, and when a merchant places an order it is of moderate size and the goods are wanted at once. This change has been gradual, but it has reached that stage where an authority on retailing says: "It is less the quantity that is sought for than it is the variety and the stuff that is the latest thing up to the present minute. However much this may be annoying to the retailer who would prefer to stock his merchandise at certain periods, the fact remains that he who is getting the most out of retailing is the one who keeps his assortment varied, and not he who has the heavy load of goods on hand. Not only are the markets within ready reach of the general merchant, but they are also within ready reach of the consumer, and that which is not obtainable of the retailer is always obtainable of the mail order houses."

Watchful Waiting the Controlling Factor in Retail Circles. Why Certain Goods Sell Best.

Lines of printed goods that are selling the best are those known either by trade-mark or because of being produced in works of reputation made known to the trade and consumer alike by National publicity. This merchandise is given the preference by merchants in placing orders for current and future needs. Experience has proven,

Wherever Clothes Are Washed!

Women wash clothes to get them clean, so they don't like to use dirty starch. Wherever clothes are washed, in city or suburb, in town or on the farm, women appreciate ARGO STARCH because it is CLEAN starch.

Not only will ARGO STARCH, in the neat 5-cent cartons, please your customers, but it is easiest and best for you to handle. The carton is convenient; it saves the work of scooping and weighing bulk starch; it saves the cost of bags and twine; it saves TIME.

ARGO STARCH MAKES A SPLENDID DISPLAY

A neat pile of ARGO STARCH in your window, or on your counter, is sure to catch the eyes of customers and increase your sales. Always have ARGO STARCH where it can be seen, and it will sell itself. Bulk starch only sells if customers remember they want to buy it; ARGO STARCH acts as a reminder, an advantage of package goods which the live merchant quickly appreciates.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"ARGO STARCH is pure, clean starch which is sure to please. Can be used for either hot or cold starching."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants over and over again, that when times are hard it is the advertised brands of goods which hold up best on the sales record. The reason is obvious. The first law of economy is to buy only those things in which one has the greatest confidence. Good advertising builds confidence.

The tendency of orders is away from solid color prints. White goods are in very general demand. Certain piques are growing in favor, and a vogue of military costuming in white is in evidence. Sheer white fabrics are expected to preponderate for next summer wear. Crepes are still well regarded, while many lines of voiles are excellent. Fancy voiles, with novelty yarn stripes, are wanted for both waist and dress wear. A moderate business is being done in fine jacquard waistings. There is no expectations of changes in present styles so far as fabrics are concerned. There is a fair demand for some artificial silk and cotton weaves, largely because of the attractive patterns and the great lustre of the goods. Khaki colored dress fabrics have sprung into popularity with the leaders of fashion. Battleship gray is also another new shade.

It is conceded that the volume of business done by retailers in piece goods so far this season is a distinct disappointment. No favorable weather conditions, coupled with the policy of retrenchment, has proved a combination too strong to overcome. The buying inclination of the public has proven to be considerably contracted, as the recent cold snap sufficiently proved. The fact that it may be difficult to procure dress goods at anything like present prices later on because of the wool scarcity and other conditions is apparently not disturbing buyers in the last. In fact, leading houses in primary circles are giving more attention than usual to developments at the retail end of the business.

In the opinion of leading buyers, novelty fabrics are destined to have a long run. As compared with smooth finished goods, the "novelties" are far and away in the lead.

The demand for balmacaan weaves is increasing rather than diminishing. Where goods of this type have been returned on one pretext or another, they have been resold at an upset price. In fact, balmacaans are spoken of as fast becoming a rage.

Covert cloth is going to be a factor in the spring business, and the popular shades are sand and putty, which will also dominate in many other lines of dress materials. It looks as if poplins will replace gaberdines, which have been among the best selling fabrics for several seasons. Poplins have a distinct weave and is difficult to imitate in cheap material.

Advices say the call for broadcloths, which has been insistent throughout the fall, is slowing up, and there is no trouble in finding a supply. This is especially true of the medium grades at $1 and under. The real fine quality and high-priced lines are still scarce.

Mackinaws are a scarce article now at any price, and most of the mills are sold up as far ahead as the 1st of February. These goods are carried in a variety of patterns by general stores and are extremely popular sellers.

A great deal of stress is laid on the scarcity of dyestuffs as affecting the price of cottons, but an authority in the primary market says: "Sellers can make no impression on buyers by talking dyestuff stringency as an argument for operating. So far, however, the trade has been pretty well cared for."

Retailers are featuring novelty sweater coats for the current season more than the mackinaw and sport coat. Even the small town merchant is not behind in this particular, carrying a fair-size stock, according to the status of his community. The predominance of one or the other of these respective coats will largely determine the status for next fall.

In some hosiery mills logwood dyes are being used, but the experiment is not altogether satisfactory. Unless put through a fixing process, logwood is soluble in ordinary washing; by fixing the color will stand in the washing, but on contact with perspiration the logwood dye becomes soluble and the wearer of hosiery so dyed usually gets a pair of stained feet. Orders from merchants have lately been turned down because they specified the goods were to be finished with the same dyes as formerly.

On underwear it is apparent that jobbers are unwilling to operate ahead excepting at ridiculously low prices. Merchants are watching developments with a great deal of interest, and in turn, are also holding off on future business.

A new 16-pound man's union suit, with another closed crotch arrangement has made its appearance. It is made up to retail at $1, allowing a comfortable margin.

Women's fleeced garments, in two-piece and combinations, are not yet on the road for next fall, although they are often the first to be opened. Reductions are quoted on these goods for spot and early delivery.

Bright satins are put down as a sure leader for next spring. Taffetas are classed as a dark horse. Color indications lean toward "sand" and "putty," but a sound opinion is that the darker shades will hold over next season, with some variation in the form of old rose or cerise.

Fine sheer zephyrs, dotted fabrics in white and colors, voiles, plisses and a variety of sheer fancies, with novelty yarn decorations, are selling best. Jobbers find that retailers are relying upon them more than ever to have stocks of this merchandise in hand when retail sales begin. The quantity of fine goods in hand among merchants is small whenever there enters in a style feature. The large use of white cotton dress fancies this winter in fashionable circles makes it reasonably plain that white goods will prove of great selling value in most quarters.

Narrow ribbons will again be wanted next season. In colors cerises, sand corals and Belgian blue will be favored. The sand shades, now so popular, are conceded a short run only though now they are the most talked of in the color line.

Fancy handkerchiefs are recently in greater demand than for a long time. Woven patterns or borders are the best sellers. These goods are of French manufacture and the visible supply is limited. In plain white handkerchiefs ample supplies may be obtained from domestic manufacturers. Combination sets of handkerchiefs, tie and hose, in fancy boxes, for the holiday trade, also good sellers, may not be in as full supply as usual; that is, at former prices.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The following nominations for officers and directors of the Grocers' and Importers' Exchange were made on Wednesday afternoon:—

For president, Charles D. Joyce and Wm. T. Kirk, Jr.; first vice-president, A. M. Warren; second vice-president, Marvin M. Eavenson; treasurer, Alexander Henry; secretary, John E. Poore; directors H. A. N. Daily, Herman Schwacke, H. D. Flint, Robert Comly, Wm. C. Halpen, Jr., Rosser P. Birdsong, Wm. J. McCahan, Chas. F. Bonsor, John L. Clawson, Wm. C. Miller, Samuel T. Kerr, R. S. Pomeroy, Wm. J. Campbell, James P. Curry, Marvin C. Kindig, John M. Greene, Chas. Y. Fox, Wm. J. Graham, Cooper Jessup, Frank C. Starr, John Scott, H. C. Mackenzie, Wm. D. Weikel, Samuel R. Carter, J. H. Lippincott, J. P. Warner, G. Roberts White, Charles W. Shaw. Ten directors are to be elected. The annual meeting of the Exchange will be held on January 13, 1915.

The stall holders in the Reading Terminal Market have been holding their second annual food show during the week. The entire market was decorated and considerable advertising done. The John Wanamaker store, as last year, helped out with considerable exploitation. During the week a delegation of Washington and Baltimore produce men visited the market. The show closed on Saturday night.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Christmas at Your Store.—Don't attempt any half-hearted cheap looking decorations, mixed with paper roping, with such fearful color combinations that it gives customers of sensitive eyes the fidgets. Go to the woods, thou active one, or climb the hill tops and load your wagon with graceful pine, suggestive laurel and pretty red berries.

A well-decorated store is a splendid drawing card. It puts buyers right into the Christmas spirit, as well as indicating that you, yourself, are in that spirit. It's advertising, and advertising is simply suggestion. You are an advertiser, and you can't get away from it. You can get away from being a good one by sloppiness, thoughtlessness, indifference. You can get away from being a bad one by thoroughness, neatness, patience.

He who does the ad. writing sits upstairs at his desk. You men on the floor are the illustrators. Only to your select silk stocking readers does the modern newspaper appear flat without pictures, or, in other words, illustrations. Would not a printed ad. fall flat without you illustrators? At times we have asked ourselves which pays the better?

But Christmas at your store this year ought to be better than a year ago. I am not necessarily referring to volume, but to attractiveness, interest, good cheer and good home spirit. Do you miss anybody?

Customers will drop away. They do, I know, in the best regulated stores. It's your duty to report every missing customer. Sometimes the firm will write her a letter. Often the fellow that reports will be asked to go and see her. It's a feather in your cap to reclaim a customer, and you shouldn't be backward in letting her know it. Get her back if she's worth getting back. That's your mission. That's good, effective work. Some women like to be noticed. They like to know that their patronage is important to the general success of the business. It's a good impression to give. A woman of this stamp is a good advertiser. She'll speak of the interest the firm has in good customers. So I say, keep after good customers that are missing. There should be no excuse to lose a regular customer. The danger is in delaying and allowing her to get in friendly relations with the other firm.

These Manufacturers Will Gratuitously Send Retailers Advertising and Display Matter

In various ways the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" is just now directing the especial attention of its readers to the question of pushing nationally advertised products to the front. Monthly Contests are being held on the subject, and a half-page advertisement published weekly contains arguments by nationally-known manufacturers for featuring nationally advertised products in order to get the benefit of the extensive advertising which these manufacturers are doing for them. In connection with this, retailers will want to know what manufacturers will supply advertising and display matter free of charge, hence the following list:—

Small meat dealers and local butchers are complaining that the recent epidemic of foot and mouth disease among cattle in and about Pittsburg has almost ruined their business. The Chicago packers by maintaining slaughter houses in Pittsburg could ship cattle in from districts not affected by the disease and by butchering immediately were not subject to the restrictions placed by the Federal and State Departments of Health. Pittsburg dealers were not permitted to butcher cattle bought in the local market, as the entire State was under quarantine. This forced many to patronize the cold storage houses of the packers and they assert they never can get an adequate supply for their trade.

One Way to Lose Trade by a Phone.

If there's anything on earth I hate worse'n rat poison it's to see a clerk in a store drop his work to go talk over the phone about some of his own business.

Gee whiz, but if I had a store that would make me wilder'n a wild cat.

I wouldn't stand for it, that's all there is to it!

It's pretty punky business. No clerk ought to stand for people calling him up while he's working, and if he does stand for it then his boss oughtn't to.

Of course I don't mean that his boss ought to be a pig about it. Somebody could call up my clerk to tell him his wife had a new baby, or something like that. But not every day, understand.

The other day I was out in a store up in York, Pa. It was Saturday morning, and the place was busy. It was the last place I had to go before I took the train back to old Philly to spend Sunday with wife No. 1, and I was plumb anxious to get away. What the clerk did didn't have anything to do with me, understand, only to heat me up for an hour or two.

As I said, the place was busy. The regular Saturday morning trade was in there, and the boss and all his clerks were at it pretty hard.

In that store they have the phone on a little desk right out in the middle of things so's there'll always be somebody to tend to it.

While the rush was on the thing rung.

One of the clerks went to it.

"Phone, Bill," he called clear across the store to a clerk that was waiting on a customer.

I looked for Bill to say "find out who it is and tell 'em I'm busy," but not Bill. He actually stopped right in the midst of putting string around a bag of something—stopped right in the act—and loped over to the phone. I might say that Bill has a little voice that don't need any megaphone and when he belated into the phone we all heard.

"Hello," said Bill. "Oh hello chick. How's the kiddo? * * * That's good. Get in the house all right last night? Ha! Ha! Ha!"

Everybody in the place was on by this time and business plumb near stopped. That's right, as I'm a Baptist!

"Oh you git out!" went on Bill. "You can't hand me stuff like that! How many fellows did you ever tell that to before, eh?" * * * That's all right. Say kiddo what you doing to-morrow afternoon after church? * * * Aw, you don't want to go out in the street with him. He'll get you in wrong with your friends. * * * What do I mean? Look at his feet! He ain't the company for you! What's the matter with taking a walk with little Bill? Eh? What? (this "what" my wife said she heard in our house in Philly, honest!) No, I won't, kiddo, honest I won't. It'll be all right, honest it will! * * * Sure!"

Everybody seemed to be taking the thing as a joke but me. I didn't see any joke in it. By gum, it struck me like the worst blamed thing I'd seen that month. The customer Bill threw down to talk with kiddo was on a broad grin, too—she didn't seem to mind it. Maybe it was none of my blamed business, I suppose that's the answer.

Bill talked some more along the same brainy line—kiddo must sure be some queen—and he made two or three bluffs at hanging up, but kiddo wouldn't let go. I don't know whether she was another clerk somewhere, or was just a girl living at home and letting her bed stay unmade while she called up Bill. Anyway, she seemed to feel she had all the time there was, even Bill's time, and he had hard work to pull away. But at last he did and looked around to see if anybody was on. Anybody on! Gee whiz, the fire department must have moved in their sleep!

Bill loped back to his customer—he must have been at the phone ten minutes—with a fine red face, everybody joshing him as he went.

Was his boss right there? Sure he was. Did he hear it? Sure he did. He got as much joke out of it as anybody. And that time he didn't lose anything by it—it went off all right, everybody saw the funny side. But take it from me, if it happens often people won't always see the funny side.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Accompanied by 12 members of the Pottsville Association, the organizer visited Tamaqua on December 1st and addressed a well-attended meeting of the Business Men's Association and extended an invitation to this organization to affiliate with the State body.

Action will be taken at the next meeting. After addresses by a number of the visitors, including President Basmum and Secretary Knapp, of the Pottsville Association, a splendid lunch was served at the Elks' Club. Tamaqua is a live town, with splendid stores and a wide-awake association. It has a paid secretary and does things for the merchants that count.

As a result of missionary work recently undertaken at Chambersburg, new members (all grocers) have been added to the Business Men's Association. Mr. Smedley will revisit Chambersburg on January 13th.

Mr. Smedley addressed the merchants of Orwigsburg on November 30th. Every merchant in the town was present but one. T. T. Eckert, of Pottsville, accompanied the organizer and made a splendid address. Orwigsburg will, without doubt, join the State Association.

The organizer addressed a well-attended meeting of the association at Catawissa on the evening of December 4th. Much interest was shown in the organization, and although a small town the association has an opportunity to do a lot for the merchants. Rupert Baldy is the efficient secretary.

Arrangements are being made to organize the merchants of Schuylkill Haven in the near future. Years ago there was a good organization at that point, but it disbanded. A new one will be formed that we believe will stick.

Two new participants in the Pennsylvania Plan are the Woolson Spice Co., Toledo, Ohio, and their Golden State brand of coffees and spices count in the awards. The Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co. have also joined hands with the merchants and their entire line of Sun-

For the Holiday Trade

YOU will have a good holiday trade on pop corn, if you have Snow Ball or Santa Claus brand in stock. These packages are repeaters. They will help your sales of salt, honey, molasses, etc.

"All profit, no investment," is the way one grocer puts it. There's big money and satisfaction in Dickinson's Package corn. It's nice business to have, and you might as well get it as someone else.

Snow Ball is the favorite brand of Rice Corn. One-pound package. Retail at 10 cents. When popped, one package is equal to eight quarts of popped corn. No dirt, or chaff. Just sound, clean, sweet kernels. It pops!

Santa Claus brand is a ten-ounce package. Retail at 5 cents. The same nice quality as packed under Snow Ball. The largest, flakiest pop corn you ever saw. And exquisite in flavor!

Let us send you a supply of illustrated recipe-booklets. You'll use Dickinson's Corn in your own home every day, after you use it once

The Pottsville Association is after the Reading Railroad with a protest for diverting train crews from Pottsville to Reading. This hurts the town. Take our word for it, that the Merchants' Association will get what it goes after.

The Pottsville Association will hold a big rally on January 4, 1915. It will be a red letter night.

The organizer anticipated visiting Wellsboro on December 3d, to organize an association, but the engagement was cancelled for lack of interest.

We expect to hold a district convention of all the merchants in the Schuylkill coal regions in the early part of next year.

Mr. Smedley visited Washington, Pa., December 7th; New Castle, December 9th; Pittsburg, December 10th; Williamsport Grocers, December 11th; Williamsport Board of Trade, December 12th.

There have necessarily been some changes among the participants in the Pennsylvania Plan. But every change strengthens the Plan. Here's the list of those who believe in you and who want to earn your good will by helping you: Franklin Sugar Refining Co., Franklin Carton Sugar; Borden's Condensed Milk Co., Condensed Milk; Corn Products Refining Co., Karo, Kingsford, Argo Starch and Mazola; Wm. Wrigley, Jr. Co., Spearmint Chewing Gum; Stollwerck Bros., Inc., Cocoa and Chocolate; Joseph Tetley & Co., Inc., Tetley's Tea; Woolson Spice Co., "Golden Sun" Coffees and Spices; Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., Sunshine Biscuits.

The Erie Business Men's Exchange has agreed "that all members of the exchange handling Pennsylvania Plan products be constituted a department of service to put Erie in the winning class next year." This is the spirit that means a lot, not only to the manufacturers, but to the organization.

The Sunbury Association will hold an open meeting early in the new year. This is an active organization, working along practical lines. It is about to publish a rating list. It has added 10 new members since the convention and a proposition is before the association to take into membership the Commercial Club and open permanent headquarters. Three new industries are being negotiated for. City Councils and the association are at loggerheads at the moment over an ordinance limiting vehicles to stand on the streets more than one hour and an ordinance licensing transient auctions. The merchants will win.

CCLXXXIX.—Is Everybody a Partner Who Shares in the Profits?

Probably no feature of the law of business touches more business people than the law as it is applied to the various relations of partnership. A particularly important phase of it is raised in the following letter, which comes to me through a Chicago paper. I reproduce only that part of the inquiry relevant to the point:—

Please let us and others of your interested readers have your ideas upon a situation which has arisen in our business; in fact, has always been in our business, but has never been settled until now.

We employ a considerable number of salesmen, who receive a small drawing account and a certain part of the profits on their sales. We have for many years used a contract which was drawn, I think, about 15 years ago, by a lawyer. It sets forth that the person signing it shall receive a certain drawing account and a certain percentage of the profits on his sales as compensation. There is nothing said in the agreement about the salesmen becoming partners, but it has been represented to us that sharing in the profits makes the salesmen partners, and they have all the authority of partners, and we are responsible for what they do. If this is true it is a serious matter, and we are desirous of knowing it. Inasmuch as many other firms employ salesmen on the same terms, both manufacturing wholesale and retail, paying some in a share of the profits, doubtless the subject would be an interesting one. What we wish to know is, is there any way in which a salesman getting his compensation in the form of a share in the profits, can be considered to be a partner of the concern employing him.

I may say for the comfort of this correspondent and of all others in the same position, that there is not, provided the sole ground for considering a salesman a partner is that he shares in the profits of the concern. I will try to make it clear why this is true.

When you are seeking to determine whether a man is legally a partner of another, and the two disagree as to whether there is partnership, there are three things to consider:—

- 1.—Does he share in the profits?
- 2.—Does he share in the losses?

3.—Is he clothed with authority to act for and bind the firm?

I put the third in italics because it is the most important. In fact, it is the condition which must usually be present in order to create partnership liability.

A man can be a partner without sharing in the profits, but he is not necessarily a partner because he does share in them. He can also be a partner if he does not share in the losses, but usually sharing in losses does make a man a partner. Sharing in losses is therefore a much more important test than sharing in the profits.

Of course in almost all partnerships, the members do share at least in the profits.

But whether a man does or does not share in profits and losses, either or both, he cannot usually be a partner, under the law, unless he has authority to act for the firm and to bind it. Understand I do not mean a special or silent partner; usually such a one has no authority to bind the firm, but within the limits of his partnership contract he is a legal partner in every sense. I mean a general partner—the ordinary kind of a partner. I will put it again in other words, for this is the crux of the whole case: If he can bind the firm he can be a partner even though he shares in neither profits nor losses, but if he cannot bind it he is not as a rule a general partner even though he shares in both profits and losses.

When I say “bind the firm” I mean make it liable for his acts, as for instance, by signing a promissory note. A legal partner can sign a promissory note on behalf of the firm, and bind the partnership and every man in it. But if he is not a partner his note binds only himself.

Of course, some mere employees can bind their employers by what they do. But this is different, although the foundation of the right to bind a firm either as a partner or as an employee is the same—agency. Under the law the core of the partnership relation—in many cases the supreme and final test as to whether a man is a partner of another man, is this matter of agency. By reason of his relations with the firm, his practice, his custom, and his position, is he capable of so acting for the firm that he binds it when he acts? If he is, he is a partner, and that ends it.

The importance of the subject is shown by two cases which recently came under my own observation. In one a partnership became insolvent, and it looked like about 20 cents on the dollar. If a certain man who had a business connection with the firm could be established as a legal partner, all of his personal assets, which were large, would become available to pay the debts of the firm, which would then not only become solvent, but rich.

In the other case, a man supposed to be a member of a partnership signed a promissory note in the name of the firm, negotiated it and appropriated the proceeds to his own use. He had never done so before, and the question of “course of dealing” was not in the case. If he was a partner, the firm were responsible for the payment of the note. If he was not a partner, he alone was responsible.

In a second case one man supposed to be a partner foolishly had a customer of the firm arrested and prosecuted on a charge of obtaining merchandise under false pretenses. A suit for very large damages for malicious prosecution was begun against the firm. If the man who caused the arrest was a partner, the firm was liable, but not otherwise.

In a third case a man supposed to be a partner wrongfully issued a fraudulent debtor's attachment against a customer's property, causing very serious loss. Suit for damages was begun against the firm, whose liability rested solely on the question, was the responsible person a legal partner?

Above all the other tests of partnership, however, is the intention of the parties when they entered into their relation. If they meant to be bound as partners, then they are partners, regardless of the possible absence of some of the conditions that usually create partnership.

Of course a man may frequently make himself liable to outsiders as a partner when he was not actually a partner and never intended to be one, merely by allowing people to think he was. That is called "holding out," and I recently discussed it in another article.

In order to remove every possible doubt about it, many concerns who employ salesman or other employees on a share of the profits, now insert in their contracts of employment the clause "provided that nothing herein contained shall constitute the party of the second part (the salesman or employee) a partner of the party of the first part" (the employer). This is a good thing to do, for it makes it absolutely certain.

Elton J. Buckley.)

Question: * * *, Coatesville, Pa.—About February 1, 1909, I had a house rented to a party for the sum of $30 per month, to be paid monthly. The rent was paid promptly for a while, but finally began to get slow until they left, still owing one month's rent and also a store bill for groceries. Now as this house was rented through a real estate agent and he does not push the collection of said rent, and I have sent them statements for these bills and they refused to pay, stating that they rented from the said agent and to him they paid their rent, and that I had no business sending bill for same.

And the grocery bill they want to dispute owing it at all. As these two bills have been due over three years, what I wish to know is whether I can get a judgment against them, as I think they have property, or what would be the proper course to take to collect same.

Have had these with other bills put in hands of collection agencies,

Answer.—You should go before some local justice of the peace—if these people live in Coatesville—and start suit for both items of your claim, the month's rent and the store bill. Their plea that they rented from the agent amounts to nothing since he was your agent. If you make out your claim you will get judgment, and if the case is not appealed, you can issue execution.

Campbell Co. Says There is a Bean Corner.

The Joseph Campbell Co., of Camden, have issued a statement in which they charge that the bean market is being manipulated by a couple of speculators. The statement is as follows:—

Presumably acting in concert, a Michigan elevator and a grain company of Cincinnati (not a bean packer or a regular bean buyer) have purchased a great many cars of beans and stored them in Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Toledo, Pittsburgh and New York, with the apparent idea of cornering the bean market. In the face of this tremendous buying, elevators in Michigan are loaded up with beans and have numerous cars on siding on which they are paying demurrage.

Beans are being held off the market because of the constant reiteration of a rumor that there is to be a corner and we are to see $3 per bushel and even $5 per bushel beans after the turn of the year.

The crop in Michigan is not up to normal, but there is a fair crop in New York State, and California has the largest crop in its history. Considering these facts, and with potatoes selling f. o. b. cars Michigan not exceeding 25 cents per bushel, we believe these extreme prices cannot be maintained.

The chief argument of food gamblers seems to be as follows: First, that the numerous United States Belgian Relief Committee will be obliged to purchase large quantities of beans in the American market to supply the starving women and children of Belgium; and, second, city and county authorities throughout this country will be obliged during the coming winter to set up numerous soup houses and purchase immense supplies of beans to feed those people who are unemployed, owing to the cessation of many kinds of business on account of the war.

Darlington, S. C., Nov. 28, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We are inclosing a copy of an ad. we had in our local paper a few weeks ago. We have been using quite a number of ads. somewhat on this line and would like to have your opinion on same.

Thanking you in advance for your opinion of same,

Yours truly,

ROBT. A. ROGERS.

The advertisement inclosed measured five inches double column, and filled the upper right-hand corner of the newspaper page on which it appeared. Here it is, about life-size:—

typographically, but there is no temptation to read it. If you wanted to run a general advertisement like this on efficiency, a heading like "The Kind of a Man I Am," would have attracted much more attention. This whole advertisement looks like one of those ready made stock advertisements that are written by somebody in Chicago or New York to be sold to anybody who will buy them, without regard to whether they will fit the special needs of the user or not. The text of this advertisement is just about as general as advertising can well be. Change thing. I do not consider such advertising entirely worthless—it is general publicity which keeps one's names before the public, which is always worth something, but it could never get any direct results.

This matter, with a sharper head line, might not have been so bad as an introduction, to be followed by some real advertising—I mean offerings of specific things, with prices. Even for that, however, it is rather too wide and general to make much of an impression. Mr. Rogers can write a general advertisement for the efficiency of his store that I am sure would be much stronger. For example, suppose the facts were such as to allow him to begin his talk this way: "When I first came to Darlington, 12 years ago," etc., etc. There is a personal element about that which would interest. He might not be able to phrase it that way, but there is something personal and interesting that he could say, I am sure.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Andrew Ross Launches New Food Company.

Andrew Ross, late general sales manager of the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co., and a well-known man in food circles, has organized the Ross Food Co., with a capital of $300,000. The directors are Andrew Ross, of Battle Creek, Mich.; George C. Lewis, Mattie F. Tice and Verna C. Eckhardt, of Lockport, and the petition for charter was made public last week. It is said that the company will make a shredded wheat product somewhere near Buffalo, N. Y.

Enclosed find check for one year's subscription to "Grocery World and General Merchant." Would not do without the "World"; find it worth more than it costs and we are always looking for something for nothing. Success to the paper.—A. M. Parker & Son, Mapleton Depot, Pa.

is just as much a factor in the successful and satisfactory operation of the grocery business as in any other field of industry. We have built up our present extensive business through careful attention to every detail of a perfect service to our patrons, using as a foundation, of course, a complete stock of only THE BEST staple articles in our line.

We pay especial attention to phone or mail orders, filling them as conscientiously as though the customer stood before us, and making prompt and courteous delivery.

Does this service not merit your patronage?

I do not consider this a profitable way for a retailer in a small town to advertise. In the first place, this advertisement doesn't look striking or interesting. It stands out well enough, the word "grocery," in the second line, and you can use it just as well for a hardware dealer, a clothing man, or even an undertaker. No advertisement as loose as that ever amounted to any-

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Two Good Schemes From Washington, Pa.

Board of Trade of That Town Devises Credit System With a New Feature. Good Rating Based on Disposition to Pay Rather Than on Possession of Assets. Description of Plan. Also Establishes a Community House for Convenience of Itself and The Town's Customers.

The Board of Trade of Washington, Pa., has started to do a couple of things so good that they are worthy to be published so that other merchants' associations can do likewise.

The first is the establishment of a new credit system for the use of the retailers of Washington. Before this was inaugurated public notice was given the public. The people were told that practically all the retailers in the town were going over their books and making up a list of good, bad and indifferent customers. They were told that this list would be quite unlike the usual credit list in that it would not consider the debtor's actual financial responsibility, as shown by the ownership of real estate, but would consider only his disposition to pay. With this in view consumers would be classified under eleven headings:

1. "Pays Cash"—Those who pay promptly at time of sale or on delivery.
2. "Pays on Request"—Those who pay when statement is rendered or on first call of collector.

3. "Fairly Prompt"—Those who pay in such reasonable time as to make their account fairly satisfactory.
4. "Slow and Uncertain"—Those who fail to meet their obligations and who compel use of pressure in collections. Unsatisfactory customers.
5. "Slow but Sure"—Those who take advantage of their financial responsibility or defer prompt payment of just debts—those who pay at definite periods extending over long time—those who are accommodated for long time for private reasons of merchant.
6. "We Demand Cash in Advance"—Those who have abused credit privileges and are not now worthy of credit.
7. "Kicker, Makes Unjust Claims"—Those who make a practice of demanding rebates and discounts because of alleged imperfections in goods beyond the lapse of reasonable time after delivery.
8. "Buys Too Freely on Credit"—Those whose intentions to pay are good but who buy entirely beyond their means, unless credit is limited.
9. "Claim in Attorney's Hands"—Those whose failure to pay makes it necessary to employ collector or attorney. (Does not apply to cases where regular collector is employed for the collection of installment accounts.)
10. "Claim in Judgment"—Those who have been sued and judgment taken against them and where judgment remains unpaid.

11. "Compromise Claim"—Those who have paid part of a claim and demand receipt in full for goods purchased, the merchant accepting such settlement in preference to losing entire amount of claim.

The following is an interesting paragraph from the public announcement of the plan:—

While there is no agreement among the merchants of the Business Men's Bureau to refuse credit to any individual because of his delinquency elsewhere, there will naturally be a disposition to be guided by the experience of others and it behooves every one to review his outstanding obligations and take the earliest opportunity to establish a record which will entitle him to credit.

The second good thing that the Washington Board of Trade has done is to establish what it calls a Community House. This is not only the home of the Board of Trade, but is the connecting link between the merchant and the farmers of the county. It is a double front, three-story building, painted white and contains the offices of the Farm Bureau and Board of Trade. On the first floor a large room has been fitted up as a meeting place and rest room. Here will be installed a permanent "Home Products Exhibit" of Washington and Washington County. Panoramic pictures of local manufacturing plants, with interior views of the factories and exhibits of the manufactured articles wherever practicable will be displayed in this room. The Agricultural Bureau will also install a permanent exhibit. These exhibits will be made up of the choicest grains and fruits of the country pictures of "blue ribbon" stock, with the names and addresses of the owners.

In another large room on the second floor a fine large, well-lighted room has been fitted up for public meetings and here noon-day lunches will be served, a complete and modern kitchen being provided in the rear room.

On the second floor two well-lighted, airy rooms have been set aside by the Board of Trade and furnished by the ladies of the Commercial Events Club as rest rooms, a comfort station for ladies who may be visiting in the city or doing town shopping. Later it is proposed to establish in this connection a down town day nursery, with a trained nurse in attendance to care for the babies while the mother shops.

In the rear of the Community Building a roomy hitching yard has been opened to the public, which will accommodate 50 teams comfortably. After hitching Main street may be reached directly through the Community Building where wash rooms and all minor accommodations of a hotel will be provided.

How Collection Agencies Eat Up What Little They Collect

The Case of a Pennsylvania Subscriber Who Accidentally Learned That a Philadelphia Agency Had Collected an Account. How They Convincingly Showed Him That They Owed Him Nothing, but That He Owed Them $1.79.

Another case showing the methods of collection agencies. A Pennsylvania subscriber writes as follows—

Some time ago I gave the Mercantile Credit Association a lot of old accounts for collection, with the understanding that they were to receive 10 per cent. on all accounts they could collect without bringing suit, and where they brought suit they were to retain 50 per cent. I found they had collected one account, but said nothing to me. I called them to account. They brought no suit to collect the $5.42.

The "Mercantile Credit Association" gives as its address Suite 304 Bulletin Building, Juniper and Filbert streets, Philadelphia. The subscriber sends with his letter some data showing how the agency accounted for the $5.42 which he discovered it had collected without notifying him. The agency sent him the following statement:—

| | |
|---|--------|
| CR. | |
| Collected from H. M..... | $5.42 |
| DR. | |
| To 50 per cent. com. | |
| $5.42 | $2.71 |
| To docket fees, 20 accounts at 25c..... | 4.50 |
| | $7.21 |
| Balance due us..... | $1.79 |

There appears to be two slick tricks revealed here—two of the familiar old tricks of the typical collection agency.

First, apparently charging 50 per cent. commission on a collection that did not require suit, and which therefore, under the contract, was entitled to but 10 per cent. We are not at all sure, however, that this subscriber will not find tucked away somewhere in his contract a clause which he overlooked, giving the agency the right to charge what it has.

The second trick is the "docket fees," which in this case appear to mean merely a charge of 25 cents each for 20 accounts. For what is not revealed. The term "docket" as usually understood, means a record book kept by the clerk of a court. There is some reason to believe that the agency uses the word to describe its charge so that the customer will believe that it was some kind of a charge for suing debtors. It is certain that no collection agency has a right, under the name "docket fees" or anything else, to charge 25 cents each for 20 accounts unless the contract gives it that right. This subscriber should look at his contract and see if it contains a provision giving such right. If it does not, he has a civil and criminal right of action against the agency, in our judgment.

One suspicious thing about most all of these collection agencies is that nowhere about their stationery appears any individual name. The aim seems to be to do business under some indefinite name without letting anybody know what the concern really consists of. The Philadelphia concern sent the above subscriber a letter signed "The Mercantile Credit Association" somebody, but the name was an illegible scrawl, whether intentional we do not know.

Give Your Jobber a Square Deal and Other People Will Give You One

Little talks between wholesalers and retailers on the ethics of fair business—what is square and what is tricky?—Doing unto the jobber as you would have him and other people do unto you.

No. 14

It is a rule with no exception that a retailer, in stating his financial condition to his jobber should speak with the utmost frankness, for two reasons: First, because a jobber can get all the information anyway; and second, lack of frankness invariably arouses suspicion—suspicion, often which is quite without reason.

No retailer ever lost anything by treating his jobber with the utmost candor, and thousands have gained by it and are gaining by it every day.

Criticisms of Pennsylvania Food Storage Law Reach Head at Commission Hearing. Nobody Appears to Oppose Amendment

Pennsylvania Legislative Commission to Examine Workings of Act of 1913 Regarding Cold Storage of Food, Hears Arguments in Philadelphia Against Present Act. General Demand for Longer Time Limit. No Arguments Presented for Continuance of Present Law.

The Legislative Commission appointed by Governor Tener to ascertain whether there is real cause to object to the Pennsylvania Cold Storage Act of 1913, held a hearing in Philadelphia on Thursday, Friday and Saturday last, having previously met in Pittsburg. The Philadelphia hearings were in one of the Council Chambers on the fourth floor of City Hall. The first day was devoted to hearing arguments against the law.

The first speaker was Mr. Frank R. Shattuck, who rose on behalf of the cold storage companies, in which business $25,000,000 is represented. He criticised the present law as being the most drastic law on cold storage that there is in any State, and as discouraging the cold storage business in Pennsylvania, when the aim of the Commission should be to help a business that is of benefit to the farmer, the dealer and the consumer. Mr. Shattuck stated that the provision regarding the thirty-day period was contradictory to the remainder of the law, and the meaning of this clause is not clear at all. He strongly favored an extension of the time limit on butter, eggs and poultry. Mr. Shattuck placed on file with the committee what the cold storage companies with their close knowledge of the matter think.

Elton J. Buckley spoke on behalf of the Acme Tea Co. He said in part: "I appear here on behalf of the Acme Tea Co. of this city, which perhaps more than any other single company has a very keen interest in what you do to-day and particularly what you do when the Legislature convenes, because it does a very large business in products which are affected by this law. Like every other dealer, it is compelled during certain periods of the year to depend for a part of its stock upon products that have for a time been placed in cold storage. I believe the time will come, and is not very far distant when the public will come to recognize the absurdity of any time limit on cold storage products, and when the only restrictions surrounding these products will be first, that the consumer should be told fully and clearly that the product offered is a cold storage product, and second, that it shall be wholesome and edible when offered for sale. What possible difference does it make that an egg, for instance, has remained in cold storage for eighteen months or two years, if it is perfectly edible and wholesome at the time offered for sale?

"I think it is generally admitted that the eggs that go into cold storage in April are the best in the entire year, not only in quality, but greatest in quantity. As the law stands eggs stored in April must be withdrawn by December or be condemned and sent out of the State, while June eggs, which are greatly inferior, may be sold up until February and March despite the fact that their keeping quality is very much lower than the April eggs. The only way that a dealer can avoid the probability of having a part of his stock condemned and upon his hands in December is to store such a small quantity in April as he is sure he can dispose of, which tends to advance the price when that small stock of eggs comes to be sold.

"By the arbitrary time limit the public during the period from December on until the flush of the season in April comes is simply deprived of the finest eggs in the year, because the later stored eggs are at all times of an inferior quality.

"It seems to me that a logical and proper amendment to this act would be to make a time limit from season to season.

"I understand that there is an objection on the ground that this would encourage speculation, but I say that the man who knows his April eggs must be removed from the State or consumed before the next season's eggs come upon the market cannot speculate very much. His speculation anyway would be in a way directly in line with the consumer's interest, for he could store more eggs in April than he can now, and make the selling price less.

"In regard to the provision that when a consumer is offered products kept under cold storage the fact shall be made known to him by having the date of storing appear on the product," Mr. Buckley said. "Admitting that the consumer deserves to be told this, unfortunately it works out to his disadvantage as to eggs, for he will at once conclude that eggs marked April 1914 are not as good as those marked July 1914, which conclusion he would have a right to reach with the average product. My clients state that time after time they have seen this happen. Probably the only way to remedy this is through a wide educational campaign through the newspapers, etc."

The next speaker was Mr. F. P. Larkin, a fish dealer on Dock street, Philadelphia. He objected to the nine-month limit on the cold storage of fish on the ground that the whiting fish, which is a wholesome and cheap food product, is caught in the early spring in great quantities and which, under the nine-month provision of the cold storage act, is practically eliminated from the market during the last three months of the year, despite the fact that it is in a wholesome condition after the expiration of the nine-month time limit. "The restriction is unfair, also, in that it will not allow the dealer to put back into cold storage a product that had once been withdrawn," said Mr. Larkin. "It has happened with me several times that I have received an order to ship a certain quantity of cold storage fish. I have withdrawn the fish from the warehouse, just about to ship them, when a telegram from the consignee is handed me to the effect that a sudden change in the weather makes it inadvisable for him to receive the fish at this time, and asking me to hold up the order until otherwise notified. Under this act, as it now stands, I may not return those goods to the cold storage warehouse. These good fish then that cost me lots of money must be consigned to the dump heap. There should be an amendment made to the present act establishing a trustworthy man in Philadelphia to whom we could submit such cases so that wholesome food products may be returned to cold storage in order to prevent their waste."

Dr. Mary Pennington represented the United States Department of Agriculture, in response to a telegram to that Department from the Cold Storage Commission. Dr. Pennington's address was a long and careful presentation of facts regarding poultry and eggs, proven through tests by the Department of Agriculture. She used a chart to show first the effects of different temperatures on perfectly good fowls. A chicken kept at a temperature of 65 degrees for three days is inedible; one kept in the ordinary housewife's refrigerator is still edible after five and a half days; at 32 degrees a fowl is edible on the fifteenth day. Even on the twenty-second day at this temperature a chicken is quite good, in fact the flavor it attains in this period of time is commonly accepted as highly desirable; a chicken kept in a room at 10 degrees is not changed after four months; a slight change takes place after a period of eight months; a slightly greater change in twelve months, but the chicken is comparable with one kept in a housewife's refrigerator five and a half days. After sixteen months the chicken begins to lose its good flavor rapidly, although we have been unable to find anything unwholesome in its composition. Tests showed that the change was in the acidity, or rancidity, of the fowls, that is the fat (which gives the flavor to any flesh) undergoes a change. Dr. Pennington stated that the vitally important thing is that the fowl is in prime condition when put in cold storage. First the fowl must have been properly killed and completely bled, and the skin not torn. By the cutting of a certain muscle in the throat which the brain uses to control the keeping in of the feathers, it becomes easy to pluck them from the skin without injuring it, and by cutting another cord the blood will flow freely from the mouth until the carcass is empty. The entrails must not be withdrawn. The chicken should be starved for at least twenty-four hours before it is slaughtered.

In the ordinary course of business it takes about three weeks from the time that a chicken is withdrawn from a cold storage house until the time it reaches the consumer. After any longer period than this, however, deterioration sets in.

Dr. Pennington illustrated with water sketches the relative values of April eggs and June eggs and August eggs, and proved that April cold storage eggs were superior even after several months to summer fresh eggs. By holding an egg before a candle in a dark room it is possible to know the condition of the egg. A good egg will show a dark spot in the center. When the yolk or dark spot is near the top or the bottom it is not first grade. She explained that the hen is in better condition in the spring and lays better eggs and larger quantities.

Nature provides a mucilaginous substance for the covering of the egg, which is a necessary protection. Eggs which are allowed to be wet lose this covering and consequently are open to bacteria and mold.

The careful tests of the Department prove that an egg is just as palatable at the end of nine months as when it entered the refrigerating plant, but after that it rapidly loses its palatability, but not its wholesomeness. It is still good for bakers' uses, etc.

Dr. Pennington spoke of inferior or second grade eggs which rapidly change to third and fourth grade if shipped during the warm weather at great distances, which may be conserved by being taken from the shell immediately and kept in vessels under cold storage conditions. Cold storage abates immediately any changes in composition, thus saving these eggs otherwise destined to become decayed and worthless.

When Dr. Pennington had finished speaking Senator Klein asked her what she thought of a twelve-month time limit for both poultry and eggs, but she declined to give any opinion, saying that her mission was simply to present facts to be acted upon by those designated to make the laws.

There was a slight misunderstanding by the Commission as to whether Dr. Pennington declared eggs unwholesome after nine months, but she set that right by stating that the change that occurred was in palatability only.

The Commission was curious as to the relative value of the brown and of the white egg. Dr. Pennington stated that the brown had a larger keeping quality and was worth 5 cents more per dozen in Philadelphia and in Boston, but that in New York white eggs were 5 cents higher than brown. It is merely a matter of fashion.

A member of the Commission asked Dr. Pennington's opinion of the method of preserving eggs known as liquid glass. She replied that it was a good method for the housewife but not practical on a large scale.

After an adjournment of half an hour the following addressed the Commission: Mr. Harry Nusbaum, president Philadelphia Produce Exchange; Mr. Charles Calwell, president Corn Exchange National Bank; Mr. Jacob Miller, an egg dealer in Philadelphia, and Mr. Tucker, a fire insurance solicitor.

Mr. Nusbaum was listened to with attention as he presented the arguments that had already been brought out regarding the wholesomeness of food products after the time limit set by the act, urging an extension to a year's time to prevent the loss of business to the cold storage houses of Philadelphia, and to prevent the waste of products that are needed at certain periods of the year, owing to lack of fresh supplies. Mr. Nusbaum pointed out the absurdity of the idea that an extension of the time limit would encourage the holding up of stock until the time limit was near expiration, because, he said, nobody would think of using cold storage products to compete with fresh products of a year later date. He said in reference to the requirement that goods stored in Pennsylvania must be marked "Wholesome Cold Storage" that it placed Pennsylvania products at a disadvantage with similar products from other States, as the public would invariably choose the unbranded goods of other States to the cold storage labeled products of Pennsylvania, because the public is not educated to the use of cold storage foods as yet.

Mr. Nusbaum said that the rumors from time to time of a corner in poultry, eggs, etc., were ridiculous, because of the thousands and thousands of small producers, making it practically impossible for a concerted action.

He filed with the Commission a tentative draft of a law which the Exchange which he represents considers reasonable and logical.

Mr. Charles Calwell said that "this question is very important from the banking point of view. We have loaned millions of dollars on butter, eggs and poultry. The Pennsylvania Cold Storage Law by putting a time limit on these goods destroys our collateral."

Mr. Jacob Miller in support of his statement that the present act sends business out of Pennsylvania into other States told of an old customer of his who said that this year he would place 10,000 eggs with Mr. Miller and another 10,000 he would store in New Jersey, a loss of several thousand dollars to Mr. Miller.

Mr. Tucker said that even his business was affected. "Three years ago I remitted by cable $75,000 to $100,000 insurance on butter and eggs stored in Philadelphia. Last year I did not remit any. I say this to show you that eggs and butter are not coming to Pennsylvania, but are going outside the State into New Jersey and New York."

Friday had been set apart to hear from those who wanted the law kept as it is, or made even more severe. Nobody appeared for this purpose when the Commission convened, and an adjournment was taken. There was no session on Saturday.

Want to Stop Use of Word "Quaker" on Merchandise.

Bill Introduced in Congress Would Prevent Use of the Name of Any Religious Sect as Proprietary Brand. Worst Blow Would be Struck at Quaker Oats and Quaker Whisky.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,

December 18, 1914.

A bill has been introduced in the House which seems quiet enough, but which is probably destined to stir up a greater rumpus than any bill that has gone in for some time. It has been fathered by Representative Palmer of Pennsylvania, and its object is to prevent the use of the name "Quaker" or that of any other religious society as a trade brand for goods sold in interstate commerce. Those favoring the bill are not so much opposed to the Quaker figure which appears on Quaker Oats, but object most strongly to the Quaker figure now being used on a bottle which contains what the proprietors call "Quaker whiskey."

Members of the Society of Friends, who go to New York frequently, have become aroused over the bright lights of an electric sign which spell "Quaker Whisky." It is understood that the employment of the name by the whiskey firm started the crusade now agitating the members of the Society of Friends throughout the country.

Representatives of the Quaker Oats Co. appeared before the Committee having this bill in charge last week and protested against it, saying it would ruin their business.

HOLT.

AMONG THE TRADE.

H. S. Pennypacker, who was some time in the wholesale butter and egg business at 102 Vine street, Philadelphia, has joined the egg department of John Jamison.

A fine of $75 and costs on Wednesday was imposed on Henry and George W. Erdman, formerly of the firm of H. Erdman's Sons, 1810 Frankford avenue, for selling an imitation vinegar as the product of apple cider.

Commercial Movement of Onions and Cabbage.

Reports received from 290 shipping points in 16 principal late onion producing States, show that approximately 18,934 carloads of onions were shipped from these stations in 1913. Of this number, about 12,239 cars were moved during harvest time, and 6,695 carloads were held in storage at these points for later sale. From these reports the estimated commercial onion crop for the year 1914 at the same points is 21,623 carloads, and the estimated quantity going into storage at those points 7,879 carloads. These 16 States produce about 75 per cent. of the annual crop. Reports received from 328 shipping points in 10 principal late cabbage producing States show that approximately 18,694 carloads of cabbage were shipped from these stations in 1913. Of this number, about 14,465 were moved during harvest time, and 4,229 carloads were held in storage at those points for later sale. From these reports, the estimated commercial cabbage crop for the year 1914 at the same points is 20,390 carloads, of which number around 15,745 cars are being moved during harvest time and about 4,645 cars put into storage. These 10 States produce about two-thirds of the annual crop.

WITH THE EDITOR

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has the highest respect for E. F. Ladd, Commissioner Ladd's Dairy and Food Alleged Ruling on Undrawn Poultry. Commissioner of North Dakota. It regards him as an energetic and upright official. But if he is properly quoted in an opinion which has been published in some of our contemporaries during the week, we believe that Mr. Ladd's friends should look closely into the question of his sanity.

The Commissioner is quoted as having rendered an opinion that it was a violation of the North Dakota food law to sell undrawn poultry, because the entrails constituted "filthy, decomposed or putrid animal substance" under the law. If it does that under the North Dakota law, it also does it under the Pennsylvania law, the Federal law and practically every other food law, for every one contains a provision declaring food adulterated if it contains any "filthy, decomposed or putrid animal substance."

We believe the esteemed Commissioner Ladd to be as wrong as wrong can be. When the law says no food shall contain filthy, decomposed or putrid animal substance, it means contain it so that it may be eaten by the consumer. Sausage, for example, made partly with rotten meat. Or catsup made with rotten tomatoes. The entrails of a fowl, which by invariable custom are removed before the fowl is eaten, are not "contained" in the fowl, in the legal sense, at all.

As a matter of fact, we are unwilling to believe that Commissioner Ladd ever made such a ruling.

Perhaps not since men began to exist has there been a perfect man—a man so completely rounded that he was as strong at one point as at another; in other words, having no weaknesses. Take Thomas A. Edison. We regard Edison as a demigod among men. His genius amounts to more than genius; it is supernatural inspiration. No man like him has ever lived.

Yet when Edison's enormous plant burned down the other day, with a loss of $7,000,000, it developed that he had only about $750,000 insurance! Think of the fearful negligence of that—from Edison, the man who has peered further into nature's mysteries than any other man.

We have heard it said, and we are coming to believe it true, that the stronger a man's strong points the weaker his weak points will be. In other words, the weaknesses of a strong man are apt to be much greater weaknesses than those of the average man. The case of Edison and his fire insurance is a case in point.

Any business man who fails to protect himself by insurance, from every conceivable contingency, is a very foolish and short-sighted man, even though he be as great as Thomas A. Edison.

Whoever is fathering the bill just introduced in Congress forbidding

The Quaker's Poor Case Against Quaker Oats.

the use of the name of any religious sect as a proprietary brand, they haven't a leg to stand on as to the use of the word "Quaker" in connection with Quaker Oats. For forty years "Quaker" has been used as a rolled oats brand in this country without a word of public protest from the Quakers. Now, after it has become one of the most valuable trade-marks in the world, they decide that it is disrespectful to them, and want to stop it. They should be laughed out of Congress. One of the most familiar principles of the law is known as estoppel. It is a rule of justice and right. When A stands by and sees B do something to his (A's) disadvantage, without a protest, he (A) cannot thereafter object to B continuing to do it, nor can he collect damages for what has been done. "You should object in time," is the substance of the principle. It is directly applicable here.

At the same time a law would probably be good that forbade the use of the name of a religious sect in connection with liquor. There is a question of sacrilege there which affects the general public.

Here is a dispatch from a Western paper:—
This Law is Not Needed.

The City Club of Chicago and other organizations which have been active in the promotion of the "Public Health Exhibition" that has been in progress all of this week at the headquarters of the club in Chicago, have announced that they are working on a bill to be introduced at the next session of the Illinois Legislature that will make the retail dealer in foodstuffs directly liable for damages in case impure goods sold by them cause illness or death of a consumer.

The City Club is badly advised if it does not know that this is already the law. In any part of the United States a consumer injured by bad food can sue the dealer of whom he bought it for damages, and can collect them, provided he can show that the dealer knew the food was bad or should have known it. Of course if it is something like a sealed can of salmon that does the harm, the retailer is not legally responsible; many cases decide that.

National Retail Grocers' Association Launching a Nationwide Organizing Campaign.

President Connolly Will Tour West and South in National Organization Interest, and Secretary Green Has Already Invaded the East. National Association Will be Active in Increasing Membership From Now On.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 14, 1914.

The organization work carried on by the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States started shortly after the Louisville convention, when President F. B. Connolly made an official call on a number of local associations in the Eastern States, attended the Illinois State convention and represented the National Association of Retail Grocers at the wholesale grocers convention at Minneapolis.

Mr. W. M. Howe, of Kansas City, was appointed National organizer by President Connolly on July 1st and spent the months of July and August organizing the State of Missouri. From September 14th until November 12th Organizer Howe devoted his time in the State of Kansas, increasing that State Association with the following new local associations and a number of individual members:—

Iola, 30; Humboldt, 21; Neodesha, 6; Cherryvale, 12; Independence, 5; Coffeyville, 15; Parsons, 35; Girard, 15; Wichita, 35; Mulberry, 1.

On November 16th Organizer Howe began work in Michigan to increase the membership of the Michigan Retail Grocers' and Merchants' Association, where he is now engaged, with satisfactory results, having already organized St. John, Mich., 8 members; Owosso, 25 members; Adrian, 15 members during his first week.

On August 24th President Connolly appointed another organizer, Mr. E. A. Ewing, who, during seven weeks ending October 10th, organized 17 new locals in California, which increased the California State Association by 200 new members.

On October 26th Organizer Ewing began work in the State of Washington, where he has been meeting with good success. Western Washington was first organized, and during the past two weeks he has been at work in Eastern Washington, with headquarters at Spokane, under the direction of President Kinsey, of the Washington State Association. He began organizing in Idaho last week.

President Connolly arranged with National Secretary John A. Green to do some organizing work in the Atlantic States, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia. Secretary Green has made two organizing trips into these States, addressing large gatherings of local associations that are in existence in the larger cities to induce them to join the National Association.

The call for the next semi-annual meeting of the Executive Board to take place in Chicago Monday, January 11th, and Tuesday, January 12th, has been issued by President Connolly. At this meeting the expiration of the contract with the C. M. Wessels Co. on advertising will be acted upon. A nationwide fight against the encroaching coupon evil, as well as trading stamps, will be launched with renewed vigor.

After this meeting President Connolly will visit the Eastern States and attend several conferences in New York City, after which he will visit Washington, D. C., and then proceed into the Southern States to Atlanta, Ga., and to New Orleans, La., where he will arrange for an organizing campaign for the purpose of forming a State Association in Louisiana. The officials of the Texas State Association will also be visited by the National President on his way back to California.

The following State conventions will take place in the future:—

Montana Retail Merchants' Association, at Helena, January 18 and 19, 1915.
Colorado Retail Grocers' and Mer-nts' Association, at Denver, January 19 and 20, 1915.

regon State Association, at Portland, February 15, 16 and 17, 1915.
Michigan Retail Grocers and Merchants' Association, at Lansing, February 20 and 21, 1915.
Minnesota Retail Grocers' and General Merchants' Association, at St. Paul, February 22, 23 and 24, 1915.
The National Association will be represented at each of these conventions one of its officers.

The War Tax and the General Merchant.

Hanover, Pa., Dec. 9, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please give me some information in regard to the war tax in effect December 1st. Mine is a grocery line, with some tobacco and cigars. I did not get any notice and do not know whom to write. I suppose my stock should be stamped.

By so doing you will greatly oblige,

Yours truly,

W. L. ZEPP.

As a tobacco dealer you must pay a special tax of $4.80 per year, provided you sell more than $200 of tobacco yearly. If you sell less you are not taxed.

The following articles are also taxed: Perfumery, cosmetics, essence, extract, toilet water, vaseline, petrolatum, hair oil, pomade, hair dressing, hair restorative, hair dye, tooth wash, dentrifice, tooth paste, aromatic cachous or any similar substance or article, 1/8 cent stamp if retail value does not exceed 5 cents; 2-8 cent stamp where value does not exceed 10 cents; 3/8 cent stamp where value does not exceed 15 cents; 5/8 cent stamp where value does not exceed 25 cents. Chewing gum, 4-cent stamp for each box, carton, jar or other package containing chewing gum not exceeding $1 in value; 4-cent stamp for each additional dollar in value or fraction thereof.

Retailers having any of these on hand December 1st must buy the stamps and put them on before they sell them.

An Echo of the Ivins' Ad-Writing Contest.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 14, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am deeply indebted to you for a thrill, the like of which it has not often been my privilege to experience.

Of course, I do not undervalue the well-worth-while tangible reward that came to me as a token of victory in the Ivins' advertising contest, but I value the peculiar, inexpressible sensation of winning still more.

The subject, however, was so simple and so easy as to be well within the scope of my meagre talents, for one should have no difficulty in setting down the merits of Ivins' cakes and crackers, they are so many and varied.

My mother shared with me the glory of conquest, and in discussing my good fortune, paid a rather enthusiastic tribute to the excellence of Ivins' products, saying among other things, "It would do your heart good to see the way they are packed." By which I am reminded that the consumer is sometimes a discerning and observant person.

I should like you to repeat my thanks to the Ivins people, not so much for the $20 which the contest yielded to me, but rather for that very vague and indefinable thing which I call "thrill," for the want of a word to more fitly describe the emotions that possessed me when I became aware that I had claimed the first prize.

Yours truly,

THOMAS KERR.

Marking Stock on Hand Under N Pennsylvania Net Weight Law

Rheems, Pa., Dec. 16, 1911

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am a subscriber to your paper and would like to ask you a few questions. You can answer through your paper if you wish, as I am sure your answers will be appreciated by other merchants.

In regards to the weight and measure law, going into effect January 1, 1912, in looking over my stock of packaged goods I find nearly all package goods marked showing the contents. Will we do when they are not marked?

For instance, I have some Harford Pride Brand shoepeg corn, No. 2 cans packed by J. S. Mitchell & Bro., Abbeville, Md.; Knighthood baked beans with tomato sauce, No. 2 cans, packed for Reeves, Parvin & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Now, these two brands of canned goods do not have the contents on the package. In such cases what will you do?

Yours truly,

P. N. KRAYBILL.

You must weigh all these packaged goods, make a calculation as to the weight of the container, and mark the label in such a way as to show the weight of the contents. Be careful not to understate it rather than overstate it, but get as close as you can. Perhaps the packer or jobber from whom you bought the goods will supply you with stickers; some of them are doing this. If not, you can buy a plain white sticker on which you can write or rubber stamp the necessary wording, provided you have only a few packages. If you have a large stock, it would probably pay to have stickers printed.

No Higher Meat Freights Until April 15, Anyway.

Proposed increases in freight rates on live stock, fresh meats and packing house products from Chicago, St. Louis and other Western centers to Eastern cities were suspended on Monday by the Interstate Commerce Commission until April 15th for investigation. It is estimated that had the increased rates been permitted to go into effect they would have yielded to the roads an added income of nearly $10,000,000 annually. The proposed advances affected not only live stock of all kinds, but fresh meats and packing house products of every description. On cattle, for instance, the increase would have been from 28 to 33 cents a hundred pounds between Chicago and New York; on fresh meats, from 45 to 50 cents a hundred pounds, and on general packing house products from 30 to 33 cents a hundred pounds. Vigorous protests against the increases were made to the Commission, not only by the meat packers and live stock producers, but also by the general consuming public. The Commission, in its order of to-day, did not pass upon the reasonableness or the unreasonableness of the proposed advances, but indicated that they would be made the subject of an investigation to be held at a later time.

Speculation in Sugar Futures Begins on Coffee Exchange. Produce Exchange Will Fight Reduction in Free Flour Storage. Government's Sharp Attack on Paper Carton Combine.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, December 18, 1914.

Speculative trading in raw sugar futures began on the Coffee exchange last Wednesday. About 1,000 tons were traded in the first day, ranging from February delivery to November. The Sugar contracts traded in are basis of Cuba centrifugals 96 degree average polarization outturn. The unit is 50 tons and the price is on sugar in bond, not including the duty. Prices on the first day varied from 2.85 and 2.90 for February shipment to 3.35 for November (1915).

The Produce Exchange has sent representatives to Washington to put up a stiff fight against the recently reported railroad rule reducing the period of free storage of flour shipped into this city from ten days to five. The same regulation has been made in Philadelphia and Baltimore, and all goes into effect January 1st. An endeavor has been made to impress upon the Interstate Commerce Commission that they had before them not alone a question of transportation, but one that dealt directly with the food supply of Greater New York. In the event of a serious railroad blockade from snow or other causes the supply of flour could easily, if not actually, pass below the danger point. If the railroads could guarantee arrivals within a five-day variation the matter would be simplified, but the burdens now sought to be placed upon the shipper are declared to be of the railroads' making, and there is no precaution within the power of the shipper to take that will avoid them. The point was also made that bakers on the East Side, from Canal street to Harlem, have no local receiving station, and in every instance it means a long truck haul. With flour sold on such a close margin as it is the extra storage charges sought to be imposed often turn profit into loss.

The Government is making another attack upon the local combine of manufacturers who make pasteboard cartons for all sorts of purposes, one of the chief purposes being to pack thousands of proprietary brands in. The defendants in the suit include over 100 large and prominent boxboard manufacturers in all parts of the United States.

The new attack just now begun is based on the charge that in spite of many warnings and previous prosecutions, the Boxboard combine has been guilty of "aggravated and persistent" violation of the law. A special Grand Jury to indict the defendants again convened here last Wednesday. Several previous indictments are pending.

The Government charges that by various schemes of preventing competition the Boxboard Trust has cost the people of the United States $20,000,000, this coming about through the excessive prices charged for all sorts of boxes and cartons.

The following concerns are to be indicted:—

William C. Geer, president of the Albia Box and Paper Co., Troy, N. Y.; Henry Schreiter, president of the Ravenswood Paper Mill Co., Long Island City; William H. Smith, general manager of the American Paper Board Co., Bogota, N. J.; Sidney Mitchell, president American Strawboard Co., New York City; Benjamin Ward, president, and F. M. Butler, secretary, Clinton Paper Mills, Passaic, N. J.; Emmons Bryant, president Fort Orange Paper Co., Castleton, N. Y.; Theodore Foster, secretary Foster Box Board Paper Co., Utica, N. Y.; William C. Shortess, general manager Haverhill Box Board Co., Haverhill, Mass.; Robert B. McEwan, president McEwan Bros., Whippany, N. J.; William R. Shaffer, general manager New Haven Pulp and Paper Co., New Haven, Conn.; Henry L. Paddock, president Oswego Falls Pulp and Paper Co., Fulton, N. Y.; Samuel A. Short, Jr., secretary Philadelphia Paper Mfg. Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; Charles E. Williams, treasurer Piermont Paper Co., Piermont, N. Y.; Andrew Tait, treasurer Tait & Sons Co., Bridgeport, Conn.; Louis Newman, president Tonawanda Board and Paper Co., Tonawanda, N. Y.; W. H. Richardson, Traders' Paper Board Co., Bogota, N. J.; Sidney Mitchell, president United Box Board Co., Whippany, N. J.; Matthias Plum, Jr., Waverly Paper Box Board Co., Waverly, N. J., and Frank S. Harrison and J. A. Eyster, of Eyster & Son, Halton, W. Va.

The official figures show a 300 per cent. increase in the exports of foodstuffs from the United States during the month of November. This is entirely due to the European war. In breadstuffs alone $40,232,832 were sent abroad, this being an increase of $30,125,000. Meat and cattle exports also increased $2,364,000 and the exports of practically everything else sent out of the country.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea steady; demand from home trade quiet. Export trade continues by reason of scarcity in London.—Coffee dull with an easy tone.—Sugar firmer, most refiners quoting 4.95 for granulated. No pressure to sell.—Canned goods steady and quiet. Some tomatoes said to be about at 62½ cents f. o. b. in a large way, but this is not the market.—Dried fruits quiet without any change.—Wheat firmer owing to heavy foreign buying. Market shows an advance.—Flour quite dull but firmer in sympathy with wheat. Prices a shade higher for the week.

Why Not Sell Imported Cheese?

You will sell more cheese if you tell your customers you are buying your Emmenthaler, Roquefort, Camembert and other fancy cheese from Carl Wilde, Philadelphia's largest cheese importer, because he has the reputation of handling only the best. Owing to his enormous business he is able to sell you at the price of ordinary cheese.

Also—tell him what you need in Delicatessen and Fancy Groceries. His stock is complete and his prices right. Once a customer always a customer.

The First Sale Does the Work

The first sale of Wheatena is the only one a grocer needs to make to nine consumers out of ten. After that it makes its own sales. Of course we don't sell consumers, but we know in many ways that this is so.

And the reason is that Wheatena (the hearts of selected wheat) is quite different from other cereals in two ways: First in composition, and second because it holds its people while they don't.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

The tea market is in good condition, without any change in prices for the week. There appears to be no surplus of any teas, and Formosas from 20 to 25 cents appears to be especially scarce. There may be a slight advance as the season proceeds; almost certainly there will be if a good, brisk demand develops. The present demand is fair.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos is perhaps feeling a little better on account of better financial arrangements having been made in Brazil, but nevertheless, the market shows very little strength, and on all grades of Rio and Santos it is still a buyer's market. Mild coffees are also very dull and weakish rather than strong. Java and Mocha unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market has recovered 10 points from last week's slump, and on Wednesday refined advanced to 4.95 cents for granulated. This was due to about a corresponding advance in raws. There was quite a demand due to the advance, but all at the old price, which the refiners accepted as usual.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is in good demand at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup is dull at ruling figures. Molasses fairly active and unchanged.

Fish.

Mackerel are very dull and prices are about unchanged. There will be practically no business in them until after the first of the year. This includes all grades. Cod, hake and haddock in fair demand at unchanged prices. Salmon of all grades slow at the moment from first hands. Domestic sardines are a shade higher, probably 5 to 10 cents per case. Imported sardines still scarce and steady to firm.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged from a week ago; demand quiet. Peaches and apricots likewise unchanged; demand quiet. Raisins seem rather remarkably dull, considering the season. Currants quiet and unchanged. Figs and dates firm and in good demand. Citron steady, at ruling prices.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are a shade higher and the situation is firm by reason of scarcity. The demand is good. Marrows are unchanged on last week's basis; demand moderate. California limas show no change and fair demand. Green and Scotch firm and high; demand fair.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged from last week. Prices are steady and the demand is quiet. Corn and peas are also about unchanged, the demand being an ordinary reasonable one and prices unchanged all along the line. Apples are still cheap and depressed; demand quiet. California canned goods very dull from first hands, demand fair among the jobbers. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and quiet.

Butter.

The butter market is firm on all grades at present prices. There is a good consumptive demand. The make is short, as usual at this season, and considerable butter is coming out of storage. A continued good demand is looked for at probably about the present prices. If there is any change it will likely be a slight advance on all grades.

Eggs.

Fresh eggs continue very scarce and the receipts are readily absorbed by the consumptive demand on arrival. Storage eggs are firm at an advance of 1 cent per dozen, owing to the demand. Future prices of storage eggs depend on the weather and its effect on the production of fresh. Stocks are ample. Not much advance is expected, however.

Cheese.

The demand for cheese is light, as is usual for the season. Stocks in storage are about normal for the season, but the average quality is better than usual. The factories are now closed and conditions will probably not change until after the first of the year, when a better demand will ensue.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged, with a seasonable demand reported for everything. Pure lard is firm at an advance of ¼ cent. Compound lard is also firm, with an upward tendency. The advance, however, will probably be slight. Barrel pork, dried beef and canned meats are all unchanged, with a very light demand.

Poultry.

The outlook is for a good supply of turkeys of good quality. If the present weather holds there will be no doubt about it. Forecasting prices is difficult, but it looks like about a 25-cent market for the best. Chickens are in fair supply at 16 to 18 cents; ducks are scarce, at around 20 cents, and geese rule at 13 to 15 cents.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

The month of December is always counted the dullest month of the year in the canned goods market here, and no exception to the rule was expected this time. Indeed, there were good reasons for anticipating "the dullest ever" when the month opened, but it has not proven to be duller than in other years when general business was proceeding along normal lines and favorable conditions. Small orders do not attract much attention, when considered singly, but when the total is footed up at the end of the week it makes a respectable showing and the wide scattering of the goods gives much encouragement for the future. Apparently, the canners have met their pressing financial obligations with the money derived from their forced sales during the fall months, and their troubles in that direction are now far less acute than they were in October and November. Barring any unforeseen and unexpected stringency in the money market during the first half of the new year there are more reasons to be optimistic than otherwise anent the canned goods market.

Developments in the tomato market were unimportant. It is interesting to note, however, that continued efforts are being made to buy large lots at a shade under the going prices, especially the No. 2 size cans. Holders are chary about parting with their tomatoes at less than cost, and many of them have now stored away their holdings for the winter months in the expectation of a higher market next spring. All the indications point to an increase in the buying for prompt shipment after New Years, in the absence of freezing weather in January, but rather than risk the danger of being caught on the road in zero weather the shipment of a carload or two in the last half of this month would seem to be wise. There are some excellent trades in high-class tomatoes obtainable at the prices of ordinary quality.

More interest in corn is apparent, and some small lots changed owners this week. Spinach, sweet potatoes and string beans were fairly active, but all the other articles in the list of vegetables were dull and inactive outside of the usual daily small orders. An article that is becoming popular in a small way is mixed vegetables for soup, a seasonable item at a low cost. Baked beans and kraut are other articles that are usually wanted at this time in the season. When inventory time is passed there will be, probably, a better demand for vegetables.

Canned fruits were dull this week, with little prospect of any improvement in the demand for next week. The steady demand for pears was not in evidence this week. They have been a popular article this season. Pie peaches sold to a moderate extent this week, but the other grades of peaches were neglected. As a matter of fact, there was a dearth of orders this week for all of the other lines of fruits, and the prices for them remain unchanged.

Light buying of cove oysters this week, but they are well worth attention at to-day's low prices, and a spell of freezing weather, which is now overdue, would stiffen them up without much notice.

THOS. J. MEEHAN & Co.

Rice.

There is a marked improvement in the business conditions discernible over the previous week, and while there is no extraordinary activity apparent, the situation to-day gives indication of maintenance. There is no doubt that the opening up of the regional banks has given greater confidence in the general markets for the movement of merchandise which, with the enlarged demand from export quarters, has had a stimulating effect upon prices and caused a general stiffening on all grades. It can scarcely be regarded as an encouraging feature that the movement continues so slow with the domestic trade, which still claims no special distribution except for holiday staples. However, optimism has the greater power, and with more activity in the cotton exports, as well as general merchandise for foreign requirement, all lines and markets are showing real and permanent improvement.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast show a slight improvement over last week. Prices are held firm, although strong conditions are not anticipated until after the holidays.

New Orleans reports that despite the usual quiet period that prevails in this market during this season they are experiencing a steady demand from all sources, and daily offerings from the mills are being rapidly absorbed. The market has been further stimulated by large sales of rice for export from Gulf ports, and it is rumored that the association will shortly take action to advance prices on all grades.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, conditions are strong and reflect the steady New Orleans market. Conservative advices from the rice belt indicate that the available supply of rough and clean in the hands of farmers and millers on December 1st is less than 3,000,000 pockets, and at the present rate of distribution the entire crop will be out of first hands within the next four months.

D. TALMAGE'S SONS Co.
New York and New Orleans.

Imported Fish Specialties.

There have been very few arrivals of Holland herrings during the last week. They are scarce, and trade simply has to take other herrings if they want any.

Our reports from Scotland are to the effect that the market is practically clear. There is very little to come forward. Still, it is a curious fact that prices for Scotch herrings have not advanced yet, and demand may be called only fair.

There has been a decidedly better demand for Norway mackerel, although buyers are very particular in regard to quality, and they refuse anything that is not strictly up to the mark.

The demand for imported sardines seems also to have increased. There have been quite a few good sales made during the last week of all kinds of sardines. We have had a small shipment of French sardines, which we sold readily ex dock. We have no shipments from Portugal; in fact, they have no sardines there at the present time, or very few indeed, and the outlook for packing in the near future is not very bright. In Norway they are having their own troubles. Fine goods are very scarce, and packers are unable to fill their contracts. Demand here may be called good, although buyers are taking the goods only in a hand-to-mouth way, and are not over-stocking themselves. This is only natural and usual before the end of the year, when most people take inventory, but the situation in sprats is rather serious. Stocks here are very small, and will soon be entirely cleared. In France, there are practically no sprats to be had at the present time. From Belgium, where we get our principal supplies, of course none are to be had. In fact, we cannot seem to get into communication with the factory which is or has been located in Ostend. We do not know whether it is still in existence or not. We have not heard from them, so we cannot look for any packing of Belgian sprats this coming season, and the packing starts about this or next month, as a rule.

From France we have reports that they hope to be able to pack some sprats, but they want about 10 per cent. more for the goods than they did last season; in fact, in some instances even more than 10 per cent. Sprats are selling because they are cheap, and if we have to pay those very high prices, which are now being asked by the packers, we are very much afraid that sprats cannot be sold.

STROHMAYER & ARPE Co.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The firmness in the evaporated apple market continues here, with business done at a higher rate of prices than last week. Light stocks on hand seem to the main cause of it, and it has not taken much effort on the part of the sellers to get the buyer to meet their views.

Prime quality, in 50-pound boxes, has sold at 6 cents, in carload lots, for prompt shipment, with February shipment selling at 6¼ cents. Shippers are asking ⅛ to ¼ cent over these prices for small lots. Choice has sold at 6½ cents, in boxes, for round lots, although the demand is principally for prime grade.

Raspberries continue firm and good quality is scarce. The market is quotable at 24 cents, f. o. b., in barrels.

Spices.

The market continues fairly active, with a good demand from the grinding trade. We look for an increased demand after the turn of the year. Supplies generally are small.

Pepper.—The spot supply is unusually small. All grades of black pepper are shade firmer and white peppers have advanced. Futures are fluctuating, and rice, we believe, will remain high and likely to go some little higher.

Red Peppers.—Mombassas and Japans are exceedingly scarce and likely to remain so for the next three or four months. Grinding grades are in fair Hearings on Federal Cold Storage Bill.

Hearings on the McKellar Bill to limit the length of time that food products may be kept in cold storage were begun on Thursday. A delegation representing cold storage interests discussed the measure. Dr. H. D. Pease, Director of the Department of Bacteriology at the Lederle Laboratory in New York, examined as to how long turkey could be kept in cold storage and be fit for food, said cold storage turkey was safe if inspected by Government inspectors before and after being placed in the cold storage vaults. He thought, however, that a limit on time food products can be stored should be placed on all products not frozen solid for keeping. Dr. William J. Gies, professor of bacteriological chemistry at Columbia University, described a series of experiments with cold storage fish, and told of eating flounder which had been frozen and kept for two years. He said fish did not deteriorate if properly frozen and stored. Charles F. Droste, of New York, told the committee it was impossible for a speculator to profitably keep butter and eggs in cold storage for more than nine months. At the expiration of that length of time, he said, it became unprofitable to hold cold storage eggs, because fresh eggs coming in depressed the price below what would allow a reasonable profit on the storage product.

No Competition From Italian Canned Tomatoes After All.

Philadelphia Public Ledger's Tale of Cheaply Packed Italian Tomatoes Coming Over Here to Compete With Our Already Depressed Market, Proves Unfounded. Ledger's Informant Merely Saw the Little Batch of Italian Tomatoes That Always Come Over for the Italian Population.

Here is a promised sensation that has practically vanished in thin air. The Philadelphia "Public Ledger" published the following item last Sunday:—

CANNED TOMATOES FROM ITALY.

A person recently returned from a residence in Italy says great quantities of canned tomatoes are being exported to this country. On the dock from which he sailed, he says, were stacks of cases of tomatoes, grown and canned in Italy, consigned to New York. Wages of persons employed in picking and canning tomatoes in Italy, he says, are 20 cents daily.

This looked quite important on its face, for if cheaply packed Italian tomatoes were to be brought in here to compete with our own, with the market for the latter already badly demoralized, there would be no telling what would happen. So the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" asked a number of authorities on canned goods in Philadelphia and New York for statements as to what truth there was in the "Ledger's" publication. The following were the result:—

This is what comes of sending a golf editor to report a shooting match. If this person had seen one carload of tomatoes all piled up in one block he would probably think it was a tremendous quantity.

However, aside from what he might have seen, we know that there is good demand in this country for Italian tomatoes, but it is more in the form of tomato paste, which is something similar to what we sell as tomato puree, only much more condensed. This paste and the canned tomatoes all go to the Italian trade and get the preference over our goods because they are all packed solid and are a very deep color. Many of our tomatoes are packed more or less unripe and light in color and do not suit this class of trade.

We have had several talks with a party here who calls on the Italian trade, and he advises us that practically no Italian tomatoes are coming into this market at present, principally owing to the difficulty in securing foreign exchange at a reasonable charge.

T. A. JAMES & Co., Inc.
Philadelphia, Pa.

While we handle practically no foreign tomatoes, we know that there is quite a large quantity of Italian tomatoes brought here every season, and they were shipped here this year as usual. Of course, they go to the class of trade that are in the habit of handling this class of goods.

The Italian tomato is quite different from that packed here, having a very sweet flavor. The consumers of our tomatoes would not care for the Italian tomatoes, as a rule, they are usually sold through the foreign quarter. At the same time, there are quite a few cases sold here every year, and I have no doubt but that the report in the "Ledger" is pretty nearly correct.

WILLIAM ELY, JR.,

Austin, Nichols & Co.

New York, N. Y.

We understand that there has been quite a quantity of Italian tomatoes imported, more especially for the Italian trade, and not interfering with the domestic pack at all. The price is from $2.65 to $2.90 for 2½s per case of two dozen, and for 1s $3.25 to $3.40 per case of four dozen.

KEMP, DAY & Co.

New York, N. Y.

We think that the person recently returning from Italy who is impressed with the quantity of tomatoes on the dock coming to this country must have been easily impressed and had a very small idea of the quantity of tomatoes packed and used in this country.

U. H. DUDLEY & Co.

New York, N. Y.

In other words, the "Ledger's" informant simply saw the little batch of Italian tomatoes which always comes over here for the Italian population.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Mackerel.—Pointing into the mackerel barrel and saying that they're from Norway and sell for 20 cents a pound is taking a long chance on making a sale. But hooking a nice, big, fat one out, laying it inside up on a sheet of paper and putting it on the scale, telling the price, you have the fish two-thirds sold.

Coffee.—Giving a price means little. Make her taste it from your description. But be careful that your description is accurate. If you select your best Maracaibo and tell her how mellow it is and how much stronger it drinks than coffee 2 or 3 cents a pound less, and the pronounced flavor that is characteristic of this growth, without the least taste of rankness, you will make the sale.

Brooms.—You tell her No. 7 is a good broom for the money; it's marked 45 cents, and you still let it remain on the rack. No, she guesses she doesn't want a broom to-day. She tells you a big, white, excusable lie. Walks up the street still needing a broom. In she goes to another store. The other fellow pulls half a dozen out of the rack—they're all alike, but it wouldn't do to say so. He picks her broom out for her. Sweeps around her feet. Bends it. Strokes the corn so tenderly that he gives it a dollar value. Counts the sewed parts. Refers to the straight, smooth handle. Guessed she needed that broom.

Sour Kraut.—Twenty years ago a first-class grocer who handled kraut was the exception. Now we list it with futures. For your selling information we will say that there's a big difference in it. The best is cut very fine and is free from shaves. Shaves is cut from the inside or stalky part of the cabbage and should never enter into kraut at all.

Raisins.—People will sometimes tell you that you are high on Sultana raisins because you ask 18 cents per pound for them, while they buy them, or think they buy them for 15 cents. But they're not Sultanas at all—they're California seedless, bleached and very beautifully bleached at that. Then, again, you ought to be posted on seeded raisin qualities, so that an intelligent answer, as well as a business explanation, can be made when a lower price than yours is quoted.

Like prunes, muscatels are valued according to size and are graded under "crowns," 3 crown, 4 crown, 5 crown and 6 crown. So that a 3 crown raisin has little resemblance to a 5 or 6, being not only smaller, but this grade often has culls and the fruit is not as carefully seeded as the best ones.

Never encourage the sale of low-price seeded raisins for home use. You'll get no thanks for it from the home user.

These American Goods are Wanted in Russia.

The U. S. Consuls in Russia have sent the State Department notice that the following American goods are wanted in Russia and would probably sell there if samples and prices were available:—

Dry Goods—Notions—Knit Wear

Linens Getting Scarce and are Soaring in Price. Holiday Specialties Wanted.

Last week advances ranging from 10 to 13 per cent. were made by some Irish manufacturers of fine linens; in fact, low grades have also been marked up. These upward revisions were on goods to be made for the primary market, and consequently by the time they reach secondary distributors and the retail merchants, a still higher figure will rule. These increases are over the quotations named shortly after the shortage in flax sent prices on finished goods soaring. Other handlers of linens are warned to expect the withdrawal of present price lists in the near future.

Prices placed on linens when bookings for the spring season commenced appear moderate now in the light of recent happenings in the producing centers, and purchasers who did not consider the increases made at that time justified, have revised their opinions. Good flax is growing scarcer every day. A number of selling agents have been advised not to book any import orders on low end towels and crashes for delivery beyond February. Deranged shipping facilities are hampering the receipt of such goods as handkerchiefs, hem-stitched articles and fancy fabrics ordered for the holiday trade, and which are needed to meet the current demand. Should this merchandise be held up much longer retailers will not be able to move it for some time. The call for fine sets of tablecloths and napkins, at this time of the year, is insistent, although the demand is not so strong as a year ago.

Requirements of the Notion Counter to Make It Profitable and a Factor.

Why so many notion counters in the general stores are not the success they might or should be is that in a majority of cases the owners have not a proper realization of their value as money makers. While it is naturally the desire of every merchant to have each department as good as it can possibly be made, there are many reasons why the notions should receive more than the average attention. To make this counter or department the success it should be requires some little effort, to be sure, but far less investment than is generally believed.

It is not infrequently the case that even where the notions counter has had a liberal appropriation, yet owing to the fact that the stock is poorly assorted, badly arranged and carelessly displayed, the returns are very unsatisfactory. On the other hand there are notion departments which are a credit to the store, as well as exceedingly profitable, and in which the stock is kept down to the absolute limit of its necessities. The difference in the two is that the buyer of the latter is alert, careful, enterprising. Practically every successful merchant realizes that a notion counter well patronized and in favor with his customers is one of the strongest attractions in the store and aids in its growth and development.

Many opportunities for broadening the lines carried in this section present themselves. Never before were there so many specialties in notions and small wares and appealing novelties being featured. The notion counter that has gained a reputation for keeping a full assorted stock of standard and staple well-advertised goods, as well as a fairly representative assortment of dress accessories, hair ornaments, combs, curlers, braids and general knick knacks, which appeal so strongly to the feminine fancy, at popular prices, is a source of gratification to the buyer as well as to the buying public, besides being the strongest kind of a business lever.

Dry Goods, Notions and Knit Goods Jobbers To Meet in Convention.

Secretary Fernley, of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association, has sent out the notification for the eleventh annual convention of that body, which will be held in the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, January 21 and 22, 1915. At the same place the regular annual meeting of the Executive Committee will convene January 20th, at 10.30 A. M. The regular yearly meeting of the Jobbers' Association of Knit Goods Buyers will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria January 11th, at 10 o'clock A. M., and the regular annual gathering of the Jobbers' Association of Notion Buyers will be held at the same hotel January 18th, at 2 o'clock P. M.

The following day the Jobbers' Association of Dress Fabric Buyers will be held at the Waldorf at 10 o'clock A. M. A programme of interest, including a number of pertinent addresses, has been arranged for the different sessions of these important associations.

Mid-Season Dress Material Preferences.

It is undeniable that a country or small town merchant is well up in salable, if not strictly fashionable goods, but that the two run together so closely these days that a retailer who is not in near touch with what is in demand in the cities is equally ill informed as to what would and does sell best in his own locality. In other words, the two go hand in hand, with reservations and modifications, to be sure. With this understanding perhaps the inland dealer should know that the mid-season fashion of sand-colored suits for motoring, walking and out-of-door sports has made a big hit in New York. They are fawn color, and the covert cloths, both yellowish and greenish tans, seem to be the favorite material for the very mannish tailored models, and corduroy weaves and velvet and tweeds for those of more out-of-town character. With these suits are worn the blue fur boas and muffs that, despite their name, are as fawn colored as the suits. Also with such suits are also worn the fawn or covert topped boots with the dull black or patent leather or tan vamps.

Twenty Per Cent. Out in Cottons.

Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say: "The feature of the week in the dry goods trade was the announcement of a radical reduction of prices on staple domestic cotton cloths, which anticipates any reductions to be made by manufacturers and mill agents due to the low price of raw cotton. The revisions range from 1/2 cent to 1 1/2 cents a yard and represents a reduction of from 10 to 20 per cent. This revision of prices on bleached and unbleached muslin and fine cambric does not affect printed and dyed cotton cloths.

"The retail business throughout the country has been stimulated during the week by heavy holiday buying. Wholesale mail orders have been heavy in number, but none as large in total volume as during the same week a year ago. Buyers have been in the market in larger numbers than during the corresponding period last year."

The weekly review of the trade by John V. Farwell Co. says: "Last week we made a revision of prices on special brands of bleached and unbleached cotton goods, and this week prices of the corporation brands have been reduced, as has been anticipated for some time. Wholesale dry goods business is responding more freely to snow and seasonable weather. Record of buyers visiting this market during the month shows satisfactory increase over last year. A gain in collections, indicating an improved condition among retailers, is also recorded. Belfast has made a further advance of 10 per cent. on fine linens.

"The legitimate advances being asked by manufacturers of wool dress goods, caused by the present wool and dye situation, is beginning to be understood by country merchants, resulting in a decided increase in sales of wool dress goods both for present and future delivery. Early in the season many merchants would not place their orders, expecting lower prices, but now the situation is serious as far as wool dress goods are concerned. Distributors are facing a scarcity and an inevitable advance on desirable wool dress fabrics. The immediate demand is for broadcloths, especially black chiffon weights—French serges, silk and wool poplins—and for spring Palm Beach cloths, tussahs, coverts (especially in light-weights), black and white effects, also the new sand and putty shades in plain fabrics, bonwit and valderin, mesh voiles and mistral fabrics."

Suitable Stock is a General Assortment.

General storekeepers are not lacking who persist in ignoring the necessity of stocking certain lines to which they, for some reason or another, have taken prejudice or are stubbornly opposed. This is not broad merchandising, for it is not good business. On this question the "Pacific Coast Merchant" says:

While it is true that less money is made on the staples than on other merchandise, it by no means follows that the reduction of stock should be made first on all those things paying the least profit. The average store must keep a general assortment of goods. The ordinary town cannot and will not attempt to support specialty houses where nothing but the profitable merchandise of certain lines may be kept for sale. The foundation of all dry goods and general merchandise business being the staple articles that are always in demand, those articles cannot be slighted in assortment or stock on hand without getting into trouble.

The retailer who persists in reducing his investment by refusing to keep on hand certain brands of muslin, certain sheetings, certain linens, certain kinds and grades of notions—all those things that are become staple because they are indispensable—is following a sure course to reduce his business to a minimum and the possibilities of carrying a good stock of other articles to almost nothing because he drives trade away from his counters through being constantly out of this-and-that-and-the-other-thing.

A store cannot long exist when customers who inquire for staples are met with, "I'm sorry, but we are entirely out. Won't something else do?" There are times when the sale of a yard of muslin and a spool of thread may mean more than the sale of a silk dress, for the future business of the store.

Brief Summary of the Dry Goods Markets.

A heavy invoice of hosiery from Germany, through the port of Philadelphia, an unexpected arrival, caused a prominent jobbing house to cancel a large order placed with a domestic mill. There was some kicking on the part of the latter, but after all, what could the management do but "grin and bear it." As a matter of fact, were the foreign markets as accessible as they were a year ago, three-fourths of the American hosiery plants would be compelled to shut down. If further importations are received, it is likely prices will be revised to the trade only.

The familiar trade-mark of the Cooper Underwear Co., Kenosha, Wis., the figure of a man strapping a grip—to display the elasticity of the "Krotch"—has been adapted to the holiday season. The figure is shown with a make-up of Santa Claus, and the well-known outer garments are ready at hand to slip on over the union suit. The copy suggests giving these suits as holiday presents—rather a delicate proceeding at times, where sex is concerned.

While the consumer may not receive any benefit from the lower prices in cottons, a better quality is being sold over the counter in all lines of dress materials.

One of the New York manufacturers of women's dresses and suits, who is a strong advocate of American fashions, recently gave a private exhibition of his first spring collection of models. It was open to other manufacturers in the line and the same courtesy was extended to dressmakers. It was a great success.

The new prices that are being named on branded domestic cotton goods are at least giving buyers confidence that there is a bottom to values for the next season.

No very strong revision can be made in colored goods. Something has been done in gingham, denims and other lines, but it is unwise to expect the same sort of revision due to lower cotton, which has been quoted in bleached and brown cottons. Prints and percales, however, will be lowered.

Certain lines of messalines are being bought liberally. But the limited initial orders placed for silks by all classes of merchants show that they have not made anything like normal purchases for future business.

Trade-Mark Matters.

An appeal has been taken from a recent decision of the United States District Court, Southern District of Ohio, in the "Onyx" underwear trade-mark case given in favor of Lord & Taylor, New York, against Harris Wolf & Sons, Cincinnati. The court enjoined the latter firm from using this word on underwear, holding that "Onyx" not only applied to hosiery, but underwear as well.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Second District, lately decided a corset trade-mark case, that of the Warner Bros. Co., New York, against David Wiener, of the same place. It relates to the use of a surname resembling one that is registered as a trade-mark under the provision known as the "Ten Year Clause" of the trade-mark act of 1905. This clause provides that a surname can be trade-marked if it has been used exclusively by the applicant for 10 years or over prior to the passage of this act. The court restrained the defendant from selling corsets under the name of "Wiener's," as it infringed the name "Warner's," holding that no one had a right to use any name in the corset business which resembled "Warner's," even though it was his own surname.

Notaseme Hosiery Co., Philadelphia, has brought suit against R. H. Macy & Co., the well-known department store of New York, charging them with infringing their trade-mark on stockings. An early decision is expected.

Hardware Tools Specialties

A Sales Argument Which Got the Order. Handling Hardware Merchants.

Turning objections into sales arguments is the title of an interesting paper by W. G. Clifford in a recent issue of "Printers' Ink." Among other lines mentioned, or rather the experience of sales managers—is that of hardware; and what he says is applicable to many stores, particularly that of general merchants. In late years hardware stores have spruced up their business methods a whole lot, and are fast becoming merchants instead of dealers in every sense of the word. But, as in other retail lines, there are still a lot of laggards who cling steadfastly to the old-time, haphazard methods of running a store. In consequence they never know just how they stand, and figure that it is a legitimate part of the manufacturer's service to carry their accounts until they get good and ready to pay.

"Now it is a part of my firm's policy," says the manager in question, "to insist on prompt payment of bills. As a result, many dealers refuse to do business with us on the ground that we are not sufficiently accommodating. In looking over our salesmen's reports I'd noticed an increasing number of cases where they had failed to obtain business, giving this prompt-payment policy of ours as the real reason. There are two ways to overcome a prospect's objection: one way is to outweigh it by a mass of other points in our favor; the other way is to beat him on his own ground by knocking the props from under his objection. Evidently our men were not successful with the former method, so I concentrated on finding a solution by the latter method. In a few days I felt sure I had it and went on the street myself to try it out on several dealers who had downed our men with the prompt-payment objections.

"The first man I called on told me that he wanted to handle our line, but wouldn't do so unless we would agree to carry him at times. So I tried my new talk on him in this way: 'Mr. Blank, you know how you feel toward customers who do not pay their bills promptly. The real test of the value of a customer is not so much the size of the orders as the promptness with which he pays his bills. You are in the retail hardware business, and we are in the hardware manufacturing business—we most certainly are not in the banking business. You feel toward your retail customers as we feel toward our dealer customers, that if they want to borrow money—for that's what a refusal to pay bills promptly means—that they should go to a bank.

"Now, from our standpoint, failure by dealers to meet their obligations promptly means one of two things: that the dealer hasn't the money, or that he runs his business in a slipshod manner. The latter condition sooner or later always leads to the first. So in either event the slow payer is not a desirable customer—there's too much risk attached to him.

"Now, in your case, you have the money. You are a desirable customer. But—here I paused, before knocking his objection sky-high—the very fact that we insist on prompt payment of bills is in reality one of the strongest reasons why you should do business with us.' Another pause to let him collect his thoughts. 'And for this reason: In dealing with us there is never any danger of your being oversold, or of having pushed on you goods that are stickers. We know that we can't expect to get our money from you until you have got it from your customers. And so we take great care to see that you are sold not an ounce of goods more than the state of your trade warrants. And also that you order only goods that you can sell quickly.

"Another point is that we all need a little jacking up at times to prevent our business running us, instead of our running our business. You do—we do—everybody does. In all the retail hardware business, with its thousand and one details, it is easy to lose track of things unless you have a spur to keep you up to the minute.

"Lots of our dealer customers tell us that they've done a bigger and a better business from the day they first dealt with us. Our prompt-payment policy acted as the needed incentive to them to keep close watch of details. I know it will be the same in your case, too. Just try it and see how it works out. For a trial order, let me send you'—and then I proceeded to talk up some of our quick sellers. I got the order."

Hardware Notes.

The Supplee-Biddle Hardware Co. last week received an importation of lawn mower parts from abroad. Their sales of the "Pennsylvania" so far are away ahead of last year.

Boots Shoes Findings

Serviceability of Heavy Shoes.

Perhaps the question of what part of the average shoe wears out first and why, is seldom asked the general merchant. He ought to know, nevertheless. Since every shoe is no more serviceable than is its weakest part, it stands to reason that if some particular part wears out first, the strengthening of that part alone would give considerable extra wear to the staple shoe. Fairly good upper stock should be used to make the shoe stand up. But, given the upper stock which is usually used, it is possible that a very small amount placed in the right spot would add materially to the wear of the shoe manufacturers' products. By experience, it is conceded that the bottom or sole of the shoe wears out first. A tap or half sole will lengthen the life of a shoe, of course.

But the real question is what of the parts which wear out too early, and which might be strengthened by a little attention and a little better quality of material? Long before the upper is materially damaged, says an expert, or the vamp seam ripped in the ordinary man's shoe, the lining has worn through just above the counter and the back seam has perhaps burst out. To a man who wears a shoe completely out, one who is given to heavy labor, such as not a few buy in the general store, it is at once apparent what becomes of the shoe after the lining has worn through and the edge of the counter comes in contact with the foot as it is thrust into the shoe. Many a pair of shoes are thrown away when only three-fourths of their usefulness has been utilized because of the failure of linings at this point to equal the wear of the rest of the upper.

Another weak point is the back strap; especially so is this true of heavy shoes of the cheaper grades. The ordinary shoe of this type has to be pulled on at great inconvenience, during a large part of its wear, by the person grasping the top in his fingers, simply because the material or stitching of the back strap has given away early in its period of use. This may be avoided by the shoe manufacturer's inspectors giving these parts closer examination, and insisting on more care being exercised in the stitching or better material being used. It would add 20 per cent. to the wearing life of shoes of the heavier or working or farmers' type of footwear, which is handled in large quantities by the general merchant, who should inquire into such matters when placing a season's order.

Teaching Consumers How to Care for Shoes.

Merchants carrying shoes would find their foresight appreciated if they would educate their customers how to care for the footwear they purchase. This can be easily done while fitting a person, recommending the kind of dressing that should be used. As an expert says: "Black grain leathers, such as box calf, velour, chrome calf, French and wax calf, require a dressing which will thoroughly remove dirt and stains and which will revive and preserve the leather by feeding it with a suitable absorbent oil. A properly prepared dressing will restore scuffed and grayed spots to their original color and produce a dirt and dust-resisting surface having a brilliant polish."

"Black glazed kid and black goat leathers are much in favor by reason of their softness and pliability, and if they are properly cared for and dressed with suitable dressings they give excellent service. If, however, preparations are used containing acids, the leather loses its elasticity, becomes brittle and soon breaks. A kid dressing scientifically prepared will keep this leather in its original condition, will improve its appearance and add to its durability.

"Tan calf leathers are second on the demand list, and are only beaten by dull black calf. Tan dressings should be manufactured with special reference to the peculiar process of tanning employed and to the chemical effect of the polishing preparation upon the tanning ingredients. The wise merchant will be specially careful to stock and recommend only the very best tan shoe dressings and polishings, such as preserve the natural color of the stock by feeding it with the proper oils and which also produces a brilliant luster without darkening the shade."

Merry Xmas.

Well here we are, boys; here's Merry Christmas again. Merry Christmas to yez all! What, is that dead ripe pin cushion for me! Why thanks old pal, thanks—I'll wear it in me buzzom when I ain't got me fur shirt on.

But speaking serious, I wish that you boys, instead of sending me diamonds like you usually do, would all club together and put me in an old man's home. Gee, but that would be the life! Nothing to do all day but talk, and to-morrow more talk.

While I think of it, pick out a home where all the old men are dumb. Not deaf, understand—just dumb. Will you do that for me? I want 'em to hear me when I talk but it'll be just as well if they can't butt in. That's what I've been suffering from all my life—people butting in when I talk. I get it at home, and I get it out.

What I want is some place where I can talk on for forty years without a soul saying a thing. I've been advised to go to a cemetery, but the man that said that didn't have my interest at heart.

But that ain't got much to do with Merry Christmas, has it?

If I'm alive by the time next Christmas comes—wait a minute; did I hear somebody say "the Lord forbid!" then, or did I only think so? Now if that happens again, I not only won't take any Christmas presents from you this year, but I'll send back all the old presents you gimme.

If I'm alive by the time next Christmas comes, I'm going to offer some mighty nifty presents. None of 'em'll be under a thousand dollars, and some may be more.

I'm going to offer a thousand dollars for the customer of a retail grocer who ain't kicked once about his stuff the whole year. See the big thought in that? All a grocer's got to do is to tell his people that prize is going to be offered. Every one of 'em will be after the thousand and they won't dare peep about a blame thing the whole year. Fat? Holy smoke, he'll think he's in heaven! He can send 'em any old thing without a come back.

Then when the year's up I'll give the thousand to my wife's cousin and sit on his chest till he gives it back.

There's one little string to this scheme. I'll only let it be worked by grocers that do the square thing by me on Christmas day. I'll take anything, that is, anything I can sell. Since you ask me, money's preferred. I need a bunch of money to pay up some back alimony to my first wife.

I'm going to offer another thousand to the customer of the retail grocer that spends the most money with him during the year. That's softer than the other one. All you've got to do is to tell 'em that even if they spend $900 to get the thousand, they're a hundred ahead.

Then every week or so say to every one of 'em confidential, "Mrs. Smith, you're way ahead." If it's worked right, we'll have Mam Smith selling her husband's gum shoes to buy soap and sugar. I figure out that with this scheme, the end of the year would find the grocer who worked it sitting on just about all the money in the place. I figure this, too—that the thing'll work so bully well that the grocer won't feel like he ought to look to me to put up the thousand—he'll be glad to put it up himself and to gimme a few crumbs beside.

But I'll offer to put it up anyway, and I expect them that don't know me to believe I'll be on hand with it on Christmas eve.

I reserve the right, I want to say, to pay the thousand in any way I like—United Cigar Stores coupons, or peanuts, or anything I happen to have a thousand dollars' worth of at the time. It might be paid in anything—that is, anything but hair. It won't be hair, that I'll guarantee. I'll also pass my word it won't be in money.

I'll probably offer another thousand to the customer of my own who treats me the best during the year. That includes having me up to his house for meals (with wine), giving me all the time I want to talk about anything I want to talk about, and not trying to beat me down on price. I can't see how anybody who don't buy all his goods from me can hope to get the prize, but I don't decide that now, I only hint it.

I will say this and I mean it: Any customer who pushes me out of his store, or spits terbacky juice on my shoe—makes no difference whether it's shined or not; the manufacturer ought to keep it shined—or calls me a pie faced nuisance, or says "get the hen out o' here or I'll set ye on fire," or does anything else like that, won't even have a look in.

I ain't naming any names, but have certain people in mind.

Pennsylvania Weights and Measures Chief Now Says Laundry Soap Need Not be Marked.

Makes Third Ruling, Nullifying All Others, That if Sold for Five Cents or Less, Laundry Soap Need Not be Marked Either With Weight or Count.

The Chief of the Pennsylvania Department of Weights and Measures has finally decided that laundry soap selling for 5 cents or less need not be marked under the Pennsylvania net weight law of 1913. This is a part of what this paper has contended from the beginning, but the Chief stated before the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association recently that laundry soap would have to be marked with the numerical count even if there was but one cake in the package. The Chief had previously made another ruling that laundry soap must be marked with the weight or numerical count.

The latest and probably the final ruling is based upon the fact that the Chief has made a ruling exempting small articles retailing for 5 cents or less, from the operation of the law. Laundry soap, he said now, comes within that if it retails for 5 cents or less, as almost all laundry soap does. No previous ruling, however, said anything about the exemption, which evidently was not then thought of in connection with it.

Dickinson's Package POP CORN

For the Holiday Trade

YOU will have a good holiday trade on pop corn, if you have Snow Ball or Santa Claus brand in stock. These packages are repeaters. They will help your sales of salt, honey, molasses, etc.

"All profit, no investment," is the way one grocer puts it. There's big money and satisfaction in Dickinson's Package corn. It's nice business to have, and you might as well get it as someone else.

Snow Ball is the favorite brand of Rice Corn. One-pound package. Retail at 10 cents. When popped, one package is equal to eight quarts of popped corn. No dirt, or chaff. Just sound, clean, sweet kernels. It pops!

Santa Claus brand is a ten-ounce package. Retail at 5 cents. The same nice quality as packed under Snow Ball. The largest, flakiest pop corn you ever saw. And exquisite in flavor!

Let us send you a supply of illustrated recipe-booklets. You'll use Dickinson's Corn in your own home every day, after you use it once

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" believes that the chief is simply escaping in the most convenient way from his former failings, which he probably found were untenable. This paper reiterates its belief that under the law laundry soap need not be marked unless it is sold by the pound, no matter what it sells for.

Food Commissioner Says Canned Goods Do Not Keep Indefinitely.

J. J. Higgins, Dairy and Food Commissioner of the State of Washington, has made a public statement that canned goods do not keep indefinitely, as everybody has supposed, and that even when there is no external sign of deterioration, the contents may have deteriorated simply from age. A part of the statement follows:—

Our experience in numerous well-founded tests has proved the absolute fallacy of manufacturers' contentions that canned products hermetically sealed and properly sterilized will keep indefinitely. There is no food product that does not deteriorate with age.

During the year especial attention has been given to certain food products, particularly to canned meat put up under the various regulations issued by the Federal Government under the two general food acts of 1891 and 1906. Of the canned meats condemned and confiscated, the majority were found to be bad because of deterioration from age. The unwholesomeness of the older goods was often demonstrated by opening cans in the presence of their owners—grocery proprietors—who, upon noting the bad odor, corrosion and general unfitness of the product, generally consented to sign a waiver for their condemnation and destruction.

In many instances cans that bore no external evidence to condemn them were submitted to the State chemist for chemical and bacteriological analysis and proved to be dangerous by both tests. Harmful bacteria were found in numerous instances. No prosecutions against wholesalers or retailers would be justifiable in instances of this kind, for the reason that they labored under the false belief industriously spread by manufacturers, that where a can shows no external evidence of deterioration, as from leaks or swells, the contents are right.

Used in Dozens of Dishes

Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk Has a Big Sale for Cooking Purposes

BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK is not only used for tea, coffee and cereals at the table, but many delicious dishes can be made from it. It is better than raw milk for many dishes, because it is so rich and creamy. Encourage your customers to bake cakes, cookies, doughnuts, to make soups, pies and croquettes with BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK. They will be pleased with its flavor and quality and will become steady purchasers, thus increasing your sales. All your customers buy milk and YOU ought to sell it to them; you can if you try. BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK is made by the most modern process—only the water is taken out of the milk and absolutely nothing is put into it. Our constant advertising and established reputation makes BORDEN'S EVAPORATED MILK easy to sell.

CCXC.—The Clayton Anti-Trust Act and a Manufacturer's Right to Appoint Exclusive Agents for His Products.

The "Twin City Commercial Bulletin," of Minneapolis, Minn., sends me the following:—

Have you dealt with the following subject: "What effect Clayton-Anti-Trust Law have on the following condition?"

The John Jones Mfg. Co. sells a line of goods to Tom Smith, a local dealer, with the understanding that no other dealers within a certain distance of Tom Smith's town will be sold or solicited.

If you have not handled this subject, don't you think it would be a good one for an article? It is a matter that is interesting to the small dealer, especially in certain lines of underwear, furniture, hardware and various specialty goods.

Here is an actual example that came to the writer's attention recently. A manufacturer sold a dealer a full line of his stuff with the understanding as mentioned in the foregoing, shipment to be made 60 days later; about 30 days after this dealer noticed a big shipment of the same manufacturer's goods addressed to his competitor. He immediately got after the manufacturer and wanted to know the why and wherefore. He was told that according to the Clayton Anti-Trust Law a manufacturer could not refuse to sell a dealer if he offered the money.

Was the manufacturer right or wrong in his contentions?

Without a doubt the manufacturer was wrong. There is not in the Clayton anti-trust act, if I read it correctly, the slightest warrant for his position. I know that a considerable number of manufacturers are using this excuse for breaking down exclusive agencies, but I believe them to be actually uninformed as to what the law requires; or misinformed; or they may be using the law as an excuse to do something which they could not see their way clear to do without it.

Wherever there is any doubt as to the meaning of a law, the best advice to give a business man subject to it is "be on the safe side." Go the limit in order to play absolutely safe. But I do not see any doubt in this case—the law never intended to forbid a manufacturer who does not have a monopoly of a product from choosing his own customers and using his own arbitrary and unrestricted judgment as to whom he will sell. And so as to make it absolutely certain that there will be no mistake about it, the law itself says, in Section 2, that it has no such intention. The language is this:—

And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade.

The manufacturers who claim they can no longer appoint exclusive agencies for their goods, but must sell everybody who "offered the money," do so on the authority of Section 3, which is as follows:—

Sec. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from, or rebate upon, such price, on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale or contract for sale or such condition, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.

Everybody who followed the passage of the Clayton act through Congress knows that this section was intended to prevent practices like this: A certain large glucose company formerly made more than 50 per cent. of the total amount of glucose made in this country. It did not have an actual monopoly, but was a dominant factor in the glucose market. This company sold its glucose at a uniform price, but to buyers who bought nobody else's glucose during a certain period, it gave a rebate. Of course the buyer who did not get this rebate was at a great disadvantage when he attempted to compete with buyers who did. Not only as to the big company's brands of glucose, but as to any glucose, for the big company controlled the market.

A large match company used the same scheme and so did a number of manufacturers in other lines. The scheme if continued until now would be a clear violation of the Clayton act, in the case of manufacturers who supply more than half the total output in their line, because the effect of it in their cases would be "to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly." That is, to lessen competition and create a monopoly, in a product as a whole.

But with manufacturers who are not dominant factors in their field, who do not make more than 50 per cent., but are just one of several manufacturers in the field, the situation is quite different. They can do many things which the dominant manufacturer cannot do. For since the smaller manufacturer controls but a small minority part of the total output, his appointment of exclusive agents for his own brands would not "substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly"—as to the product, understand; it might do it as to his brands—and therefore would not violate the law.

Bear in mind that every owner of a private brand can legally lessen competition and create a monopoly for it. In fact it is a monopoly to begin with—every private brand is a monopoly and the law will protect he owner of it in the enjoyment of it as a monopoly. There is a vast difference between the monopoly of a private brand and the monopoly of a product which may be packed under a private brand. The first is absolutely legal, the second, under the Clayton act, is absolutely illegal. In speaking of monopoly, and the lessening of competition, the law always means as to a product—the total output of anything—and never as to a mere brand, which as I have explained must in its very essence be a monopoly.

A manufacturer who has no control of more than half of the total product in his market, can in my judgment, just as readily and legally as he ever could, do either of two things: He can tie up as many people as he can get to sell his brands exclusively, and to such as will sell his alone he can grant a preferential price. Or he can refuse to sell anybody but one buyer in a town, or a county or a State. Only when the manufacturer is so large that what he does affects the general market for his product is he violating the law when he does these things.

That under the Clayton law or any law, a seller of merchandise must sell everybody "who offers the money," is absolutely and totally untrue. Not even the manufacturer who has a practical monopoly would have to go that far.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

On December 4th the organizer addressed a well attended meeting of the Catawissa Merchants' Association. The meeting was held in the Opera House and there was a good attendance. This is a small organization but a very good one. Since its organization it has done many things of interest to the merchants, the chief achievement

Sell Franklin Carton Sugar by the Container

Your customers know what sugar is and what it will do, and expect to keep on buying it and eating it as long as they live. The right thing to do when a woman asks for sugar is to sell her a SUPPLY instead of SAMPLE—sell her a WHOLE CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR instead of one or two CARTONS.

It's easy to show a woman the convenience of having a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the house, always handy when she needs it.

Selling FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR by the CONTAINER is not only a convenience for your customers, but it saves you money, because you make one delivery instead of dozens. It gives you a wholesale outlet at a retail profit—you don't have to even open the CONTAINER to make your profit on every CARTON in it. When you sell a woman a CONTAINER of 30 two-pound CARTONS you make the profit on her purchases of sugar for some time to come; if you sell her one CARTON you leave an opening for competitors to sell her the other TWENTY-NINE. Lots of your customers buy flour by the barrel, potatoes by the bushel, canned goods by the dozen—it just as easy to sell them FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR BY THE CONTAINER. Try it.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is packed 24, 48, 60 and 120 pounds to the CONTAINER. Ask your Jobber for full information as to grades.

being the elimination of gift schemes and trading stamps.

On Thursday, December 10th, Mr. Smedley addressed the grocers of Williamsport at a well attended meeting held at the Y. M. C. A. rooms. New officers were nominated and a programme mapped out for more aggressive work.

On Friday, December 11th, the organizer was the guest of the Board of Trade of Williamsport at a luncheon. His talk was on "The Modern Merchant."

At the meeting following the organizer's visit to Bradford, ninety members were present. The meeting was addressed by Banker Lindemuth on the new banking system. A business meeting was held at the conclusion of the talk.

W. K. Cuddy, secretary of the Muncy association, has taken unto himself a wife. Congratulations are in order.

The organizer met the Board of Trade of New Castle on December 8th and addressed the meeting on several matters of local interest. The attendance was fine and the interest manifested all that could be desired. Steps were taken for more progressive work.

On December 9th Mr. Smedley met the Executive Committee of the Pittsburg Retail Grocers' Union. Legislative matters were taken up and plans made for an aggressive campaign. Pittsburg grocers are very much opposed to trading stamps and will introduce a bill to eliminate the evil.

This is the Last Appearance of the "Grocery World" Assortment of Cakes, Have You Obtained Yours?

J. S. Ivins' Son's special assortment of high-grade cakes, known as the "Grocery World" assortment, appears for the fourth and last time in this issue. These are the cakes on which Ivins' made his great reputation and are priced for this occasion at $6.12, with freight prepaid to nearby States. The sale is guaranteed or money refunded.

Ivins' cakes are made from absolutely pure materials and are guaranteed to more than comply with food laws, in that all of their products are free from lard compound, cottonseed oil, adulterated chocolate, imitation honey, desiccated or frozen eggs, preservatives, benzoate of soda, alum, artificial colors or any harmful or unwholesome ingredient. They use selected candled eggs only. You will be interested in their advertisement.—Advt.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We are considering the plan of adopting the "dodger" method of advertising for a change.

Kindly give us your opinion of the inclosed copy in connection with the same, and oblige,

Yours truly,
SIMON'S GROCERY CO.

The circular inclosed measures 8 x 11 inches and is well printed on yellow paper of pretty fair quality. About one grade better paper would be an advantage. Here is the reduced reproduction:—

and I believe that if these dodgers are carefully distributed to the right people, you can expect results. Advertising of all kinds, but more especially dodger or circular advertising, is like burning coal for fuel. They tell us that when coal is burned in the ordinary way under a steam engine, you get only about 13 per cent. of energy out of it. The balance is pure waste. It is exactly the same with circulars thrown about the streets or left on door steps. For every one that gets in somebody's hands and is read, probably 25 or 50 are lost and wasted. That is the worst of your advertisement in the readers' hands. Don't think that I disapprove of circular advertising, I do not; on the contrary, I advise it in probably over half the cases. It will almost always get results when done intelligently.

Where an advertisement is written to exploit one idea—in this case it is the sale of specials—I don't believe in bringing anything else in. Bring in the other things when people come to your store after the specials. I mean in this case some of the matter that appears in small type at the bottom, beginning "Get busy." I should have left out the reference to meats and the reference to sugar. There was nothing to either of them to bring anybody to the store, therefore they could have been attended to just as well when the people came to the store after the specials. My idea is not to ask people to read anything but what is to the point. Of course, I am not contending that the presence of these things in the circular injured it in any vital way—it is simply in the interest of sharpness and terseness in advertising that I speak.

But, all things considered, I think this is good advertising, and it probably got results.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

Get Your Local Paper to Work This "Buy-at-Home" Campaign

Description of a Practical and Interesting Plan Operated in Hagerstown (Md.) in the Interest of the Local Merchants. Cash Prizes to School Children on "Why We Should Buy at Home."

Here is the brief story of a plan which has just been closed in Hagerstown, Md., which is earnestly recommended to the earnest consideration of every reader here-of whose store is in a community where there is a local newspaper. The scheme is called the "Buy-at-Home Campaign," and in Hagerstown, Md., it was operated by the "Morning Herald" for the benefit of all the local merchants. In a nutshell it included the offer of cash prizes from $1 to $10 for the best essay by the school children in the various grades of the local schools on "Why We Should Buy at Home." The contest was of course exploited through the paper and attracted general attention to the question under discussion, especially among the parents of the hundreds of children who competed.

To show the high calibre of the papers written on the subject the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" reproduces the paper that received the first prize of $10 in the higher grades. It was contributed by George R. Crowther, Jr., aged 18 years:—

The strength of every community depends upon four things—the intelligence, the morals, the unity and the wealth of its citizens.

Among the men of our community, to whom we feel most indebted for its strength and its prosperity, are the business men and merchants. They, perhaps, of all other men are most responsible for the financial strength of the community, for the reason that they form a connecting link between the local community and the great business world. As such, they handle a large percentage of the local wealth. They, too, are among the most important wealth producing citizens of the community. But wealth, in order to be a strong factor in the community, must be in active circulation; else it would be much like an arm held continually in a sling. For the active circulation of wealth we are indebted largely to our merchants and business men; therefore, the citizens who enjoy the benefits should stand ready to patronize those who produce them.

Besides, as large producers and circulators of wealth, the merchants are among the biggest taxpayers. To them we can turn with gratitude for a large percentage of the benefits derived from taxes. Good roads, well-lighted streets, an adequate water supply and well-regulated schools all result from taxes, a large part of which are paid by our local merchants. We are not slow to avail ourselves of the blessings which are conducive of the community's welfare, and should be no slower to give our fullest patronage to our merchants who bear a large share of our taxes.

Then, too, our merchants and business men are affording employment to a large part of our citizens. In thus doing they add vigor and strength to the community and tend to build up a busy and energetic citizenship.

They also promote greater prosperity in the community by helping to support the railroads, being especially influential in securing better railroad facilities, as well as in determining the relative strength of the community as a railroad center.

Not only do they add strength and prosperity to the community, but they play a large part in promoting intelligence in the community by helping, through their advertisements to support the newspapers, which are not only news distributors, but powerful educational factors.

But other than the general benefits enjoyed through the business of our merchants, there are certain advantages to be enjoyed by us individually which are, in a large part, responsible for the equilibrium of our community life. Our local merchants are able to offer credits facilities which are impossible to obtain from business firms outside of the community. The want of cash very often necessitates men, who depend largely on their crops, to ask for credit, which our merchants are always willing to give.

Still another reason for purchasing from our local merchants is that they are striving to offer to their customers the very best and latest in every line. Besides, we are surer of our goods when purchased from a merchant in our own community, because in dealing with outside firms we assume the risk of dissatisfaction and partial or even entire loss. This risk would be avoided by buying at home.

Not only do we lose individuality in dealing with outside business establishments, but we help to undermine the strength of our local merchants. If our merchants were fully patronized it would, through increased business, afford employment to more people, eliminating to a great extent our contributions to charity.

You should buy at home because you gain individually by strengthening, uplifting and prospering our community.

The following paper, which received a $5 prize, was written by a clever little lady aged nine:—

You should buy at home because money spent at home helps all the people. Money spent at home for goods enables the home merchants to meet their tax bills, make improvements on their property and this beautifies the town.

The more money the home merchant makes the greater is his capacity to buy. By buying in larger quantities he gets a lower price and he can sell his goods cheaper, which is a benefit to all who buy.

The home merchant buys his supplies for his family at home, spending his profits for clothing, shoes, meat, bread and other things, thus helping all lines of trade. He pays taxes, which helps to pay the cost of public improvements and assists the charitable societies. He puts his surplus in the home banks where those who need it can borrow and meet their tax bills.

Money spent away from home helps in neither taxes, public improvements, nor civic pride.

We should buy at home because it is our duty to patronize our own merchants, so they can make more money with which to buy in greater quantities and give us cheaper prices. So they will have more money to spend on their families. Because our merchants can thereby make money and put it in our banks so others can borrow and pay their bills. Therefore money spent at home helps all the people and we should buy at home because it is right.

The "Morning Herald's" comment on the plan and how it worked out is here reproduced in part. It will be interesting:—

THE PRIZE ESSAY CONTEST.

There cannot be any doubt now about the wisdom of "Buying at Home." Maybe the policy of buying in some far distant place will hereafter appear as pennywise and pound foolish. Let it be hoped that the reasons set forth in these essays will be considered and carefully weighed. One hundred and seventy-six essays were sent to "The Morning Herald" on the subject of "Buying at Home."

As a whole, the essay contest has been a success. It has stirred the young people to think on a practical subject. It brought forth many fine essays and it has paved the way for further work along the same or similar lines. This community, of course, will be benefited. There will be more earnest thinking on the subject in the future. The amount of money that goes out of this community every year for commodities that can be gotten here is enormous. There is no way of estimating the amount, but it is a fact that mail order house catalogues are found in too many homes, and these same catalogues are too frequently used. In these dull times the big mail order houses are the only ones that are not suffering. Keep your money at home as far as possible, and the tide will turn in this direction. Hagerstown cannot expect to create business here if the citizens of this community go elsewhere. By reason of the favorable location of this city, and its fine transportation facilities, it is the natural point of exchange for a large section. In order that this may be fully appreciated our local business enterprises must be loyally supported. The rest will follow in due course.

This is a Plan to Make People Eat More Fish and Less Meat

It Emanates From New England and is Worthy of Support From Grocers Everywhere. Fish is a Better Food and Costs Less, According to the Information Furnished.

The Directors of the port of Boston, Mass., have sent this paper copies of a very unique and interesting booklet they are using to increase the sale of fish not only in that section but in other sections. The pamphlet is entitled "Fish as a Food or Fish Against Meat." The argument is that fish is as good a food as meat, and much cheaper. Any retailer could make the same argument to his customers, no matter where he is located, and the effect could hardly be otherwise than good. Consumers shown how they can reduce the high cost of living are usually very receptive.

For this reason the greater part of the text of the Boston fish argument is here reproduced. Local grocers everywhere would do well to show it to their local papers and have them reproduce it:—

To the visitor to Boston from the Middle West, and even from New York, one of the great attractions of this city is the delicious fresh fish which can be found here in a greater variety than in any other place in the United States. Inquiry at any of the great hotels in Boston will show that it is not uncommon for Western visitors at these hotels to eat fish at every meal during their stay; yet the average weekly consumption of fish in Massachusetts the year round is less than 13 ounces per person per week.

The public does not fully appreciate the healthfulness, palatableness and cheapness of fish as a food, and in order to educate the public to its value, the Directors of the Port of Boston have joined with the fishing interests to encourage and support this very important industry of this port. Boston is the largest fishing port in North or South America, rivalling Grimsby, England, as the greatest fishing port in the world. During one year (1913) the fish catch brought to this port alone was 170,000,000 pounds, worth 17,750,000, the first price obtained. Last year over 528,000,000 pounds of fish were taken from the waters of New England, or one-quarter of the entire catch of the country.

With the price of meat almost prohibitive—due to the fact that New England does not raise cattle to any appreciable quantity, and the increased cost of raising stock in the West, etc.—the Port Directors point out that fish is the only staple

Give Your Jobber a Square Deal and Other People Will Give You One

Little talks between wholesalers and retailers on the ethics of fair business—what is square and what is tricky?—Doing unto the jobber as you would have him and other people do unto you.

No. 15

The wholesale grocers whose names appear below, wish their customers, and the retail trade generally, a happy, prosperous and contented New Year. May the relations between wholesaler and retailer—the two vital and indispensable factors in the distribution of merchandise—be closer during 1915 than they have ever been before.

article of food to-day to which the people of Massachusetts, New England, and, in fact, the entire country can hopefully turn for relief from the high cost of living.

Practically all food as purchased contains two portions—one which can be eaten and the other which is refuse. Naturally, the part most interesting to the consumer is the eatable portion, which is made up of two parts—water and nutrients, which consist of protein, fats, carbohydrates and mineral matter or ash. We get the fats in meats, fish, butter, olive oil and the oils from corn, wheat, etc. The carbohydrates include the glucose, cane sugar and cellulose groups, as represented in sugar, starch, etc. The mineral matter or ash is represented in the phosphates of lime, potash of soda, etc., needed to assist in digestion. While all these nutrients are necessary, it is with the protein, which builds and repairs the tissue of the body and brain, that the consumer is most directly concerned. This protein is found in the white of eggs (called albumen), in the curd of milk (called casein) and in the lean flesh of meat and fish—these two last articles of diet containing about the same proportion of this very necessary protein, with one advantage, however, that the price of fish averages from one-third to one-half that of meat.

If the housewife buys a pound of smoked ham for 22 cents she gets 16 per cent. of protein, but if she buys a pound of haddock at 7 cents she gets 18 per cent. of protein; with a pound of pork chops at 25 cents she gets 17 per cent. of protein, and with a pound of herring at 8 cents, 19 per cent. of protein; sirloin at 30 cents gives her 19 per cent. protein, while bluefish at 10 cents gives an equal amount of protein, and so on through the list. When a pound of fish at 10 cents gives the same amount of protein as a pound of meat at 30 cents, the Eastcoast housewife who does not take advantage of this great saving in money should not complain of the cost of living.

When the housekeeper knows and realizes that fish combined with bread, potatoes and other vegetables can be counted on to supply the demands of the human body as well as meat, there will be a larger demand on the part of the public for fish. Not only is there a plentiful supply of fish to supply this demand, but the Eastern coast market carries the following "staple varieties" the year around: bluefish, cod, flounders, haddock, hake, porgies or scup, halibut, herring, mackerel, pollock, whiting (silver hake), Western salmon, sea bass, smelts, shad, weakfish. And even this long list does not include all the fish sold for food in our markets. At all times fish can be purchased at this port from 10 to 12 cents per pound, while meat costs at least on an average of from 20 to 30 cents per pound.

Through habit and custom, fish at present has a place on our tables only once or twice a week, and as a result, there is a woeful lack of knowledge in the United States as to the proper way of cooking and preparing fish for the table. The sauces which add flavor and piquancy, and the many accessory dishes such as salads, croquettes, pates, etc., are seldom considered with regard to fish in this country. With an increased use of fish will come better knowledge of the correct way to prepare and cook fish. The foreign-born population of the United States are in fact the real fish consumers of the country. They have brought their fish-eating habits with them from Europe, where fish, not meat, is the more common nitrogenous food; and they are accustomed to make an appetizing and satisfying meal of fish. We in the United States have done comparatively little to stimulate our fisheries, while the older nations have expended every effort to gather the crops that the waters yield so abundantly, and deliver them cheaply and in prime condition to their people, not only along the coast, but to extreme inland towns.

The average meat consumption of the individual in the United States has long been declining. Seventy-five years ago one-half of the National diet was meat, while five years ago (1910) it had dwindled to one-third, a decline of 16.6 per cent., due undoubtedly to the increased price of meat, which had risen between 1897 and 1910 over 37 per cent. Yet with all the decline in the consumption of meat, the percentage spent for beef by the average Massachusetts family to-day is still higher than that spent for any other article of food, the expenditures of the housewife for meats being two-fifths of the total amount spent for foodstuffs. Fish, on the other hand, has not increased in price over a quarter or a half cent a pound in 10 years, but the average family has not taken advantage of this low price for a nourishing food, for only 5.3 per cent. of the total expense for all foodstuffs went for fish. And all these out-of-proportion expenditures with fish containing much more nourishment than meat and purchasable at from one-third to one-half the cost!

Like many of our resources, we have not yet begun to fathom the value of the fish in our waters. Only time and necessity will teach what they mean to the nation. Meat shortage was an old problem to other nations when the United States was in its infancy. And to add to this problem today we have the more recent one of disease rampant among our cattle. There is only one way to meet the problem of an increased cost and shortage of meat, and that is to supplement our meat supply by turning to the sea for fish. There is a limit to the supply of cattle, but when we come to the fish of the sea, we find them feeding and breeding unaided, and practically in unlimited numbers. The land over which they swim and the water through which they float are free, and they pay no tithes. Food taken from the sea is a net gain to the land. It in no way impoverishes the soil and, in fact, adds to the fertilizing elements of the country.

The Port Directors believe that the people of Massachusetts and New England, and in fact the whole country should make "Eat Fish" their slogan. They should make fish a part of their meal as often as possible, and in doing so they can be assured that it will give them the proper nourishment and sustenance, will reduce the cost of living and will encourage and support one of the largest industries of the Port of Boston and of New England.

The New England Fish Exchange of Boston, Mass., is sending out, upon request, thousands of booklets containing recipes for preparing sea food for the table to retail dealers all over the country for distribution among their customers.

These Letters Show Three Chief Obstacles to Development of Parcel Post Food Business

First is Temperamental Slowness of Producers, Second is That They Want to Sell More Than Retail Quantities, and Third is That They Charge Higher Prices Than Regular Retailers.

Shortly after the United States Post Office Department issued to consumers its list of names of producers of various food products, with a view to getting the two into direct communication and cutting the middleman out, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" caused letters of inquiry to be sent to twelve producers whose names appeared upon the list. The letter was as follows:—

Dear Sir:—I note your name in the U. S. Parcel Post Produce list, and should like to have your price on (butter, eggs, poultry or potatoes).

Please also state how fresh your goods are when you ship them and how much it will cost to get them to me by parcel post. Please also state how I am to pay you and whether I shall include in any money that I send the cost of the postage. Also what redress I have if the goods are not satisfactory.

Yours very truly,

The intent was to ascertain from first hands how the parcels post producer does business. The returns do not indicate that the established retailer need look on parcels post with much fear. The farmer appears to be a pretty slow individual. The above letter was sent out on December 17th, and the entire twelve were within a comparatively few miles of Philadelphia. Up to the writing hereof (Thursday) but four answers have been received, and from not one of those can the consumer save any money. The letters are presented here:—

Vineland, N. J., Dec. 19, 1914.

Dear Madam:—In reply to your letter of the 16th, I can quote you prices on nice prime squabs at the rate of $6 per dozen, fancy, and $5 per dozen No. 1. We have also a grade cheaper if you should want same.

These squabs are delivered at your door the same day they are killed. I pay postage. If they should not prove satisfactory you send same back by return parcel post at my expense. Trust to me for an order of nice squabs and I will do my best to please you. You will please let me know a little ahead of time as to what day you want them, as squabs sell pretty readily now.

Respectfully yours,
CHAS. E. BITTNER.

Every retailer knows that there is no money to be saved in paying $1 a pair for squabs. Good squabs were selling right along for 80 cents in the Reading Terminal Market on the day this parcel post producer quoted $1.

Hammononton, N. J., Dec. 21, 1914.

Dear Madam:—In reply to yours of the 16th inst., will say we always receive the top New York wholesale price for our eggs, plus 3 cents per dozen. If we ship in cartons our customers pay the price of carton and postage. If you return carton in good condition via parcel post, it will cost you 6 cents postage, and we will credit you what you paid on the next shipment. The three-dozen carton costs 8 cents. As to freshness of eggs, they are called for faster than we can get them. They are large, newly laid eggs and we have never had any complaint from customers of years.

Awaiting your further orders,
Yours, etc.,
THOS. CREAMER.

Obviously there is no incentive for consumers to bother with Mr. Creamer. They would never know his price, to begin with, and his red tape about packing and shipping does not appeal to the consumer who can cross her street and get what she wants.

Oxford, Pa., Dec. 18, 1914.

Dear Madam:—Your letter received, and in reply, the price of butter is 44 cents at the present time for strictly fresh goods, delivered to your place by parcel post (prepaid) in 10-pound shipments. In regard to what redress you should have if the butter is not satisfactory, there is no question, as I am shipping the butter every day to some of the best people in the land without a complaint, and I trust a trial shipment will convince you.

I presume from your letter you would wish it in not less than 10-pound lots. However, if you should, I could supply you, but the price would be a trifle higher.

Hoping to hear favorably from you, I am,

Very truly,
E. A. PUGH,
Oxford, Pa.

On the day this letter came in the market price for fine butter in 10-pound lots was 42 cents; for country roll butter, 39 cents.

Millsboro, Del., Dec. 21, 1914.

Dear Madam:—Yours received and will state that we will quote you good butter for 35 cents per pound, delivered in one-pound lots and according to quantity after one pound.

Anything above one pound will quote 33 cents delivered, and we will guarantee the butter to be full weight and fresh when leaving here, and we will send it C. O. D. By me saying we will send it C. O. D., we don't want you to think that we are afraid of you, but you are a stranger to us and us to you, so we will try to do as near a cash business as we possibly can.

JOHN I. SHORT & BRO.

One point obvious about all these letters is the desire of the writers to sell more than an ordinary retail quantity. The squab man wants to sell a dozen, the egg man three dozen, and the butter man ten pounds. This too will be a decided obstacle in the development of the parcel post business.

Government Disagrees With Food Commissioner as to Selling Undrawn Poultry.

In a recent issue it was announced that Mr. E. F. Ladd, Dairy and Food Commissioner of North Dakota, had ruled that the sale of undrawn poultry was illegal, because it contained decayed matter, meaning the entrails. Some criticism of this attitude was made in the last issue. The U. S. Government officials seem to totally disagree with Mr. Ladd, although the Federal food law contains the same provisions as the North Dakota law. The Department of Agriculture has issued the following advice to housewives:—

The poultry handling specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture are urging housewives to buy their chickens undrawn and with the heads and feet still on. When the feet of chickens are removed the housewife loses one of the easiest methods of determining whether the bird is young or old. Young chickens have smooth, clean feet and shanks. Old birds have scaly, rough legs and buttons or spurs. The head of a dead chicken gives very clear indications of staleness. The head of a chicken that is not fresh will show a greenish color below the bill, sunken eyes and a darkening or discoloration on the neck, all of which indicate decay.

Moreover, by actual Government tests, fully drawn poultry with head and feet removed, decompose the most rapidly, while undrawn poultry keeps much better than does either wholly or partly drawn. This is because once a chicken is opened for cleaning the delicate tissues in it are open to the bacteria of the air, which multiply very rapidly and soon destroy the flavor of the chicken, even if they do not bring about actual putrefaction.

To Get List of Grocery Specialty Manufacturers.

Allentown, Pa., Dec. 20, 1914.

To the Editor,

Dear Sir:—Can you furnish me with a list of manufacturers making grocery specialties, or advise me where I could secure same?

Thanking you in advance for an early reply, I am,

Yours truly,
WILLIAM E. RUTH.

This information may be obtained from "Thomas' Wholesale Grocery and Kindred Trades Register," published by Thomas Pub. Co., New York City.

The "Auto Owners Society"

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 21, 1914.

To the Editor,

Dear Sir:—Please give me some information regarding the "Auto Owners' Society," 703 Lincoln Building, Philadelphia, Pa. It cost me $7.50 to join. They agreed to send me a catalogue, but I have never been able to get it. The offer was to sell me automobile accessories, tires, etc., at cost through co-operation among the members. I wrote for a price on one article some time ago, but what they quoted me was the same price I can buy for anywhere.

Yours truly,
S. E. BASORE.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has also received an inquiry from Chambersburg, Pa., about the same concern. It gives the same description of the scheme and asks for information.

The "Auto Owners' Society" is not listed in any directory and has no telephone. The Lincoln Building, which address it gives, is the old Betz Building, which has harbored and still harbors a great many cheap schemes, including some collection agencies. The manager of the Lincoln Building never heard of the Auto Owners' Society, but the tenant in 703, which is a small single office, said the Auto Owners' Society is conducted by one James Edwards, who had desk room there. The name of neither Edwards nor his society appeared upon the door. The tenant could give no information regarding the scheme, except that he knew there had been some trouble getting out the catalogues.

Outside of the fact that the whole enterprise appears to be extremely insignificant, there is another thing against it, viz.; that with the auto accessory market in its present condition, no such society as the Auto Owners' Society could save anything for its members. There have been several other such societies, but so far as the writer knows, they have all gone to pieces. The intelligent consumer of auto accessories can buy to-day almost as cheaply as the dealer. A large number of tire concerns, for example, are selling on 5 per cent.—they give the customer all their discounts, except the one 5 per cent. for cash. The same is true of everything else.

We advise not investing.

WITH THE EDITOR

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has published considerable matter from time to time regarding the practice of some retailers to demand a cash discount after the discount period has passed. We now relate an incident which in the writer's experience is the absolute limit.

The Limit.

A local wholesale grocery house got into an argument with a small customer. He made unreasonable demands, which the jobbing house would not grant, and in the end suit had to be brought before a magistrate. Judgment was obtained for the full amount, and in due course, several weeks after the bill became due, the retailer paid the magistrate's constable the full amount of the claim, and costs. As he did so, he firmly demanded the cash discount, contending with great vigor that "anybody who pays a bill has a right to a discount." Of course he did not get it. The only return his claim yielded him in fact is the indirect publicity which he is getting here.

The point of the incident is the complete lack of all sense of business fairness which some business men show—a lack which is really more a misfortune than a fault. Men afflicted that way actually cannot help doing as they do, for they see nothing amiss in it.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" directs particular attention to this week's article on the Buy-at-Home campaign which has just been concluded at Hagerstown, Md., a town of 16,500 people. It was conducted by one of the Hagerstown newspapers and consisted of offering cash prizes to school children who wrote the best essays on "Why We Should Buy at Home." The point was to focus public attention upon the question. Not only the attention of the children, but of the children's parents, who were naturally as much interested in the contest as anybody. Sit a man down to help his child, who is going to write one of these essays.

By the time he has racked his brains for reasons to give the child as to "why we should buy at home," he may have convinced himself that he ought to stop sending money out of his town. That happens sometimes. The writer knows some professional advertisers who repeatedly write advertisements that sell to themselves. One of them is extremely fond of telling of a series of advertisements he once wrote for tinned clam chowder which so worked upon him that he stopped and got a can on the way home that night.

The Hagerstown paper's campaign was waged for the good of the local merchants. Perhaps the merchants in that town support their local papers better than some others. We have known local papers to be bitterly criticised for publishing advertisements for Larkin & Co. and the other scheme concerns, and we have never known an exception to the rule that the loudest criticism always came from men who had never paid a dollar toward the support of their paper either by advertising or subscribing. Any merchant who, believing his local paper worthy of support supports it by advertising in it, or even by only subscribing to it, has a perfect right to complain when that paper exploits something which is against the established commercial interests of the town. But he has no decent right to complain, no matter what the paper does, when he has done nothing for it. The merchant who looks on supporting a local newspaper as a charity is a fool. He is losing a golden opportunity to improve the condition of his town and to improve his own condition. If he doesn't see fit to take it, very well; that is his privilege, but it will serve him right if his local paper fills its columns full of mail-order advertisements and all kind of matter favoring outside business rather than local business.

The merchants of any town having a local paper which receives proper support from the local business men, would probably find it glad to operate a Buy-at-Home campaign.

"He Can Take a Turndown Easier Than Any Man I Ever Knew"

Thus did the employer of a salesman describe him to the writer a few days ago. "He is a good fellow, but he can take a turn down easier than any man I ever knew." In other words—at least this was the meaning intended to be conveyed—he gave up the order before it was really gone.

Right at this point is the whole psychology of selling goods, not only selling them at wholesale, through salesmen, but selling them at retail, through clerks. When shall a salesman take no for an answer? The man who knows will sell goods all around the man who does not know. The latter constantly faces two dangers: 1, the danger of stopping before he is through and thus losing business he might have gotten; and 2, the danger of going on and on until he makes his man mad.

Correspondence schools and teachers of salesmanship attempt to teach men to recognize the psychological moment, as they call it, but they never succeed. Knowing how far to go and when to stop in the sale of goods is an inborn gift. All over the country there are men who have it; some are salesmen on the road, some are salesmen behind a retail counter, but every one of them is making money, all other things being equal.

There is such a thing as being too good a salesman. The writer knows one of this sort, and there are many others. The man we have in mind can almost sell anything to anybody. He can go into a retail dealer whose absolute buying limit ought not to be more than five cases, and will get him to sign a contract for twenty-five cases without blinking. This salesman has been in trouble all his life. He loads people up. He cannot help it. He is given the goods to sell, he needs the money he can get by selling them, and he can sell them. Therefore he goes ahead and does it. His wake is marked with cancellations, and financial pinches, and general trouble. Buyers cancel orders they have given him, and then give him more excessive orders the next time he comes around. This gift is not a gift; it is a burden. This particular owner of it has at times made a great deal of money, but there was so much to charge against it that his net earnings are probably no larger than those of many a more ordinary man. Nor has he been able to hold his positions. In the last ten years he has probably had five—a bad recommendation for any salesman.

Sues for Big Damages for Being Called Delinquent Debtor.

G. S. Hendricks, who lives at 2700 N. Thirteenth street, Kansas City, Kan., has brought suit in the District Court at Kansas City against each of the 100 retail grocers of Kansas City, Kan., who are members of the Grocers' Association for $5,000 damages because of the fact that he was listed in the "delinquent book" of the association. It was necessary for the suit to be filed against each of the individual members. Each member is liable for the obligations of the association, personally, and does not enjoy a limited liability, as he would if the association were incorporated. Secretary John A. Jenkins, of the local Grocers' Association, says in discussing the suit:—

Of course, there is nothing to the suit, as there are a number of Supreme Court decisions to the effect that we have a right to protect ourselves by keeping each other informed as to the credit standing of our customers.

Board of Aldermen Kill City's Scheme to Open Free Markets for Direct Dealings Between Farmers and Consumers. Tooth Washes and Toilet Preparations, Largely Sold by General Storekeepers, Taxable Under War Tax Act.—Fake Egg Claim Case on Trial. Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, Dec. 24, 1914.

The Attorney-General of the State has resumed the taking of testimony into the methods of the New York Mercantile Exchange, which is accused of controlling and manipulating the butter and egg market. At the hearing on Tuesday evidence was presented that fifteen butter and egg firms in New York City virtually control the prices of the two commodities throughout the United States. Members of the Attorney-General's staff have prepared an analysis of figures relating to the trade in New York, and, according to Deputy Attorney-General Kennedy, will introduce the analysis into the evidence being gathered at the formal inquiry in progress here.

Many of the fifteen firms alleged to have National control of butter and egg prices have an income as high as $12,000,000 each, according to Mr. Kennedy, and control the Executive Committee of the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Some interesting information reached this city during the week from Washington to the effect that all pomades and tooth and mouth washes were taxable under the war revenue act. A large number of these products are sold by general stores throughout the country. The ruling of the Internal Revenue Commissioner on the subject is as follows:—

Under Schedule B of the Act of Congress approved October 23, 1914, hair oils, pomades, hair dressing, hair restoratives, hair dyes or any similar substances are taxable. This is held to include tonics, stains, bleaches, improvers, beautifiers, depilatories, brilliantine for hair and beard under whatever name sold or known, whether liquids or solids and regardless of shape. Under this head are included soaps which are advertised and sold as hair restorers, improvers or beautifiers.

The following list includes good examples of such taxable manufactures: Danderine, a grower; Seven Southerland Sisters' Corporation, hair beautifier; Herpicide, a dressing; Kutico, a tonic and dressing; Hair Vigor, Ayer's make; Hall's Hair Renewer; Corollas Hair Tonic, a grower; Hirsuttes, a grower (Baker's); Haye's Hair Dressing and Invigorator; Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, a color or dye; Lyons Kathairon, a renewer and grower; Parisian Sage, a dressing; Walnutta, hair stain; C. Damchinsky's Hair Dye; Mrs. Potter's Walnut Hair Stain; Tricopheous (Barry's), a restorer; Eau de Quinine, a dressing oil and tonic; Palm Olive Shampoo, arrests falling hair; Westphal's Auxilator, a dressing; Coke Dandruff Cure and Hair Tonic, a dressing; Colgate's Quinol, a tonic and grower; Bandoline, a hair dressing; Arabian Egg Shampoo, a beautifier and grower; Canthrox, beautifier; Burnett's Cocoa, a dressing; Mansfield's Capillaris, a dressing; Parker's Hair Balsam, a dressing; Quinsoin, hair tonic and grower; Sanitol, a grower and beautifier; Colgate's Brilliantine, adds softness and gloss to hair and beard; Ford's Hair Pomade; Nelson's Hair Dressing; Lanoline; Ruby Dressing; Pomade Litholine.

Simple soap shampoos for which no claims are made as beautifiers, restorers, improvers, dressings, etc., are held to be exempt.

Changing of labels and literature will not be permitted to exempt justly taxable manufactures.

Ordinary shaving soaps, powders, pastes and creams are exempt unless cosmetic virtues are claimed for them.

Tooth washes are specifically taxed by the act in question, and mouth washes are held by the regulations to be included as taxable. This includes such antiseptic and anti-acid preparations as are commonly sold by the retailer under labels as mouth washes, dentrifices, prophysalics, etc. The following are regarded as good examples: Listerine, phophytol, glycothymoline, Wampole's formalid, Wampole's formalid, magnesia, borolytal, pyrodent, thycalol, odol, A. D. S. antiseptic, borine, zonghiva, camphenal, pasturine, euthymol, phenol sodique, etc.

Testimony in the alleged conspiracy to mulct the railroads by wholesale egg men on fraudulent claims for damage to eggs in transit has been taken during the week. Testimony showed an enormous amount of claims filed during the last few years by different egg receivers. In the year 1913 alone the New York Central paid out $100,207 for claimed damage to eggs. Evidence was

¶ If the manufacturers of nationally advertised products were to stop advertising, it is probable that the business of the average retail grocer would shrink from 25 to 50 per cent.

¶ If this is true—and there is no doubt about it—does it not follow that the manufacturers' advertising is a mighty force, to be taken advantage of by the retailer?

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants presented showing that from figures prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture 24.96 out of every 30 dozen eggs arrived at the market in bad condition, principally by being cracked or leaking.

For the present the city's scheme to establish free municipal markets at which farmers can come to sell truck to consumers is dead. On Tuesday afternoon the Board of Aldermen by an overwhelming vote decided not to establish the markets at this time.

The Committee which had been holding hearings as to the advisability of establishing these markets had heard considerable protest against them by retail grocers and had filed a majority and minority report. The majority report advised against the markets, while the minority report thought that they ought to be established.

Three market propositions were involved: One at Fort Lee Ferry, Manhattan; another in East Harlem; and the other under Queensboro Bridge.

The grocers have opposed them bitterly on the ground that they constituted unfair competition to the established retailer; that they did not save the consumer the money they were represented as saving; and that they were sure to be conducted in an unsanitary condition.

The markets will therefore be abandoned.

Announcement was made during the week by the American Sugar Refining Co. that its refinery at Chalmette, La., would be closed down. Reasons given were the bringing of suits against the company and also the fear of running afoul of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act. The result of this will be, it is believed, to bring a very large amount of new sugar business to this market. In previous years Louisiana producers of sugar have sent their sugar to the American Refinery in Chalmette. This they cannot do this year, and as they are without adequate facilities for storing they must send their sugar North to be refined by the refiners of this section. As yet the holders of Louisiana raws have not pressed them for sale, and the buyers who formerly depended upon Louisiana sugar, chiefly those in the Southwest, have been compelled to look elsewhere for their supplies. They are already nibbling at the New York market, and there are prophecies that if the nibbles result in any considerable business prices will advance.

SUMMARIZED MARKET CONDITIONS.

Tea quiet and unchanged, with a good steady undertone. Business will not resume until after the first of the year.—Coffee dull and inclined to be easier. There will probably be no recovery in coffee for some time, judging from present conditions.—Raw sugar firm; refined unchanged.—Dried fruits in limited demand. No change in any price.—Canned goods dull. Tomatoes still inclined to be easier.—Wheat in heavy foreign demand, but with considerable fluctuations and without any sharp advance.—Flour dull and steady to firm.

A New Method of Packing Scrapple.

At last we have canned scrapple. F. G. Vogt & Sons, of Philadelphia, have perfected a process by which they pack their well-known Liberty Brand Philadelphia scrapple in cans. This is what the firm have to say about it: It is the only canned scrapple and is made from select pork and fancy cornmeal, deliciously flavored with pure spices. It is cooked, full flavored and packed hot in sanitary cans. Guaranteed to keep until used and is not affected by changes in temperature. Each can contains 26 ounces of solid food.

Canned scrapple is a unique proposition, and the firm will gladly send you a sample to use on your own table. They know if you will try it you will be pleased to stock and push it.—Adv't.

A POINTER

WRIGLEY'S spear—the sign of the perfect gum in the perfect package—has pointed a way of happiness to millions of people; not only those who have bought and enjoyed the best chewing gum made—but those who have sold it—the Retail Merchants.

The wonderful WRIGLEY distribution—so complete that any person in any corner of the United States has but to step into the nearest store to find WRIGLEY'S SPEARMINT or WRIGLEY'S DOUBLEMINT—is convincing proof of the necessity and value of dealer co-operation—without which, one of the heaviest advertising expenditures in the world would fail to secure maximum results.

Through the Pennsylvania Plan we hope to show the merchants of Pennsylvania not only that we believe in them, but that real co-operation between manufacturer and merchant means better stores, increased sales and greater profits.

Don't forget that the more prominently you display it, the more benefits and profits you will get from this most widely advertised product in the world.

Each package has a United Profit-Sharing Coupon for the consumer and each box has a 5-Coupon Certificate for you, Mr. Dealer

Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers

"Modern Merchant and Grocery World" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s
Department Food Store, Dover, N. J.

Ready for 1915?—You can't face it with the same old faults and the same old hindering habits of '14. There's got to be a trouncing. You're got to lick the thing that's wrong in your life. Thousands of young men to-day wonder why they don't advance. The trouble is that their wonder ends there. They don't take an honest inventory of themselves.

To "get ready" for 1915 you must stand at the bar of efficiency, and the bar of efficiency is a scrutinous bar.

It may not detail in black and white just what it requires, but we will tell you.

It requires first and foremost thoroughness, and that means genuine service. Try to realize the importance of this wonderful word. To be thorough is to be a success. Indifference is failure. Thoroughness embraces every little and big act in your life. If you use a No. 2 bag when a No. 1 would answer, you are not thorough. If you give the customer a penny's worth more than is honestly coming to her—you are not thorough.

These are only simple illustrations that apply to bigger things.

This bar of efficiency requires loyalty. History tells us of a toast that was once drunk, and it was something like this: "Here's to Virginia, right or wrong; but right or wrong, Virginia."

That spirit is out-dated. We as food merchants are loyal to the people. You as representatives must be equally loyal to your employer. You must have implicit faith in him and must stick by him through thick and thin unless you can prove that his methods are wrong.

It requires you to know things—know your goods, know what you are talking about. Not necessarily the technical knowledge that is demanded of the British Island clerk, but plain facts about the goods you pass out to people every day. The difference in 10 and 15-cent corn. The difference in 35 and 60-cent tea. The difference in 20 and 38-cent coffee.

Be ready for 1915 and know these things.

The whole thing is up to you. No one is coming along to coax you into this knowledge.

The boss won't whisper into your ear "Now be a good boy and be loyal to me."

He won't always call your attention to your acts of indifference.

Unless you wake up and be actually "ready" for the big call of efficiency of 1915 he may change his mind about you.

The Grocery Markets

Tea.

Very little was doing in the tea market during the week, as the holiday interfered. Business has been a fair everyday demand for wants, at unchanged prices. The market is steady. It is really much firmer, as to the lower grades especially, than it would have been had last month's exports of these grades not amounted to about 1,000,000 pounds.

Coffee.

No change has occurred in coffee during the week. The demand is slow and doubtless will be until after the first of the year. Prices are unchanged, being fairly steady, but certainly not strong. This applies to all grades of Rio and Santos, to milds and to Java and Mocha.

Sugar.

The sugar market is unchanged from a week ago. Nominally granulated is still ruling at 4.95 cents, but sugar can be bought at 4.85 from most refiners, and the market is not especially strong. Raws are about where they have been. The American Sugar Refining Co. announced during the week that owing to a complication of circumstances they would close their Louisiana refinery. This will probably make some difference in market conditions in the Southwest, but nowhere else. The consumptive demand for sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is fairly active at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup is dull and unchanged. Molasses is not in so good demand as it was, but prices are unchanged.

Fish.

The demand for mackerel during the week has been very light, as befits the holiday season. Prices are unchanged. Cod, hake and haddock have been wanted to some extent, at unchanged prices. Salmon is unchanged and dull. Domestic sardines steady to firm and unchanged in price. Foreign sardines in fair demand at steady prices.

Canned Goods.

No change in prices has occurred in any line of canned goods. Market continues quiet, with prices on practically everything in buyer's favor.

Beans and Peas.

Marrows unchanged from last week. Pea beans possibly a trifle stronger. California limas and green and Scotch peas unchanged and quiet.

Dried Fruits.

Not much doing in dried fruits. Prices are unchanged all along the line. Greater activity is expected after the first of the year.

Butter.

The consumptive demand for butter has been very good and the receipts have fallen off to some extent. The market is firm at 1 cent per pound over a week ago. Nearby print butter is very scarce and also 1 cent per pound higher. There is not likely to be any further change in the immediate future.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs continue to be very light and the consumptive demand is very good. The market is in a healthy condition on the present basis of quotations and not likely to change until there is an increase in production, which is not likely to be for a week or two. Storage eggs are in ample supply, and the market steady at unchanged prices.

Cheese.

The stock of cheese in storage is about normal. The consumptive demand shows some increase over last week. The market is steady on the present basis of quotations and not likely to change until the holiday season. There is likely at that time to be an increased consumptive demand, with slightly advanced prices.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is very slow, particularly the consumptive demand. Stocks are also reported to be light, and there is not likely to be any change in market conditions. Pure lard and compound are both unchanged, with a seasonable demand. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are steady, with very light demand, at prices ranging about the same as last week.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

Developments were negligible last week in the canned goods market in this section, and were it not for some additional buying of tomatoes to supply immediate wants, there would be little to say about it. In these days of refrigerator cars, fast schedules and excellent facilities for keeping the shipments rolling, by means of tracers, there is the minimum of danger of the goods freezing on the road, and buyers have little to fear in that direction. The official statistics of the output in 1914, published by the National Canners' Association, are now due, and more than ordinary interest in them is shown by the jobbers as well as the canners.

There is a strong impression in the trade, in this section, at least, that the output of No. 2 tins tomatoes is less than it was in 1913, and that the increasing popularity of that size has caused a demand which will make them the leaders when the business in the new year gets fairly started. Markets that bought sparingly in previous seasons were large buyers when the canning season opened last summer, and have continuously bought them since then. The same remarks apply in a slightly lesser degree to No. 3 tomatoes, which have always been nearly as staple as sugar or coffee with the jobbing trade. They come as near to being a liquid asset as any merchandise handled in the larger markets of this country, and they are safe property to own at all times. On the principle of "safety first," canned tomatoes carry no fears for the buyer at to-day's prices.

The coldest weather within the last two years prevailed this week in this section, and it caused a strong market for raw oysters, which will naturally make a firmer market for cove oysters, should it continue long enough to freeze over the rivers in that part of Chesapeake Bay whence oysters are taken. At our quotations to-day they are a safe purchase.

Rice.

In retrospection the market shows continued steady improvement over the past three or four months. It is admitted that operators had a very unsatisfactory experience in their early operations, for September found them with large stocks purchased at high prices in which the trade refused to be interested at any figures, consequently there was little or no demand and the market has been in an unsettled state without any feature on which one could base a cause for anticipating any advance.

The situation has changed clearly for the better, however, and the trade are showing more disposition to cover their requirements, and with the increased call for export, has been given a stronger impetus, and prices are in a much stronger position and there appears to be an outlook for a considerable advance for all grades of Japan and Honduras before the present month passes out or during January at least. It is conceded that "Blue Rose" is relatively the cheapest proposition, and it is reported that considerable of this style has been taken up for speculation.

It is said also that Porto Rico has taken over a large line of medium and low grades. Japans are especially desirable this year on account of the high class quality. It is, therefore, quite evident that the tone of the market is steadily improving and the situation is safe and favorable for conservative operation on the part of the trade at large.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic coast report quite an improvement in the demand, no doubt due to the fact that merchants have been working their stocks down and were obliged to replenish, and the result is that prices have advanced principally on screenings and second heads, which at the moment are difficult to secure at reasonable figures.

At New Orleans there is reported continued activity on the part of local dealers, with steady demand from all sections of the country and heavy pur-

Weekly Window Display Suggestions

Fresh Fish Display.

As there is a greater demand for fish in cold weather, and as it needs only to be displayed extensively to sell well, a dealer might try this scheme: Run a width of green crepe paper across the rear and sides of the window and cover the bottom also. Next put a single row of white potatoes all around the rear and sides, and a row of lemons on top of them, with a stalk of celery in each corner. Then take two trays, large enough to hold a 25 to 30-pound cake of ice on each tray, near the center, on each side of the window. Stuff sponges wherever possible between the ice and edge of the pans to soak the water. Squeeze these out frequently. Lettuce heads all around the base will hide the rim of the pan. Just put one fish on each cake of ice, and if you handle oysters or clams, place a few around each fish.

chases against export orders have been made. The strong conditions in the primary markets are being felt, and the farmers are said to have the situation well in hand, and are asking and securing full prices for all offerings.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, a note of extreme confidence prevails throughout all the producing sections. Supplies of choice grades seem to be narrowing.

D. TALMAGE'S SONS Co.
New York and New Orleans.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Our agent in Ireland reports quite heavy shipments during last week of Irish mackerel; 448 barrels went to New York, 818 barrels went to Boston, 1,340 barrels went to Philadelphia, 430 barrels went to Baltimore, 312 barrels went to St. John, N. B., making a total for the week of 3,348 barrels, bringing the total of shipments of 1914 Irish autumn mackerel to date 11,792 barrels. The market is quiet and unchanged.

Norway mackerel has been in somewhat better demand, and prices are stiffening. No. 4s are getting quite scarce.

We have just had advice of a small shipment of Holland herrings coming by the next steamer. The market is practically bare, so that this shipment ought to realize good prices.

We may record a hand-to-mouth business on Scotch herrings at prices unchanged from our last week's report.

There is a steady and quite satisfactory hand-to-mouth business being done on all kinds of imported sardines, particularly so because stocks here are rather unimportant, and arrivals are small. The winter fishing of sardines in Norway seems to have started, but not to a very large extent as yet, as our reports from Norway indicate. Our reports from Norway are to the effect that the warring nations are heavy buyers of all Norwegian food products, which include sardines and other canned fish.

No particular changes in any of our lines are to be recorded this week. Business on the whole is quite satisfactory, and we look forward to some good big business right after the turn of the year.

Free Deals Dead in California After January 1.

The death knell of the free deal, so far as the grocery trade of California is concerned, has been sounded. The California Wholesale Grocers' Association, which declared against the free deal at its 1913 convention, confirmed its stand at the recent convention in Del Monte by the following resolution:—

Whereas, The sentiment of both the wholesale and retail trade is practically unanimous as being opposed to any form of free deal, and this sentiment is concurred in by many manufacturers; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Wholesale Grocers of California favor the discontinuance of free deals on or before December 31, 1914. And it is recommended that should the manufacturer desire to stimulate the sale of his product, a temporary uniform reduction in price be established to effect that end.

The fight has also been carried on among the retailers, and at the recent convention of the retail grocers, Secretary Bennett, of the State Wholesalers, discussed the issue without gloves. The retailers answered his appeal by going on record as supporting the jobbers in their stand.

What "STEEL-CUT" Means to You, Mr. Dealer

Steel cutting by the GOLDEN SUN special process, does not crush and powder coffee. It cuts the grains evenly, releases the indigestible portions of the bean, removes all chaff and fine dust which often makes coffee bitter or muddy, leaving each particle clean and rich in the essential oil which is the life of its flavor and aroma. Steel cutting is the only method of securing for the consumer the Best that is in coffee and

Hardware—Tools—Specialties

Suggestions for Effective Display of Hardware Specialties.

Effective window displays on the part of the general store are capable of many interpretations. Ingenuity in arranging the placement of goods to the best advantage as an appeal to the passerby; the choice of color, if any, to heighten the effect, and other details, too numerous to mention short of a complete essay on this always absorbing theme in the selling plans of a merchant, all enter into the proposition. In a recent issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" an article in this department on "Novel Hardware Poster Display," attracted marked attention.

Commenting upon it, a prominent manufacturer of hardware specialties says: "The suggestion you offer to dealers is worth while, and no doubt manufacturers generally will be glad to have you direct the interest of the dealer to their advertising matter. If you will allow a suggestion, we think you should have gone one step further, recommending that after making this general display of dealer's advertising, and getting up more or less interest in it among the public, the dealer should, in turn, take each manufacturer's advertising and use that alone, in connection with his display of goods, for a limited period, say, from one to two weeks. After that let the window be completely changed in favor of the advertising of some other manufacturer and a rearrangement of merchandise. This would give the dealer a programme of continuous changes and would enable him to get more benefit out of the advertising, to say nothing of the increased benefit to the manufacturer."

Known Brands of Hardware Most Profitable to Push and Stock.

Experience has proven that the known-to-the-consumer brands of hardware are commanding the bulk of trade in general stores. A merchant who has watched his sales recently said: "We know that we can sell more of such brands on less effort, and make more real profit, than we can by fiddling with brands which no one knows, and which the retailer is asked to introduce. Of course, we give due heed to the question of profit. We want brands that pay a good, fair living profit; but we also want to handle only the lines that sell readily, and in hardware this means something. There is some satisfaction in pushing a brand that you can get somewhere with, for there is mighty little satisfaction in pushing a brand of goods that you have to introduce and on which the merchant has to do practically all of the local advertising himself. We have given much study and thought to retail problems, and we have found that aggressive advertising, and plenty of it, with pushing advertised brands, is one of the combination which have helped us in solving some of the difficulties in the successful conduct of a general store.

"Of course, no dealer can begin to stock all of the good lines he sees advertised. He must pick and choose from among those that are best adapted to his trade locally. It is comparatively easy, however, to select brands of hardware, cutlery, tools, implements, machines, etc., that fit in one's trade naturally, and which are well known to customers who are readers of the magazines and other National mediums. There is no question that the store which pushes these advertised lines can sell more goods and make more actual profit on the same effort than is possible in aiming to stock and sell only unknown merchandise. The problem of advertising a general store is one of the most difficult which confronts the retailer. Some retailers seem to have solved it all right, but they are the exceptions. As a class the general store-keeper in the small towns is woefully weak in his own advertising. It should be given more attention. The fact of the matter is the merchant is so busy with a hundred and one details of the business that each week is likely to pass with the advertising neglected.

"Now, what is one great reason why we carry and push goods advertised Nationally and in the trade papers? We aim to get as much benefit as possible from the manufacturers' advertising because we are deficient in our own advertising. They are attending to this in a most capable way for us and all other dealers who have the good sense to size up the situation in the same way. The manufacturers have trained experts who study advertising problems and are capable of writing convincing, business pulling ads. and telling publicity, and this helps the merchant tremendously in spite of our own neglect or ignorance, if you please. We make every possible use of the advertising material sent out by the manufacturers of the known-to-the-public brands and connect up our store with them in every possible way. The result is satisfactory and profitable sales of such goods; the other kind lag far behind."

Training an Outside Hardware Salesman for a General Store.

Training a hardware salesman, such as fit in and make good in the average general merchant's store, is not altogether a labor of love. When the work is accomplished, however, a valuable man is secured. M. H. Bird, who states he is something of an authority on matters of this kind, says, in speaking of an outside salesman looking after the interests of the hardware end of the store, should be a good mixer, not the slick-tongued kind, but of the species that can form a friendship and keep it. If the proprietor of the store is a man with a strong personality, which many of them are, he would be the proper man. If he would get a good manager or head clerk for his store and inaugurate a perfect system, he can then be in a position to spend more time among his trade on the outside.

In case the merchant puts a salesman in that field he should be sure to select one of pleasant disposition, one that knows his stock and the prices and is loyal to the best interests of his employer. This salesman should be instructed not to bore people in trying to effect sales, but to ascertain the needs of prospective customers and, by using tact, direct the attention of the prospect to the ability of his store to supply the goods in mind. An excellent plan to follow is to think of some useful household article either for the kitchen or of general utility, or an implement or tool for the farm; and by a proper and clear explanation of its usefulness the salesman or canvasser may cause the prospect to realize the need, and satisfy him that the benefits justify the investment.

The financial returns derived from the work of the outside salesman may not be altogether remunerative at first; but persistent efforts on his part will educate him and make him more resourceful, as well as educate the trade to the fact that he is capable of giving reliable information. It is found that an outside man who is capable of adjusting a sulky plow, a binder or some other implement; or to explain the advantages of a new tool or the superiority of a lawn mower, is thus able to get the confidence of the farmer or mechanic or housewife quickly. Souvenirs or trinkets of any kind are also good to distribute gratuitously, not forgetting something for the children, who are an important factor at times in cultivating a prospect. By using judgment the man on the outside can make himself valuable, and, by proper method, of course, become an efficient "scout" for the store's hardware department.

Boots Shoes Findings

Practical Suggestions for the Shoe Department.

Lace shoes for women are to the front again after being passe for a number of years. A cycle of some kind seems to have been completed and laces are here again. Buttons for a long time held sway, but everyday the signs grow more emphatic and more stores, even to the shoe annex of the general store, show the lace model boots. Lace shoes fit well, are comfortable and give a finished appearance altogether lacking in button shoes.

Shoe retailers are appreciating more and more that the road salesmen from the factories and wholesalers who call to show their lines and book orders are men who have been drilled in advertising. Therefore they are realizing that these salesmen are experts, men who can and will help the merchant immensely. To-day there is a closer cooperation between the manufacturer and the retailer, due in great measure to the efforts and work of the road men.

Dealers are finding out, if they have given any attention whatever to the question, that it pays to carry a stock of hosiery for men and women at least. The demand for varied colored hosiery or, rather, the craze for fancy stockings among women, especially, is a great help to the shoe department of a general store. Hosiery manufacturers are exerting themselves to present facts to prove the advisability of carrying stock, and those who have availed themselves of this information and stocked some

For the Holiday Trade

YOU will have a good holiday trade on pop corn, if you have Snow Ball or Santa Claus brand in stock. These packages are repeaters. They will help your sales of salt, honey, molasses, etc.

"All profit, no investment," is the way one grocer puts it. There's big money and satisfaction in Dickinson's Package corn. It's nice business to have, and you might as well get it as someone else.

Snow Ball is the favorite brand of Rice Corn. One-pound package. Retail at 10 cents. When popped, one package is equal to eight quarts of popped corn. No dirt, or chaff. Just sound, clean, sweet kernels. It pops!

Santa Claus brand is a ten-ounce package. Retail at 5 cents. The same nice quality as packed under Snow Ball. The largest, flakiest pop corn you ever saw. And exquisite in flavor!

Let us send you a supply of illustrated recipe-booklets. You'll use Dickinson's Corn in your own home every day, after you use it once popular brand, have had no reason to regret it.

A shoe department in a general store is also a specialty shop. While a customer may know shoes are sold, it is seldom they know findings may be had. It is up to the dealer to jog the public's memory on this point. A list of the articles coming under the head of findings should be made out and printed on cards and placed in the windows and hung around the shoe department. Many customers who go to drug and other stores for accessories used in connection with footwear and the pedal extremities, will be surprised to know these special article are kept in the findings list. The signs in many cases will suggest to the customer something that is wanted and sales will result.

A Shoe Costly at Any Price.

It is said the cheapest shoe has been found, at least this must be so from the following details: The bottom or sole is made of paper, cleverly covered with a thin sheet of leather. Cement holds the leather to the paper, and, after finishing, the edge is better set, at least in appearance, than a solid leather edge. With a nice bottom finish the shoe would easily pass for a $3 shoe. Who buys such shoes? The poorest class of people in the large cities, and mayhap in places where the foreign element congregates, as in industrial centers where such people are largely employed as unskilled laborers. As a rule, these cheap shoes are thrown in the show window with a notice stating: "Any reasonable offer accepted." They also play a great part in the stock of so-called "sample shoe" stores. Such shoes are costly at any price.

Allowance for Fitting Room Means Sales.

Selling shoes at retail does not depend entirely upon conversation. There are other methods of inducing customers to agree with you. Comfortable benches or chairs, with clean, inviting rugs or carpets in front of them, form perhaps the strongest invitation to fit shoes that could be extended. Imagine a nice shoe stock, with counters or cases extended close to the shelving, with a solitary hard seat or "kitchen" chair in the rear of the shoe department for the customer who must try on her or his shoes. Does anyone wonder how it is possible to sell shoes and fit but one out of ten?

Merchants are not wanting who declare they cannot afford to devote much space for seating facilities. To this kind of a dealer it is suggested that they note the amount of space devoted by other merchants, says the "Merchants' Journal and Commerce," who pay fifty times the rent for the same size space. An example of what can be done is presented in a small town in mind having five general stores. Four of these stores have little or no seating spaces, and the average percentage fitted 10 per cent. of the shoes sold. The fifth store, not as large as any of the other four, has a separate room for shoes with six benches and a spacious square neatly carpeted. Fifty per cent.

of the shoes sold are fitted. It is needless to say that this store does a much larger business, even on a smaller stock.

Dry Goods Notions Knit Wear

Domestic Embroideries Coming to Front.

With general taste more favorable to a larger use for embroideries, domestic houses in the line are featuring more strongly than ever the samples for next season. A number of manufacturers are now showing goods that are far superior to anything heretofore exhibited. Twenty-seven inch flouncings, in small, dainty patterns on sheer cloths, like voiles, organdies, transparent batiste, etc., are prominent in the domestics. Good values in these flouncings are shown at 67½ and 75 cents a yard in the primary markets. More care in workmanship and the use of finer yarns are plainly evident in the best of these domestic embroideries. Goods being ordered for immediate shipment include 18 and 27-inch flouncings on the sheer cloths mentioned above; likewise narrow embroideries, such as edgings on voiles for collars, both in white and colors.

Comprehensive Range of Materials and Prices in the Primary and Jobbing Markets.

It seems probable that prices will be advanced on bleached goods. The demand has developed recently on the part of merchants, and producers and jobbers are making the most of the situation.

A revision of prices on staple ginghams and tickings is being awaited, especially by the jobbing end. When this is conceded, buying by retailers is expected to become more brisk.

Road men are sending in better reports. Merchant customers, they advise are showing more interest in sections where little buying for spring delivery has been done. Odd lots for the special January sales are being inquired for and booked.

The call for sheer printed goods for spring trade is relatively in excess of the demand for white goods, which has been strong for weeks past. A white season, in all lines of dress material, is a prediction of long standing, and the small town merchant is not overlooking this "one best bet."

Crepe weaves in silk are running into a good line of orders, and commitments from all classes of retailers cover deliveries clear up to next June and July. Marquesettes are also selling well, orders being particularly numerous during the past few weeks.

Holiday sales with the department stores in the large cities was at least 10 per cent. below that of a year ago. About the usual number of persons were in the stores, and practically about

Good Advertising Backs up Quality

THE sooner grocers realize that advertised goods are absolutely trustworthy, and sell them, the quicker the success of their business is assured.

Advertised goods must be dependable. Their very existence is based upon superior quality and uniformity maintained year in and year out. Advertised goods have all to lose if they prove other than as represented.

National Biscuit Company products have established and maintained a quality that is unapproached in the baking of crackers and cookies, wafers and snaps, cakes and jumbles.

These products, each variety the best of its kind, are largely advertised throughout the country. No other articles of food are so well known, so universally liked, so consistently purchased.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

the same number of packages were purchased, but the goods were of a cheaper grade. The buying of so-called useful articles, as against fancy things, of which so much has been said in the newspapers, like many other questions written about of which they know little or nothing, the difference was not noticeable.

Merchants are still holding off from buying underwear and hosiery, according to the salesmen who were out in the trade and have come in until after the first of the year. The mills are not disposed to make concessions to the jobbers, who in turn are refusing to meet the demand of retailers for a cut in keeping with the current low price of cotton. The rumored export orders are upsetting the equanimity of the manufacturers, not a few of whom are counting on "cashing in good and proper" while the European war is under way. This speculative feeling is having a certain bearing on prices.

Last week sharp advances were made on mackinaws, ranging from 5 to 15 cents a yard, due to a shortage of raw material. Several producers are sold up for the next season.

White gabardines and etamines were in steady demand for quick and future delivery. Coverts continue to be the popular dress material and for prompt shipment. The orders booked for next season showed signs of expanding. Fancy worsted for spring are being called for, especially from merchants in the smaller towns and cities of the interior.

Announcements were sent the trade last week that on January 2d carpet and rug prices would be advanced. Carpets will be marked up 2 to 5 cents a yard, while on rugs the increase will be 25 cents to $1 on a 9 x 12 basis.

Domestic manufacturers of ribbons are making exceptional preparations in their line of fancies for next season. Warp prints are being shown in attractive variations. There are also Bayadere and plaid effects and quite a few black and white combinations. It is expected a large sale of wide ribbons for sashes will be a marked feature of the coming season.

Advices say abnormally small purchases of linens were made by retailers recently. The demand for house-keeping goods and handkerchiefs is very satisfactory. The "white sales," which are generally customary with merchants in January, have been amply provided for, notwithstanding the high prices.

Preferences for Dress Goods.

Among the preferences for dress goods the best values for spring are plain effects and piece-dyed staples. Merchants say that a gown made of serge or a gabardine, will give better service than a fancy fabric, and will rely upon the trimmings and cut for the best effects. Another popular cloth is the shepherd checks, which can be made in so many different models and is so adaptable to all kinds of fancy trimmings. Therefore there is no limit to the attractive styles that are possible in combination with a black and white check. The demand is just as strong for spring as it has been all this season. The life of the balmacaan for women's wear seems to have taken on a new lease, as the call for the best grades of this material is as pronounced as ever. Mackinaws are selling up to expectations, and the cooler weather will stimulate sales at the retail counter.

Holiday Trades Turned Out Satisfactorily.

Retailers are closing this year with a pretty good showing of business, and this in the face of the much-talked of depression prevailing both among jobbers and merchants. The Western trade have all along reported larger sales than the East, as reflected in the weekly reports coming from the leading wholesalers of Chicago. The John V. Farwell Co. say:—

"Extremely cold weather this week has greatly stimulated the sale of wool dress goods, comfortables, underwear, hosiery, fur gloves, lined mittens and other heavy goods for immediate shipment. Domestics and prints are active following the price revision of this past week. Prices on some brands of cottons have already been advanced by agents. Analysis of cause of greatly increased demand of piece goods during 1914 shows the main factors to be the spread of dressmaking instruction in public schools and merchants' featuring of 'Sewing Week.' In Chicago alone over 25,000 children are now being taught sewing as a part of their instruction. In some schools in connection with dressmaking textiles are studied from the standpoint of physical characteristics, adulterations, weave, etc., in order that pupils may become intelligent consumers. Reports from Galesburg, Davenport, Evansville, Spokane and other cities state that 'Sewing Week' has proved to be a success."

Marshall Field & Co. in their resumé of the dry goods trade, say: "Zero temperature is stimulating retail demand for heavier fabrics and wearing apparel. Price reductions were made during the week on wide and narrow prints and percales. The low prices quoted on domestic cottons last week brought very satisfactory orders from retailers. These reductions were timely, as domestics are an important item in January sales. Evidence that we anticipated the bottom price on a well-known 36-inch bleached muslin is seen in the fact that, although the manufacturers also reduced their price, they have since advanced it. The attendance of buyers in the market has been large and mail orders have been fair."

Underwear Mill to Sell Direct.

After January 1st the two brands of knit underwear, sold under the names of "Howard Mills" and "Merode," by Lord & Taylor, New York, for many years, will be disposed of to the trade direct by the manufacturers. These well-known trade-marks were originated by Lord & Taylor, and they are now relinquished to the mills, which will continue to have a complete service and sample stock of these lines during 1915 at the former's wholesale department. Winship, Bait & Co., the manufacturers, in a formal statement, say: "The large staff of Lord & Taylor's salesmen will represent us direct, so that there will be no interruption of the long established and thorough selling service."

Why Not a Small Stock of Drugs?

General merchants in small towns and even villages could profitably carry a small stock of staples in the drug line where there is no store of this kind in the place. Such things, for instance, as the popular patent medicines and other proprietary preparations, salts, oils and herbs. Any wholesale druggist can tell a dealer what he should have, what price to sell the different goods for to realize a suitable profit and what legal restrictions there are. These side lines or departments all help to add variety to the general stock and are added pullers of business.

Credit Conditions Curtailing Retailers' Buying.

Relative to the buying of underwear by merchants, reports from men on the road indicate the poorest trade seen for many years. Prices on goods now being shown are lower than for the same time. Therefore while it should be a safe buy for any one, inasmuch as retailers show no disposition to shift from the usual fixed price of 25, 50 cents and $1, consequently a wider margin of profit is therefore offered to dealers. Notwithstanding a favorable market and the indisposition to buy, the "Textile Manufacturers' Journal" very pertinently says: "A large factor in jobbers' reticence concerning future business is said to be the lack of support from the retailers. Retail trade has been more or less hit in various parts of the country by the general restriction of buying power. Their buying has been sluggish for some time, and this has made itself felt on the primary market. Jobbers' current trade with retailers is restricted, and in many quarters jobbers state that they are not altogether satisfied with the credit conditions among their customers, and that because of this stocks which might be moved from secondary circles are being held back. It is reported that jobbers in New England particularly are having trouble with the credit of retailers, and they are consequently refusing to commit themselves further until their collections improve."

Ever Noticed This?

YOU may have noted that what advertising we do for Wheatena—it is nothing like as much as some other cereals do—is in peculiarly high class magazines.

That is because the people who buy and continuously use Wheatena are peculiarly high class. If you sell Wheatena you have noticed that in your own business. It's a good kind of people to sell.

A Tough Thing to Look At.

I own up there's one thing I ain't ever been able to look at without getting sort of down in the mouth, and that's seeing a business dry up and blow away.

Specially a business that's been good, with warm blood in it.

Always strikes me like looking at somebody you know, going to pieces with some disease.

Of course you can't always keep diseases off, and you can't always keep a business from going to pot. But there's a heap of times when you can do both if you only use some plain gumption.

There's a good business going to pot right before my eyes. I don't know how to stop it. It's a grocery business, and it's been one of the best in the place where it is, which is on the edge of old Philly. The old man who started it has lived on it for a good many years, and he could live on it for a lot more—if he only didn't have to get old.

D'ye know, you can tell when a business is going to die. When the fellow that owns it starts not to care much whether he has stuff on hand to suit his trade or not—that's the first sign. After that always comes a let down along the whole line. He ain't keen for business. What comes in he takes care of, the best he feels like doing, but it ain't like it used to be.

This old fellow has a couple of right fair boys in his store and he has his own boy in there. The clerks are like a lot of other clerks—they're all right when they've got somebody running 'em, and plain punk when they ain't.

The old man's own boy would rather shovel snow than keep a grocery store and he don't care who knows it and never has. Just now it's his cue to step in and tighten up the strings that the old man is letting get loose, but he ain't doing it—not even a little bit. He don't give a darn—not even if the business curls up its toes and dies. When it does—and it's going to, believe me—he'll go out and get a fine job at ten thousand a year. If he can. And with about twenty years wasted, for he's forty years old.

Gee, ain't it punk luck things have to happen like that?

Just to show how blamed careless they've got out there, here's a thing that somebody told me happened last week.

One afternoon just as they were about to close up a regular customer ordered a pound of butter. She's a good buyer—always gets the best and pays regular every Monday morning. The kind of trade you read about.

They didn't have a pound of good butter in the place and they sent her half a pound of bad tub butter, because they thought they had to send her something!

No, I ain't lying either! That thing happened just like I tell you. Of course every nose in the house went up at the tub butter and the woman went over the next day and kicked up a big fuss. Who wouldn't?

What did the old man tell her when she went over? The old man blamed being all out of good butter on his son—he ought to have ordered some and forgot it. The son blamed sending the rotten butter on one of the other clerks. The clerk said the customer wanted butter in a hurry and he didn't know what else to do—there wasn't anybody else around.

That's a great big beautiful way to run a store, ain't it?

Here's another thing I heard. The old man has always kept turkeys for the holiday trade. It's a good thing to do—I know some fellows that clean up a good bit of money out of turkeys for Thanksgiving and Christmas, but they work it up and tend to it.

This year the old man told his customers he didn't know whether he was going to handle turkeys or not. "They're a good bit of trouble," he said. My lor', what ain't a good bit of trouble? "Of course if any of 'em wanted 'em, he would get 'em one." Oh, my, oh, my, ain't it scandalous to see a man play with business like that?

Naturally his turkey trade scattered and he lost it, and the son and the two clerks sat by and saw it go.

It's such a blamed hard thing nowadays working up a business, that when you've got it worked up, it seems like cutting the baby's throat to throw it away, don't it?

THE STROLLER.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

Quite a number of the members of the Pottsville Association were severe losers in the recent fire which burned a large part of the business district.

The Organizer had the pleasure of meeting the Merchants' Association at Lebanon on December 14th. The annual reports were read and new officers elected for the ensuing year. F. R. Heisey is the new president, T. J. Burkey was re-elected secretary. The association is prosperous but plans are being made for a more effective organization. After January 1st a campaign of membership will be put on and steps taken to install an up-to-date credit system. The Lebanon Association has great opportunities.

Meadville has a trading stamp war on hand that is to be fought to a finish. All rules have been set aside and the merchants are united in their determination to fight fire with fire. To this end State Secretary A. M. Howes has been called in for expert advice and the experience of the Erie Association will be placed at the disposal of the Meadville Association.

The annual ball of the Pittsburgh Butchers' Association will be held at Central Turner Hall on January 20, 1915.

The State Executive Committee will meet at Philadelphia on January 13, 1915.

The Proper Care of Perishable Food Products by the Retailer

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States has prepared and is issuing to the retail trade some extremely useful matter under the above heading, the point being to supply some practical directions by which spoilage in the retail store may be reduced as much as possible. From time to time the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will publish brief extracts from this matter.

INTRODUCTION.

The American public is becoming a more discriminating public every day. The widespread publicity brought about by the passage and rigid enforcement of the State and National pure food laws has contributed to create an insistent demand for clean, sanitary and wholesome foods.

We are aware that the retail trade of the country is fast abandoning the old slipshod methods of handling many kinds of goods, and the average grocery store is now conducted in a scientific and up-to-date manner, to a degree little thought of twenty-five years ago.

One of the most important of the advanced steps thus taken is the proper care of perishable goods. It is well known that all food products are more or less perishable. The proper care of such articles often spells the difference between success or failure. It invariably affords the line of demarcation between the grocer with a large, well satisfied and increasing trade, and the one who, while still using the old methods, is able perhaps to temporarily stave off disaster by reason of past reputation and long established personal acquaintance.

We as wholesale grocers know that the vast majority of our customers are well aware of these conditions, and have gone far toward adjusting themselves to the new situation, and have already aligned themselves upon the side of progress.

Some, unfortunately, have not had the means of acquiring the technical knowledge necessary to obtain the best results in the conduct of a grocery store, and such should lose no opportunity - to fully inform themselves upon this subject as far as possible.

Nothing is more necessary or important to the average retailer than that he should thoroughly understand the proper care which should be taken of perishable goods. Not only is this important in order that the food products which he offers should go to the consumer in a fresh, wholesome and appetizing condition, but that the dealer may also avoid the immense losses which otherwise constantly occur through complete spoilage of goods.

The following suggestions are offered by which we endeavor to give you the correct methods of caring for the more important of these items, which methods, we believe, are reasonably within the means and facilities of the average retail grocer. If these simple rules are followed, they will save you much loss and annoyance, and they will enable you to place your goods in the hands of the consumer in the best condition possible.

You will note that we offer no suggestion as to the proper care of strictly fresh products such as meats, produce, butter, eggs, fruits, etc., as the average retailer fully understands the extreme perishable character of such goods and is well aware of what must be done to prevent immediate deterioration. Besides, we think it is better that this subject should be treated by those who are more interested in handling such products, and who are perhaps better qualified to give suggestions with reference to same.

It is the false assumption, on the part of some, that the so-called cured products will keep indefinitely, subject to all sorts of conditions, with little or no care or attention, that has been productive of the most difficulty.

CCXCI.—Federal Trade Commissioners' Power to Invade Large and Small Business Houses in Search of Evidence.

Trade questions of law continue to arise under the recently enacted Clayton anti-trust act. For example, I have received the following during the week from a New York trade paper:—

We are prompted to ask if you have prepared anything relative to the effect of the enforcement of the Clayton Act?

It has been intimated to us that this measure, through the processes of the trade commission that is authorized, can invade any business office and call for correspondence and records—not simply the offices of large concerns, but all concerns.

If such is the case, an article along this line might be interesting.

Now that Congress has passed the Clayton anti-trust act, which is an amendment to the familiar Sherman anti-trust law; and the Federal Trade Commission act, which transfers to a Government commission the authority over business which was formerly exercised by the Bureau of Corporations, the situation in a nutshell is this: The Clayton law forbids various acts, which the law holds tend to restrict competition and create monopoly. Practically nothing is said in the act as to how the Government shall proceed to get evidence when it enforces the law, except the provision in Section 11 that authority to enforce the principal sections, where they refer to business, shall be vested in the Federal Trade Commission. It should be understood that the two are companion acts, and will operate together.

The Federal Trade Commission act has its core in Section 5, which simply provides that "unfair methods of competition in commerce are hereby declared unlawful." The balance of the act is devoted to creating a Federal Trade Commission, not only to enforce the above provision regarding unfair methods of competition, but also the provisions of the Clayton act which are to some extent along the same line.

How the Commission will work is set forth in the Federal Trade Commission act, and this brings me to answering the above inquiry, which in substance is, how will the Government go to work, when it has reason to believe that somebody is indulging in unfair methods of competition, or is violating the Clayton anti-trust act in some of the ways set forth? Has it the power to descend upon any business concern, large and small, and root into its books and its papers, if it believes there is evidence there for the case it expects to bring?

My judgment is that the Government is given by the Federal Trade Commission act this very power, and that business houses of all descriptions, large and small, may legally be called upon at any time to open up their archives and bid the United States Government look in.

Section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission act, touching this point, is as follows:—

Sec. 6. That the commission shall also have power:—

(a) To gather and compile information concerning and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks and common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations and partnerships.

I italicize the last clause, because if the Government has power to investigate a corporation, in its relations with other concerns, naturally under this power it could go into the offices of these other concerns and see what evidence it could find, bearing of course, upon the original inquiry.

The act provides that the word "corporation" in the above provision shall mean "any company or association incorporated or unincorporated, which is organized to carry on business for profit, and has shares of capital or capital stock, and any company or association, incorporated or unincorporated, without shares of capital or capital stock, except partnerships, which is organized to carry on business for its own profit or that of its members."

There are several other provisions in the Federal Commission act which give the new body powers of investigation, etc., but clause (a) of Section 6, which I have reproduced, is the main one and from that the Commission gets the most of its power, aided by Section 9, as follows:—

Sec. 9. That for the purpose of this act the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against, * * *

It is not made quite clear what the "documentary evidence of any corporation" is, but I cite the provision to show in a general way the scope of the Commission's powers.

I will try to show, by a concrete case, under what conditions the Government will probably exercise this power, which it clearly seems to have, to invade business concerns of all kinds.

Let us say that a large corporation, located in New York or in some other business center, is brave enough or foolish enough to run counter to this new combination of laws. It sells the jobbing or the retail trade—it makes no difference for the purpose of this illustration—and it has sent letters and literature to its customers in furtherance of the scheme, whatever it is, which the Government is alleging is in violation of law. These letters and papers are supposed to be on file in the offices of the concern's various customers. In addition thereto, those customers' books, let us say, may show prices or payments, or discounts, which confirm the arrangements made in the letters. Still again, the letter books of those customers might show copies of letters written to competitors of the concern under investigation, under pressure from the latter, which would also be a part of the original scheme.

In my opinion, the Government would have the power, under this law, to go anywhere in search of evidence of this character, and it therefore behooves retail and wholesale concerns who handle products of concerns liable to run afoul of the anti-trust acts, to live accordingly. Section 10 imposes a fine of $1,000 to $5,000, or imprisonment of not more than one year, or both, upon any person who neglects or refuses to produce documentary evidence in obedience to the lawful requirements of the Commission.

Question: A. L. Erwin, Baden, Pa.—What is the proper procedure when:—

No. 1.—A customer comes into the store and buys merchandise to the amount of $10; gives check on National Bank for $10. Check is returned with notation "not sufficient funds."

No. 2.—A customer buys groceries to the amount of 80 cents and has same charged on open account. Later comes in and presents check for $5. I take out the amount of bill, 80 cents, and give change amounting to $4.20. Check is returned with notation "no funds."

Answer.—No. 1.—There is a little doubt here as to whether the customer is guilty of criminal false pretense. If he had any funds in the bank the court might hold that he may have had a reasonable expectation of making the amount there sufficient to cover the check.

My judgment, however, is that he obtained merchandise under false pretenses and that he is criminally liable. I should not hesitate to notify him that if he does not make the account good at once I should arrest him upon that charge.

No. 2.—In this case the customer is undoubtedly guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses. This case differs from the first in that the second check was returned "no funds" and the first was returned

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is a neat, clean, attractive package that looks well on your shelf, and once seen by customers is sure to be remembered. They remember the cleanliness, the sparkling purity of the sugar, and insist on having the CARTON that keeps it clean and pure.

Sugar is probably the most sensitive article sold in a grocery store and should be protected from dust and dirt. Scientists tell us that it breeds germs with dangerous rapidity, when once exposed. Women may not examine sugar to see if it has germs in it and they may be content to use sugar which needs no examination to show that it is dusty; BUT, as soon as they see FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR they KNOW it is better, purer, finer, cleaner sugar than they have ever had before. If you are the proprietor of a pure food store you can tell your customers about FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in a way that will increase their respect for your desire to serve them with the purest and cleanest foods which can be obtained. (See foot note at the bottom of this advertisement, "What to tell customers.")

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGARS in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

"not sufficient funds." There is a very great difference in the law in giving a check upon a bank in which you have no deposit and giving a check upon a bank in which you have an account but not a sufficiently large one to cover the check.

In the first case the person who does such a thing could hardly have been under any impression that he had enough money there or would have enough there to cover the check, and his fraudulent intent is therefore made clear.

Question: George L. Dobie, Secretary Bradford Business Men's Association, Bradford, Pa.—Where goods are sent to the home of a prospective customer "on approval," i. e., for inspection with a view to buying, said goods being sent at the prospective customer's request, is there any process of law whereby the dealer can recover the merchandise or the pay for same when the party to whom the goods were sent elects to keep all or part of them and refuses to pay?

This question was raised at a meeting of our shoe dealers last evening and we would very much appreciate an opinion on it.

Answer.—When goods are sent to a customer's house on approval they should invariably be sent upon the condition, which should be clearly understood beforehand, that if accepted, they must be paid for at once. If goods so sent are held without being paid for, the holder has put himself in a position where he can be arrested for detaining the property of another without that other's consent. Title does not pass in such a case, unless the seller waives the spot cash requirement and allows the buyer to keep the goods without immediate payment.

If the seller wishes to he can demand the goods and upon failure to deliver them, he can issue a warrant for the person detaining them. If he does not wish to go that far, he can replevin the goods and get them back.

NOTE.—Requests for information in this department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge. Address all communications to Legal Editor "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

J. Monroe Mosher, Endicott, N. Y., sends me a couple of small circulars which he used some time ago. They are 6 x 10 inches and fairly well printed on cream paper of satisfactory quality. Here is the reduced reproduction:—

other stores which I assume use solicitors and give stamps.

This circular might have been set a little more impressively, nevertheless, it is clean, and easily read, and that is tisement which they used a few weeks ago, during the days when sugar was bringing war prices, and when 7 cents a pound was a bargain. The advertisement measured six inches across three columns, and is here reproduced in miniature.

I have no doubt that this advertisement stood out in the paper in which it appeared, but there is rather too much display type in it to suit my taste. Rather too much to make the advertisement impressive, in my judgment.

Why Should You Worry?

Yesterday is dead, forget it. To-morrow does not exist. Don't worry. To-day is here, use it.

TO-DAY is the time to buy your groceries of us. Our motto of 'Quick delivery, no order taking, goods at less price,' is a winner. We recognize the fact that all Housekeepers are too busy early in the day to be bothered by a man taking orders, to say nothing of the extra expense to the merchant, which he must charge on the goods, and that she would rather come to the store and select her own goods than have a clerk do so and send her something she does not want. We know that our system is greatly appreciated by the people, from the steady growth of our business.

That is the reason we can give you our low prices which no "Take order, trading stamp, premium, grocer" can duplicate.

"THE CHAP WHO HOLDS PRICES DOWN"

J. MONROE MOSHER Endicott, N. Y.
61 MONROE STREET

There is a strong argument in the introduction to this circular, but it is a big question how much weight it has with consumers. Consumers are both lazy and greedy. In spite of what Mr. Mosher says about consumers being too busy in the morning to be bothered with solicitors, the fact is that many women are never too busy to drop their work and talk with somebody. Especially if it saves them the trouble of going to a grocery store. Likewise a great many consumers do not find their hunger for trading stamps satisfied by arguments against them. Their minds are convinced, but they still hold their hands out for the stamps just the same. Sometime when Mr. Mosher has a little time, I wish he would write and tell us how his plan works out in competition with half the battle. The offer in the right-hand column, "Your Choice," is not as strong as it might have been because so many of the offerings in there are too general. When you offer something definite, like Campbell's soup, Kellogg's corn flakes and Karo syrup, three cans for a quarter, you have got something that makes an impression, but when you simply offer corn, peas, olives, etc., three cans for a quarter, you are not definite enough. There is no fixed price for "corn" or "peas" or "olives," and therefore an offer of three cans for a quarter doesn't mean anything. The offer should describe the brands in every case and tell the regular price.

Too much boldface is just about as bad as none, for in both cases there is no contrast, which is the chief value of boldface. The use of boldface only where something is to be emphasized also gives more space for the arrangement of the type, and makes a better looking advertisement.

Hotels Forced to Report Transient Merchants.

City Commissioner Bigelow, of Portland, Ore., has prepared an ordinance which will require all hotel proprietors to report to the city license bureau transient merchants arriving at hotels with the purpose of selling goods direct to the consumer. The ordinance is fashioned after a similar measure existing in San Francisco and will enable the license officials to reach the itinerant dealers upon their arrival in the city.

The Subscribers' Bargain List

Have you got any goods you don't want? Anything—canned goods, groceries, hardware, dry goods, anything at all that's in good condition, but won't sell for you.

If you will make a price on it we can probably sell it for you in a hurry. Write us about it, stating the quantity, condition and your best price. You might give the original cost, too. We will give it a key number and offer it to our 4,000 subscribers. Your name will not appear unless you want it to. All sales ought to be on a cash basis.

The point is that what won't sell for you may be in everyday demand for somebody else, who will be glad to get your stock of it at a bargain.

There will be no charge for this service anywhere—we do it to help along.

Tax on Itinerant Vendors Void Because Excessive.

The itinerant vendor ordinance of St. Louis is null and void, according to an opinion rendered last week by Judge Hitchcock of the Circuit Court. The decision was made in connection with a suit brought by Robert C. Vose, a Boston art dealer, to enjoin the city of St. Louis and the license collector from enforcing the ordinance against Vose. The court held that the ordinance was "extravagant and prohibitive" and therefore unconstitutional. This law was passed last March and had the unqualified support of retailers in all lines. It imposes a license fee of $100 a day on out-of-town merchants who come here and set up salesrooms in hotels or vacant buildings, being modeled after similar laws in operation in other towns and cities of the country. In a recent article in the legal department of this paper on "The Local Merchants' Protection Against Outside Transient Competitors," it was stated that an indispensable requirement of such an ordinance was that the tax imposed by it should be reasonable.

WHERE the GLASS JAR COMES IN

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market.

Is Not a Mush or a Porridge

The wise, up-to-date grocer will sell what the customer asks for, but it is well to remember that is not a mush or a porridge. You have to chew Shredded Wheat. Children cannot bolt it down as they do a mushy porridge. Chewing is the first process in digestion. In children it develops sound teeth and healthy gums. It is always fresh, always clean, always pure, always the same.

TRISCUIT is the Shredded Wheat wafer—a crisp, tasty whole wheat toast—delicious with butter, cheese or marmalades

Shredded Wheat Biscuit is packed in odorless spruce wood cases which may be readily sold for ten or fifteen cents, thereby adding to the grocer's profits

IN WRITING

ADVERTISERS KINDLY MENTION "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD"

Bought Simply Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

Judging a Store by Baking Powder

Baking powder seems a little thing to you, but somebody will judge your store by it. We do not see how there can be but one opinion as to

Rumford Baking Powder

None can possibly leaven better or insure more wholesome food. Its absolute Purity, uniform strength and keeping quality make baking results most dependable, which means a pleased customer and that every can of Rumford you sell will sell other cans for you.

Rumford pays you a greater profit than any other high-grade baking powder—it will pay you to recommend it.

NEW LARGE

Pound Package
ONLY 5 CENTS

To the Consumer

The New Package of

Babbitt's
1776 Soap Powder

has every feature in its favor to make it the biggest and fastest seller you ever handled. It's a pure soap powder of wonderful cleansing power, and means "Freedom from Drudgery" for the housewife. The big pound package that costs only 5 cents is the biggest moneyworth she can buy, and that pleases her. The Trade Marks are good for beautiful and useful presents. If you'll keep 1776 Soap Powder on display and mention its features to customers, you'll find it easy to put a few packages in every order.

B. T. BABBITT, Inc.

NEW YORK CITY

Have You Any Fine Trade?

Hooton's Cocoa will not only please your most particular customers by its fine Quality and Flavor, but it will also please those who want big money's worth because our 10c can is the biggest FIRST QUALITY can at that price. You want one leader in cocoa that will sell to all classes of trade and Hooton's Cocoa is the cocoa that will do it. Write for particulars of our introductory proposition because it means "more business" for you.

Are You Using the Exchange Department?

Increase your sales $3.00 per family—each month

The average expenditure per family for raw milk is 10c. per day or $3.00 per month. Some spend much more. By building up a sale of evaporated milk you can switch that $3.00, or more, per family into your cash drawer. Every time you persuade a customer to use evaporated milk instead of raw milk, you increase your sales by $3.00, or more, per month. You can, of course, most quickly increase the use of evaporated milk by handling the brand that is generally recognized as the best repeater.

CARNATION MILK

is considered the leading brand of evaporated milk. It is clean, sweet and pure and will appeal to your customers—it will be easier for you to switch them from raw milk to evaporated milk—if you offer them Carnation Milk.

Remember that unless you sell a customer the best evaporated milk you put farther away the time when that customer will use evaporated milk instead of raw milk—that you stand in the way of getting that $3.00, or more, per month which now goes to the raw milk dealer—so push Carnation Milk—the leading evaporated milk. Your jobber has it.

AND

DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER

They have been advertised persistently and by every conceivable means for so long a time that the names of these two foremost Baking Powders are as familiar to the housewife as the name of the street in which she lives. Furthermore your customers know from experience the real value and dependability of Royal Baking Powder and Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder which means "steady sales" and "perfect satisfaction."
